This incident cannot be too fully appreciated. A married man that can keep a horse and carriage can afford to keep an automobile. A horse that can travel generally takes a man to handle it, and if the head of the house finds it impossible to go out, the women of the family, although with plenty of leisure time, must forego the pleasure of riding, and wait the leisure of her lord and master.

Now take up the situation in California, where we have a perpetual summer. Think what it means to the better half to always be able to go out into the invigorating air of this ideal climate. Such conditions tend to lengthen life and bring happiness.

To allow a woman to handle the average horse is dangerous, but with the automobile it is not so. The modern car has reached the stage of perfection that the strength of a mere child is sufficient to manipulate it. Simplicity is also one of the main features of a down-to-date machine. Taking all these things into consideration, then think with what safety those dear to us may be trusted to go over the highways and by-ways of the State.

It takes but coolness and thought to run an automobile, and experience teaches us that women have the requisites. It is impossible to tell of the far-reaching benefits it is to mankind. But one thing is appreciated by every owner of the modern chariot. It has done more to brighten home life than the purchase of any other known pleasure. One can recognize this by spending an afternoon at any of the garages. Watch the women who run automobiles and even those who ride with them. The woman who runs an automobile has always a smile on her face, the eye is bright, the complexion healthy, and there is an air of self-confidence that it truly charming. They never look dull or tired out. There is not that listlessness so commonly seen in the average woman of to-day. They are a new creation that has come with the new conveyance. So let every woman that has the chance run an automobile.

The Southern automobilists are considering another "auto" road. Last Wednesday the members of the Southern Club made a trip over the Pacific electric line, eastward of Eastlake Park, with the Supervisors to inspect a piece of road that will furnish the missing link in the highway to Covina. H. E. Huntington has offered to donate the land.

will arrive shortly. This car is being especially built at the factory and is due to arrive here on the 20th inst.

The National Automobile Company delivered to Mr. Paul Osting a two-cylinder Knox touring car, fitted with canopy top.

Mr. Franklin gave an automobile party to sixteen of his friends on Sunday night. The machines used on this occasion were four Winton touring cars, which Mr. Franklin hired from the Scott-Blakeslee Pioneer Renting Company.

The National Automobile Company delivered a Knox runabout to Mr. C. O. Bockx, of Mountain View, in which he left San Francisco for his home on Monday last.

The Mobile Carriage Company expects daily the arrival of a carload of two-cylinder Arrows. One of the Arrows will be especially handsome, being built to order for Mr. H. C. Tilden. The car is painted red with the special slanting hood and canopy top.

The National Automobile Company delivered two Knox touring cars during the past week, one to Mr. A. J. Samuels and the other to Mr. N. E. Neary of the New York Suit and Cloak House.

One of the novelties showing the progress of automobiling will be the railroad inspection car built by the Olds Motor Works, a sample of which is due to arrive here about the 1st of April. This machine is being adopted by a great many Eastern and Southern railroads. They have a seating capacity of four persons. The regular Oldsmobile runabout engine is used in the car, and railroad people in the West will be greatly interested in the arrival of the sample.

During the week past, the National Automobile Company, owing to a disagreement of two of its principal stockholders, asked for and obtained an assignee in the person of Mr. A. C. Kains, of the Canadian Bank of Commerce. He has taken over the management of the business, and will carry it along the same as before.

In a recent letter received from the Olds Motor Works, they state that their factory force has been doubled, and that they are working day and night. The company will turn out forty machines daily this season, and they have already sold their output for the next six months. Orders are piling up with the Pioneer Automobile Company for early delivery of the new-style machines. The Pioneer people will send a man to the factory this week to be on hand there and assist in shipping the machines direct to San Francisco. It is possible that the first few carloads will come through by express.

The George N. Pierce Company report sales through its Fresno branch of twenty-one Stanhopes from July to January, and eighteen Stanhopes since that time. On account of the heavy dust during the greater portion of the year, the Stanhope has proved to be the most serviceable car built in that community.

The Mobile Carriage Company has adopted the New York schedule of garage charges, which is favorable to the owner. This is something, of course, in which all owners take a deep interest. The rates for storage are $20 a month for large touring cars, $18 for lighter touring cars, such as the Auto car, $15 for Cadillacs and Ramblers, and $13 for Runabouts. This service includes cleaning, lubricating oil, acetylene, coal oil for side lamps, together with delivery. This arrangement is meeting the hearty approval of owners, and while the Mobile people are only "settling," their great house is pretty well filled already, as many as four cars coming in each day for storage.

The most popular place in San Francisco at the present time is the Jefferson Square Club, which is located on the second floor of the Pioneer Automobile Company's new building. The attendance at this club far exceeds the expectation of its members, and already steps are being taken to put in more bowling alleys to accommodate the members of the club. The manager of the club has subscribed for all the Eastern and local magazines, and the reading room of the club is one of its best features.

Mr. A. J. Wells and his brother, of Buffalo, New York, who have just run their Winton touring car overland from Los Angeles to San Francisco, will spend the month of March in this city, and are making their headquarters with the Pioneer Automobile Company. Mr. Wells recently wrote a letter from Los Angeles to the Winton agency in Buffalo, where he purchased his machine, reading as follows, viz.: "There has not been an hour since we arrived in California that we have not thanked you for ever suggesting that we change our order and ship a Winton touring car here. Our run each day since it came is forty to sixty miles. We are having the time of our lives. The Winton you sold us runs up and down the hills like a bird, and we are glad you ever suggested a twenty-horsepower machine for us. Some of the hills are immense. It is all the same to us. Imagine country roads like our parkways in Buffalo and no speed limit in the country; warm, sunny days; miles of road with villas and beautiful residences; the dust laid by oil on the roads; thermometer from 68 to 72 degrees through the day, and 40 to 45 at night, and you can then see why we are enjoying our car. I cannot begin to tell you how fine it is to tour in this garden of the Pacific Coast; the only way is to come here and try it yourself. We have been to Pasadena and through the wine cellars; also to Santa Monica, one of the finest sea-bathing resorts in the world. I will be back in April. I intend to come here to spend my winters in the future, and I want to arrange to have a 1904 Winton this coming season."

The Locomobile Company has issued a new catalogue of gasoline cars for 1904. The matter between the covers has been prepared carefully, and the illustrations are of a kind which will help a prospective customer in getting an idea of the details of construction.

The Pacific Motor Company report an unusual demand for St. Louis cars, the 1904 tonneau being the most favored. The Packard four-cylinder car leads in the company's sales for the high-priced vehicles.

Mr. Harry H. Hewlett, of Stockton, spent last Sunday in San Francisco trying out his new 1904 Winton touring car, which arrived here last Saturday. Mr. Hewlett, in a recent conversation with a well-known San Francisco gentleman, said: "I have owned a Winton touring car for two years, and the fact of my purchasing a 1904 car is all that is necessary to say regarding my opinion of the Winton. Will also say further that I do not believe there is another machine built that will do the work of my old Winton. A great many people have the idea that hill-climbing is a test for an automobile. I find that the real test is in San Joaquin Valley sand, and I have never found a place where I could not go with my car.

There is great activity at the big Locomobile factory in Bridgeport. New men are constantly being added to the force which will soon reach its full complement, viz., between six and seven hundred men. All departments are working overtime, and the prospects are for better deliveries this spring than ever before. Many new and improved machines have been added this spring, and some of the departments have undergone not a little alteration. For instance, facilities in the blacksmith shop and drop forge shop have been greatly increased; also several new hardening ovens have been added. Some new grinding machines have recently been received, these being needed for fine work in finishing hardened shafts used in the construction of Locomobile gasolene touring cars.

The following list of names, recent purchasers of Locomobile gasolene touring cars, has been handed to this department. None of these orders was taken at any of the recent automobile shows: A. J. McDuffie, Chicago, Ill.; H. A. Beale, Jr., Parkesburg, West Virginia; C. P. Joy, St. Paul, Minn.; George N. McNeely, Philadelphia, Pa.; Dwight M. Billings, Amherst, Mass.; J. R. Johnson, Philadelphia, Pa.; A. L. Chamberlain, New Haven, Conn.; W. F. Saddler, Philadelphia, Pa.; E. R. Cole, New York, N. Y.; J. P. Baiter, New York, N. Y.; Raymond K. Allbright, Buffalo, N. Y.; William Carroll, Greenwich, Conn.; F. P. Phillips, Chicago, Ill.; C. W. Lee, New York, N. Y.; George Woodland, Chicago, Ill.; A. S. Parks, Wichita, Kansas.

We want a State organization that will be able to control the Legislators at Sacramento in behalf of good roads.

GOOD SUGGESTION FOR SOME AMERICAN MAGAZINE.

A curious periodical is being issued in Belgium, where a Brussels' paper publishes a letter from a Spiritualistic society in Villers-la-Ville, giving particulars of a monthly journal which it has just established, and announcing that it has been found feasible to make arrangements with various great dead writers, including Victor Hugo and Emile Zola, to contribute to its columns. These eminent contributors are not likely to require any very large sums for their articles, and so the price is fixed at two francs per year.

—When you get your fall clothing made, also make arrangements to have it cleaned and pressed regularly at Spaulding's Cleaning and Dyeing Works, 127 Stockton street. It is economy to do it. A suit will last twice as long if well cared for. They also clean gloves, neckties, curtains, laces, draperies and all such articles.

—Few come to San Francisco without paying a visit to Zinkand's, which has done so much to establish our city's reputation as the best restaurant town in the United States. It's the favorite after-the-theatre resort.

Financial Review.

Anglo-Cal. Bank, Ltd. The statement of accounts presented shareholders at the thirty-first ordinary annual meeting of the Anglo-Cal. Bank, Limited, held in London on Tuesday, the 1st inst., shows that after making a full provision for bad and doubtful debts, and allowing for all charges at San Francisco and London, there remains £39,186 7s. od. as the net profit for the year. Adding to this £11,181 19s. 8d. brought forward from last year, the sum of £50,368 6s. 8d. is now available for appropriation. From this amount the directors have applied £10,000 in writing down the bank's holding in consols to 85, and all other investments to below the market value. An interim dividend of six shillings per share was paid in September last, and the directors now propose to pay a further dividend of six shillings per share, together with a bonus of four shillings per share, making the total distribution eight per cent for the year 1903, free of income tax; to place £5,000 to reserve fund, making it £160,000; and to carry forward £11,392 6s. 8d. The resignation of Mr. E. H. Lushington, owing to advanced age, after having been a director of the bank since 1814, was received with much regret. The Rt. Hon. Charles T. Richie, M. P., has been appointed to fill the vacancy thus caused.

Anarchy in Tuolumne County. It does not make pleasant reading, the reports which come along by wire from Tuolumne County, where an alien host have inaugurated a reign of terror in and around Jamestown, and are apparently running things to suit themselves in the most high-handed manner. Among other things, a despatch just received says they have so frightened the men of the press in Jamestown that all news of the strikers' actions is suppressed. This is certainly a nice condition of affairs in an American community. Even an injunction from a United States court is scoffed at by these foreign rioters. It will be hoped that the Rawhide strike will fail and that like all other outbreaks of a similar nature which have taken place recently the rioters will make nothing by their lawless methods. They had to call the strike off at the Royal Cons. mine at Hodson, and none of the strikers there have been taken back. It is the same story at the Mountain Copper mine of Shasta County, the Yellow Aster mine of Kern County, and the Union mine of El Dorado County. Every now and then a union scores a trick by buncoing some weak-kneed management, but their successes even then have been few and far between. Some day the United States troops may be called upon to end a riotous demonstration like that now going on at the Rawhide mine, and after that peace-abiding citizens of the State will not be annoyed with such disgraceful exhibitions for a long time to come.

Where the Law Stings. George W. Rumble is still smiling at the Government prosecutors outside the bars they are trying to place him behind, and a number of prominent citizens, including Chief of Police Wittman, are now making affidavits in proof of statements that the wily operator's reputation for honesty and integrity is away below par. And still the farce goes on, and the courts are kept in action to support one set of lawyers pitted against the other, making hay while the sun shines, both sides interested in prolonging the agony while the fees last. There is one good feature about this, a term of imprisonment would not be as severe a form of punishment for one of these fake manipulators as to touch his pocket. That is the vulnerable spot in the make-up of individuals of this class who are generally a miserable set, small and mean in their dealings and of a miserly disposition. Every dollar wrenched from them to keep them out of jail means agony, and perhaps the best justice they can get in this world and that well-fitted for their crime is the prolongation of court proceedings, which are costly in the extreme.

The Senate has passed Teller's bill amending the mining laws as regards the location of claims. It is provided that the description of a vein or lode claims upon surveyed lands shall be designated with reference to the lines of the public survey, but need not conform therewith. Where patents have been issued for claims upon unsurveyed lands, however, the Surveyor General, in extending the public survey, shall adjust their survey to the boundaries of claims, so as not to interfere with or change the true location of claims, as they are officially established by ground monuments. Upon a patent grant is based the highest constituted authority as to the limits on the claim and not the public survey. The bill is intended to prevent the shifting of mining claims by surveys.

Pine-St. Market. Business during the week was rather quiet in the market for Comstock shares, but prices have remained steady. This condition of affairs will probably continue until the programme outlined for the furtherance of development work along the lode is still further advanced. That is to say, it will be a matter of fluctuation on a more limited range than can naturally be expected after the lower levels are opened up and the search for ore begins in earnest. Some interesting work is outlined for the Sutro Tunnel improvements in view of an arrangement just concluded which will bring this big utility more to the front than it ever has been before as an aid to mines in active operation along its entire length. The Ward shaft will also be utilized in connection with the new system of work, and a pumping plant will likely be installed there to drain the south end mines. The 2150 level of Con.-Cal.-Virginia will be a point of interest at the north end as soon as work begins there, as it is firmly believed that the downward extension of the ore vein now producing so well in the Ophir, will be found there. If it is there will be some music on the street.

Local Securities. During the past week business on the local stock and bond exchange has been light, in bonds, with a little better demand for shares. Prices show a little improvement in some cases, and San Francisco Gas and Electric got an upward turn or two of the manipulator's screw. This followed a tie-up in the Board of Supervisors which is not the interesting part of the developments which constitute the aftermath of this great coup of the half century in the financial history of the city. Sugar shares continue to gain strength and prices for the week show a general advance. The Alaska Packers stock also shows a small gain which is satisfactory. The Giant Powder

Company, which still ranks as an independent company, paid its regular monthly dividend of 50 cents per share on the 10th inst., and on the same date the California Wine Association paid 60 cents per share. On the 9th inst. the Western Pacific Land Company paid a dividend of $2.50 per share.

It has been charged that the business men of this city were not inclined to encourage mining. This is a serious charge if true.

We have just received the prospectus of the Little Bully Hill Mining and Smelting Company, owners of the Little Bully Hill group of mines in Shasta County. Under the supervision of Mr. R. C. Wilson a 200 foot shaft is being sunk on the property, and Mr. Wilson promises to ship ore in six months. The property is most favorably situated, as it joins Captain De La Mar's ten million dollar mine and smelter. San Francisco business men, the Redding Investment Company, Starr King Building, purchased the property and formed the company to develop it. It was decided to sell 40,000 shares of treasury stock to defray expense of development. Among the first purchasers were: C. E. Anderson, H. L. Paddock, Dr. Byron W. Haines, R. T. Harding, W. B. Ames, M. H. Rude, W. F. Ryder and M. Aronsohn, all business and professional men of this city. We understand that only 5,000 shares remain unsold. Verily this does not look as if our business men are indifferent to the mining interests of the State if shown that the investment is safe and profitable.

The La Zacualpa Rubber Plantation Company has announced that no more shares will be sold after May 1, 1904. The success which the company has made is gratifying to the public, as well as its stockholders. It is not often that enterprises of such magnitude are enabled to withhold its stock for its own benefit. Those who have purchased stock or who may become stockholders are to be congratulated.

There is a decided move in local Democratic quarters towards ex-President Grover Cleveland. No one dares to announce it on the surface, and even in the inner circles of the Iroquois Club it is a thing not to be too loudly mentioned, for the reason that on the surface the delegation from this State must pretend for the moment to favor Hearst, so at least the wise ones think. But while they pretend to favor Hearst they are really coming to favor Cleveland. There is no question that the death of Hanna has immeasurably strengthened the ex-President's chances for a fourth nomination. Whether the story told that Hanna promised John Pierpont Morgan that he would not withdraw from the Republican candidacy is true or not, it is of course impossible to say, but there is no question but that the financial interests of the country favor some other man than Roosevelt on the ground that he is "unsafe." Not unsafe as the public takes it, because of any foreign complications he may get the country mixed up with, but because he has already done much to unsettle business interests, and is not the conservative and quiet man whom the financial interests of the country want to see at the helm of affairs. If Cleveland is nominated, undoubtedly the Democrats will have all the money they can possibly use for campaign purposes, and equally certain there will be no great amount in the pot if the Republicans nominate Roosevelt. Only on one condition, a leading local financier tells me, would Eastern business interests contribute to the Republican funds, and that is in the eventuality that Hearst should be nominated. The business interests of the country would then feel that it was another case of 1896, and that all other considerations must be thrown aside to save the welfare of the country. While Cleveland's letter in the Saturday Post does not seem to have evoked much enthusiasm, his letter, which was read in the House of Representatives last week, in which he denied having ever invited a colored man to dinner, has been received by the local Democracy with enthusiasm, and one prominent Iroquois brave told me that he considered it the greatest political document that had appeared in five years.

Pardee has once more shown his dislike of Gage, and the latter's friends, by turning down Grove L. Johnson, of Sacramento, who has been superseded on the State Board of Agriculture by George W. Kingsley, the genial proprietor of the Lick House. Johnson represented Gage and his administration in the Assembly two years as completely as Lodge does Roosevelt in the Senate, and Gage in many ways showed his admiration and confidence in his Sacramento friend. It probably means that the administration will not allow Johnson to get the Secretaryship of the State Agricultural Society, and that it will do what it can to prevent his nomination for the Assembly this fall. Should Johnson be left out of the next Assembly, one of the most picturesque and important figures in many recent sessions will be missing.

Guy Barham, Bank Commissioner, announces that he does not care to continue in his office, as it interferes with his full enjoyment of domestic bliss, and when his term expires he will not seek re-appointment. Cal. Ewing, of erstwhile baseball fame, is to have his place, and a new Secretary of the Bank Commission is to be appointed, though just which Oaklander is slated for the place I have not heard. Barham was forced upon Pardee, and is also one of the Gage appointments whom he will shed no tears over. When the old Bank Commission was abolished to get rid of Colonel Dan Kevane, the friends of Barham and Wright would not agree to vote for the bill unless it was distinctly understood that everybody except Kevane would be re-appointed on the new Commission. As the Governor was very anxious to stick a knife in his predecessor, he rightly concluded that to turn down Kevane would be particularly offensive to Gage, he agreed to the terms. Wright died, however, before he could be re-appointed, and Barham was the only one that Pardee was forced to appoint. Now he gets rid of Guy, gives Oakland another job, and strengthens his fences in Alameda, where he evidently thinks them very weak.

Cal. Ewing is not the only Oaklander slated for a good place. Senator Perkins, who is as faithful to Alameda County as Governor Pardee, announces that he will support Collector of the Port Stratton for the new Federal Judgeship which Congress is expected to create this spring.

* * *

It is understood that when Stratton gets the Judgeship, W. B. Hamilton, who managed Perkins's first campaign, and who has grown stout on the profits of his labor on that occasion, will be appointed Collector unless George Hatton wants the place, in which case he is to get in. But George hopes to have another Senator under his control by that time, and if he does he will no doubt want something more elaborate than Collector—Ambassador to England, perhaps.

* * *

Speaking of Senators reminds me that while Senator Rowell of Fresno has come out in his son's paper for a re-election of Bard, he only does it to save his face. Having discovered Bard, and elected him, Rowell, Flint and Bulla naturally think they must pretend to advocate his re-election. The facts are that Flint wants the Senatorship himself if he can get it. Bulla was a candidate at the time Bard was elected, and Rowell would like to be now, but he has been advised that there is no chance for himself, and has been urged to stand for Flint. The result of the elections in Los Angeles (the primaries) will decide if Flint shall be a candidate. If Bulla and his friends win out, Flint will be a candidate; otherwise he will not be. If he decides to be a candidate, he will try to go as delegate at large to the National Convention.

LOST LOVE.

By Phoebe Lyde in Cosmopolitan

If I had known how long the way
 Through all the weary years
 Without the sunshine of your smile,
 Without your balm of tears;
 If I had guessed how deep the need
 My thirsty soul would know
 To taste the watersprings of love,
 I had not let you go.

Across life's arid, dusty waste,
 A desert of regret,
 Bright with unconquerable joy
 Your blue eyes beckon yet;
 Again with careless grace you fleet,
 To fade behind the hill;
 The echo of your laugh rings clear—
 That laugh so long since still.

The clamor of the roaring world
 Fills up my struggling days,
 But deep within my inmost heart
 This gracious vision stays,
 And with the loneliness of night
 In solitude I weep
 That early love so lightly lost,
 The dream I did not keep.

THE YOUNG MOTHER.

By Lizette Woodworth Reese in Smart Set

The Host lifts high the candle-light—
 Out in the dark she waits before—
 "Now who is this at mid of night, Comes faring to my door?"

With rushes is the chamber set;
 The house is sweet without, within;
 For it may be she will forget
 The place where she hath been.

But lonely, lonely in the room,
 With strange eyes looks she all about;
 She sees the broken boughs in bloom,
 The red wine poured out.

They crowd around her where she stands,
 The children and the elders there;
 They put the cup within her hands;
 They break the loaf so fair.

Oh, what to her that they are kind!
 Oh, let the tears come like a tide!
 She cannot keep from out her mind
 The son for whom she died!

I KNOW NOT HOW TO FIND THE SPRING.

By Florence Earle Coates in Scribner's Magazine

I know not how to find the Spring,
 Though violets are here,
 And in the boughs high over me
 The birds are fluting clear;
 The magic and the melody,
 The rapture—all are fled,
 And could they wake, they would but break
 My heart, now you are dead.

SUNBEAMS

(Stolen from Thieves)

Doctor—Your husband needs a rest. He must go to Europe for six months. Mrs. Nagget—Oh, I shall be delighted to go there. Doctor—Good idea! You may go for six months when he gets back. That will give him a whole year's rest.

A doctor was summoned to attend the miller's little boy. He wrote out a prescription, which was promptly made up and administered in due form. The next day he called again to see his patient, and found the whole family in tears. "Alas!" said the mother, "I shouldn't have thought that my poor child would have died of the measles." "What!" exclaimed the doctor. "He had the measles, and you never told me?"

Mr. Goodley—How's your father, Freddie. Freddie—Oh, having his usual luck. Just as he was coming out of the fever the doctor says he's getting convalescent.

The woman was doing her shopping. The counter-jumper handed her a package and she slowly turned away. "Do I need anything else?" she absent-mindedly asked. "You have just bought some lawn," ventured the clerk. "Don't you think you will need some hose?"

Mrs. Newliwed—Now, Bridget, I want you to get right down to work. If you can reach my standard of cooking everything will be all right. New Servant (ambiguously)—Yes, ma'am, Oi'll try to get down to it, ma'am.

Mistress—Didn't the ladies who called leave cards? Maid—They wanted to, ma'am, but I told 'em yez had plenty of your own and better ones, too.

"What are you plunging back in the water for, Pat? You just swam ashore." "Sure, Oi had to save meself first; now I'm goin' back to fetch Moike."

Major Lacey, of Iowa, and Senator Alger, of Michigan, are very much alike in appearance, and are often mistaken for each other. So striking is the resemblance that Speaker Reed made it the subject for one of his witticisms. It was at the time that Alger's conduct as Secretary of War was being investigated that Reed, stepping up to the member from Iowa, and putting his arm over his shoulder, said: "Lacey, you look so much like Secretary Alger that I always think, when I see you, that you ought to get whitewashed."

"His environment inclines him to reticence." "You think so?" "I am positive. He lives with his wife and her mother."

Professor Phelps, who disliked mathematics, was once walking with Professor Newton, who began discussing a problem so deep that his companion could not follow it. He fell into a brown study from which he was aroused by Newton's emphatic assertion, "and that, you see, gives us x!" "Does it?" asked Mr. Phelps, politely. "Why, doesn't it?" exclaimed the professor, excitedly, alarmed at the possibility of a flaw in his calculations. Quickly his mind ran back and detected a mistake. "You are right, Mr. Phelps. You are right!" shouted the professor; "it doesn't give us x; it gives us y." And from that time Professor Phelps was looked upon as a mathematical prodigy, the first man who ever tripped Newton.

James Shea, a popular young lawyer of Washington, D. C., who recently had as a client a negro who was accused of stealing chickens. Things were going in the darkey's favor, until he was placed on the stand. "Are you the defendant in this case?" asked the judge. "No, sir," replied the negro with an amazed look on his face, and pointing to his counsel; "Ise the gen-leman that stole the chickens; there's the defendant."

One of Benjamin Franklin Stevens's relatives, Uncle Sol, had the habit of extemporary prayer, in which, however, he was more persistent than fluent. When his inspiration became too great for words he would tide over the difficulty with such interjections as: "Understand, O Lord? Understand? Take my idee, d' ye? Take my idee?"

Tramp—I'd like to borry a medical almanac, mum. Housekeeper—What for? Tramp—I wants ter see wot th' doctors recommend fer an empty feelin' in th' stummick.

Visitor—How did you ever get into the habit of eating glass? Museum Attraction—Oh, it's all because once when I was run down my doctor told me I must eat more solid food.

Make the best of the troubles you have and don't hunt for more.

Get up with the lark, but don't disturb other people with your larking.

"I wonder," said the plump young woman, preparing to venture out upon the frozen surface of the park lagoon, "if the ice is safe?" "You needn't be the least bit afraid as to that," Mr. Makinbrakes hastened to assure her. "I am certain it will hold you. When I was here yesterday I saw the boys chasing a runaway steer all over it. The animal must have weighed 1800 pounds. Of course," he added, nervously, "I don't mean that you—that the steer, mightn't have broken through if it had been on skates, but still—well, anyhow, there can't be any harm in trying, because I see other girls out there that are even more—er—do the skates fit you all right, Miss Biglow?"

"We'll have to make an effort to get the Sultan to pay for his new battleship this month," said the treasurer of the shipbuilding company. "What's the hurry?" inquired the President. "Well, Easter's coming and we want to get our money before the milliner's bill is presented."

"I see you're wearing my old engagement ring?" "Yes; isn't it perfectly lovely to be engaged to Jack?" "Yes, indeed. He's so deliciously serious about it, isn't he?"

Mrs. Muggins—Does your husband ever forget to mail the letters you give him? Mrs. Buggins—No; I always see to it that he puts them in his cigar case.

"Great activity in Idunno mining stock to-day." You don't say so!" "Ye-ah. Bill Sykes took forty thousand shares and eight dollars cash for that horse he was asking twenty dollars for yesterday." "Well, he made eight dollars on the deal, anyhow."

"I didn't know until to-day," said young Mrs. Torkins, "that Charley was taking an interest in palmistry. "Indeed?" responded the caller. "Yes. And he has put his heart into it, just as he does into anything he undertakes. He was as indignant as he could be because he met a man last night who had a better hand than his."

During the siege of Mafeking one of the officers organized a concert or "sing-song," to keep up the spirits of the men. He discovered, according to the story as it is told in "V. C.," that the men had cause enough for low spirits. Hearing of a sergeant in the Highlanders who was a good performer, he asked the man to contribute to the concert. "I am sorry, sir, but I cannot." "Why?" asked the officer; "you play some instrument, don't you?" "I did, sir." "What was it?" "The bones, sir; but I've eaten 'em."

"Your husband says that he has been working like a dog," said the next door neighbor. "Does he?" rejoined the woman with the dingy gown and the tired look. "The only canines I ever got acquainted with put in their time barking at nothing, racing around without any especial object in view and sleeping about two-thirds of the time in a nice warm corner close to the stove. It's a rather unfortunate comparison."

Gibbs' Transformation

In the alleys and by-ways of the big office buildings a little boy romped and played. A pretty picture he made, with his bright little face and bare feet, as he bobbed here and there and scampered about with all the freedom of the woods or beach. He had known no other playground than these marts of trade and he hummed contentedly as he drew his tin horse along or bounced his ball on the steps of the Stock Exchange.

Jeason Gibbs was a stern old capitalist. He had journeyed to the city with the object of inspecting certain enterprises with which he was connected, and had taken an office in the busy quarter where the boy was wont to play. He was a man who noticed things, and the sight of a small boy romping in a spot assigned to commerce disturbed his sense of fitness. Who was the boy? Why was this allowed? Those questioned did not know. They guessed he was all right, lived in the neighborhood, no doubt. He always palyed around and never bothered any one. Queer place for him to play? Maybe.

At length the old financier grew accustomed to the sight; in fact, so much so that he felt annoyed one morning because the lad was absent from the place. Next day he watched for him and emitted an approving grunt. The "kid" was romping in the usual way.

After that he looked for him each day. Sometimes the boy would be tardy in arriving, and the old man, punctual himself, would look displeased. Once or twice the child was absent a whole day; then the old fellow grew nervous as a woman. He had never cared for children, but this boy, so well-behaved and clean, happy and self-possessed, playing his own games and going his own way amid these busy men, filled him with an interest he could not explain. At fifty-five a grim old bachelor, close-fisted and aggressive, Gibbs paused in his financial dreams to follow a boy—a bright-faced boy with bare feet—who bewitched him. More than once he pulled himself together. Humph! he would not believe that he, Gibbs, had grown sentimental.

Still the old man rather enjoyed the sensation of taking an interest in some one. He longed to approach the youngster—to have a chat with him. But he was bashful—this veteran of finance who in all his life had never spoken to a child—and long he pondered as to the best method of becoming acquainted with the lad. He, Gibbs, was such an uncouth object in appearance. He wore a shaggy beard, was slovenly in his attire, had a sour expression and was abrupt of manner. Altogether he admitted that his individuality was scarcely calculated to impress a child, but was cheered by the reflection that tops, and balls, and candy were influential articles in winning favor with a boy. It would be advisable, no doubt, to go a little slow in the beginning. He would first present him with an apple or an orange. "Sonny, here's an apple," he would say. Then he started outright; the word "Sonny" frightened him; he had never said it to a child, and in his mouth it sounded out of place. The next moment he felt ashamed of his timidity. Yet here another feature rose to worry him. What would men say, other men, when they saw him, "Surly Gibbs," (that was his sobriquet) fraternizing with a "kid?" Great Scott! His ears tingled at the thought. However, he practiced saying "Sonny, have an apple?" to such good effect that he greeted a dignified acquaintance on a certain day with, "Sonny, have an apple," while he tendered a cigar.

A day arrived when he decided he would break the ice. It was Saturday and the offices closed early. He purchased some chocolates from a druggist, and going into an alley laid in wait. Comparatively few people were about, and Jeason's heart beat wildly when he noticed the boy coming his way. The child had for plaything a big, red rooster on wheels. By means of a cord he drew his wooden bird along.

The man concealed himself behind a post. The boy came on.

The man grew nervous. What should he say? The boy was passing. His chance would be lost.

"C-o-c-k-a-doo-dle-doo!" came in agitated tones.

The boy started, dropped his cord and looked inquiringly at the rooster. Then he raised his eyes and spied the man behind the post—a shamefaced man. The lad regarded him with wonder, then a merry laugh escaped him. "O rooster-man!" he cried.

Old Gibbs emerged from his concealment and glanced stealthily about.

"You're a funny man," laughed the boy.

"Do that again."

Gibbs drew himself up. George! He was in for it. A broker's clerk stepped by, a negro porter crossed the alley.

"Go on, let me see how you do it," persisted the boy. And the solemn old man crowed again, discreetly and softly, while a calm joy pervaded his being. But he kept his wits about him. He noticed three men coming down the street who would laugh if they saw him. "Good afternoon," said he, stiffly, to the boy; then beat a hasty retreat.

Well, he had done it. Good Lord, what an ass he had been. Still he did not regret it. What a fine little chap! He had forgotten the chocolates, which, later he found stuck to his pocket.

Next day he went to his office in some trepidation, fearing the lad might request in public a repetition of the performance, and was relieved when the boy merely flashed back a smile in response to his half-hearted greeting. He cornered Gibbs, however, later in the day and made him crow behind a pillar.

They soon understood each other. The boy came to regard the old man as his friend and divined that he objected to talk in public. They met in by-ways and corners, exchanging the fewest of words, and the old man crowed (ever so softly) and passed over candies and tops, then sneaked away, ashamed but delighted.

Important business called him out of town for several days. He thought of the boy while away, and on his return looked eagerly for him, but the lad was nowhere to be seen. One day passed, then another. Gibbs grew uneasy; he would make inquiry, find out where he lived. The boy had told him, but Gibbs could not recall the address. He was even ignorant of his name beyond that it was "Johnnie."

His agent called. "I just came to learn your instructions, sir, regarding those delinquent tenants up at the North End—you will remember the other day—"

"Delinquent tenants!" Old Gibbs was himself again. "Drat them! Out with them, I say! I am tired of being imposed on."

"Yes, sir," the agent simpered, "but these are good people, Mr. Gibbs, good, honest people, sir, and with your permission I was going to say—now there's that Mrs. Sparrow, for example. A better lady never lived, and she's seen better days. Well, sir, her little boy took sick, poor little chap!—you may have seen him playing around. It was sad for the poor woman—took away her rent money—and, well—now, little Johnnie—"

Gibbs rose from his seat. His face had whitened, and he trembled.

A woman tapped at the door. She was dressed in black. Although evidently poor, her air bespoke refinement. Her face wore a troubled look. She inquired for Mr. Gibbs and bowed to the agent as she entered.

"I came to tell you, sir," she said, looking Gibbs searchingly in the face, "that the rent will be paid. I only just learned your name—you see, I have been accustomed to deal with Mr. Douglas," with a glance toward the agent.

There was a boy's step on the floor. The woman turned. "Son, I told you to wait."

"Cock-a-doodle-doo!" shrieked the boy in delight, as he ran to the man. He looked a trifle pale, but beyond that displayed no sign of sickness.

Old Gibbs sent forth a crow that resounded through the building. The agent jumped and the boy's mother nearly fainted, while the grasping landlord, the hardened money-king, hugged the little lad and took him on his knee.—Herbert R. Rayner, in The Criterion.

No wonder Lunstedt's extremities became frigid. Sitting desolately among the ruins of his character he saw himself pilloried. No wonder.

A WEAK JUDICIAL SYSTEM.

Municipal reform that leaves the judiciary untouched and uncleansed, is reform without improvement—and that is the only kind of reform San Francisco has had. Practically nothing has been done in twenty years to drive the boodlers and grafters out of the police courts; nothing has been done to purify or elevate the bench in this department of our judicial system; nothing has been done to relieve it of the taint of politics in its worst form. The net result is that to-day we have in our Hall of Justice—Heaven save the mark!—a coterie of self-seekers, wearing the honorable title of Police Judge, clothed with high authority over the persons and property of our people—men for the most part of neither learning nor honor, of low personal and lower political associations. These ministers of the law dispense justice as if it were their personal property. From the moment of election their chief business is to campaign steadily for renomination and re-election. It is notorious that in the police courts of San Francisco the man with a "pull" has a hundred-to-one chance against the man who is supported by merely the law and the facts; it is notorious that to get a warrant against a friend or a henchman of a political leader, or a labor leader, is almost impossible, unless the offense be murder, and that to try to get a conviction for any offense is plain foolishness. Yearly, with more laws and more people and more policemen the number of arrests is growing, and yearly the fines imposed and collected show a relative decrease in number and amount. Ordinance after ordinance is enacted to increase the standard of public decency and to perfect the safeguards that organized society guarantees to its members—ordinance after ordinance becomes a law and then speedily a dead letter. A police system which is none too good and yet infinitely better than the police courts, whose process it executes, complains that it cannot keep on endlessly arresting law-breakers only to have them released without punishment by judges who administer not the law as they find it but the law as they like it or like it not. And that there is merit in this contention no one will deny.

The defense of the police judges, aside from denials, which are of no value, is that their terms are too short and their salaries too small—that they are compelled by the pressure of personal necessity to "look out for themselves." This is their excuse for the fact that they, or most of them, hold court only two or three hours a day, four or five days a week. Presumably they would make the same plea if it were alleged—and it is the cold truth—that more than half the time which belongs to the public is spent by some of them at the racetrack, in saloons and in associating intimately with men and women of the classes on which they are called to pass judgment. It would be their excuse if they were brought to book for running their courts not to uphold the law, but to insure renomination for themselves and to win votes. As defense, plea or excuse, it is about as valid as it would be for a thieving cashier to say that he stole because he was underpaid. Some movement is now afloat, presented by the Grand Jury and backed by individuals and organizations genuinely interested in civic betterment, to take the police courts out of direct participation in politics by making positions on that bench appointive and not elective. Though we are experiencing just now some of the unpleasant effects of power highly centralized in the hands of the Mayor, it is to be considered that we could hardly have a worse chief executive than Schmitz, and that even Schmitz would hesitate to stand for the weak justices who make a mockery of police court justice. It would be hard to devise a system less satisfactory than that which now obtains.

UNIONISM AS SHE IS PRACTICED.

We have recently had two very graphic illustrations of what unionism means in this town under its present management and what it would mean if Dictator Cornelius could have his way and all employers were done away with and business was managed by Trade Councils. Two respectable citizens have been assaulted by the employees while peaceably riding on the street cars, and after being villified, called liars and otherwise abused verbally, the one, an assistant professor at the State University, had his jaw broken, and the other, the City Coroner, was knocked off the car by the brute who officiated as motorman. If this thing continues, the patrons of the street car company will soon have to form a union to protect themselves from brutal assaults on the part of the employees. Before Mr. Cornelius began to work his graft by which he has secured a percentage of the wages of his dupes for keeping them embroiled with their employers and manipulating them for the political purposes of his master, Hearst and his lieutenant Livernash, the employees on the street cars of San Francisco were polite and gentlemanly, and the impolite man, motorman or conductor, was the exception; now the exception is all the other way, and is confined, as a rule, to the old employees, who have not become so thoroughly inoculated with the anarchical virus which Cornelius distills and injects in them as those who have always been under his control. No doubt Cornelius approves of these assaults, and if the company removes the men, this dictator will call a strike until they are reinstated; no doubt he will bring all the political pressure he can to prevent their being punished, and will at the same time insist that union men are the most orderly, law-abiding citizens in the community, and that non-union men and the Government should be turned over to them to handle as they see fit. It is time, however, that a halt should be called on these satellites of the Welsh anarchist, and if they are not severely punished, it will not be long before women and children will suffer the same conduct. Send a few of them across the bay for their brutality, and it will soon stop.

ICH UND GOTT!

The relations between Mayor Schmitz and the Supervisors are such as fully to verify the prediction made by the News Letter a few weeks after the new administration came into office. Less than three months have elapsed and already he is exhibiting the high-handed indifference to what the public needs and what it demands that was to have been expected and was clearly foreshadowed. The Schmitz of last year talked loud and long about "good government" and the progress of the city with the helm in Union Labor hands. The Schmitz of this year is the real Schmitz, flouting the public, hectoring and threatening those Supervisors whom he cannot club into line. The Schmitz whom we see now with the mask off controls all the commissions, and so has a basis for his arrogance. All that stands between him and absolute authority over the city is a decent majority, which refuses to be cajoled or brow-beaten into swallowing a programme of plunder. The town is wide open for everybody who will stand in with the Schmitz party which makes and breaks policemen as it pleases and runs overnight saloonkeepers who will not turn their bars into agencies for the shady business of the administration. Unfortunately there are two saloonkeepers in the Board of Supervisors, and by the vote of one of these, confessedly controlled through fear of a revoked license, Schmitz has just votes enough in the Board to keep his vetoes from being overridden.

Of the controversy over the quarry and rock crusher in the Fairmount district, which has brought the Mayor and the majority to open warfare, it is not necessary to speak at this time; our concern is with the threat of the Mayor made during this contention that Supervisors who "insult" him by opposing his will and questioning his motives must "bear the consequences." What consequences, pray? Does his Dishonor, the Mayor, mean personal violence? Does he mean that his opponents in the Board are to be villified by the means of publicity which he commands? He cannot dismiss them from office, nor is there any law under which he can punish them for doing their duty. What, then, are the "consequences?"

The scene on Monday last in the chambers of the Supervisors when Supervisor Brandenstein, himself a man independent of the Mayor, politically and commercially unafraid of his threat, whether he meant recourse to the law, to vilification or to thugism, replied, in the name of the people, to the bully and blusterer in the chair, was most significant. We are a patient people and long-suffering. We have borne much from Schmitz, and, like enough, we shall bear much more, but Mr. Brandenstein's warning was not idle talk. There is a limit beyond which Schmitz must not go. It was well that this limit should be pointed out by a man of induence and position, speaking with calmness and deliberation. He did not put the facts too strongly. Under a regime of Schmitzism, with the bridle off, the conditions are rapidly reaching a point where the most apathetic community cannot fail to take notice of them and so free itself from the burden imposed by its own folly. Once the tide of public opinion sets the other way and Schmitz will find that his house has jerry-built foundations. The people may put a man up, but they also may pull him down.

THE IMPOSSIBLE HEARST.

"The unspeakable candidate" is what many Eastern newspapers, Democratic and Republican, unite in calling Hearst. In one way and another these journals are performing a service for the nation, as necessary and as unpleasant as the function of the night carts in communities without sewer systems. Among them they are letting the daylight into a campaign for the Presidency that would be unique if it were not so disgustingly indecent and into a character and personality which pass the limit of public and private unworth. We doubt if Hearst will get within gunshot of the nomination at St. Louis. We are certain that if he should be nominated he will be defeated at the polls, and further, that he will have been so clearly held up to public view for all that he is which a man ought not to be, and for all that he is not which a man ought to be, as to make any one ashamed of having taken him seriously as a Presidential possibility.

In San Francisco Hearst has opened headquarters where the Tarpey family descants upon his virtues and makes promise and payment to the doubters. The first manifesto is a circular letter, signed by the chief of the Tarpeys, begging support for Hearst as "the first native of California ever seriously considered for the Presidency," telling what he has done with "press, pen and purse" for the Democracy and urging as an "all-patent reason" for his nomination the "fact that he will receive a larger popular vote than would all the others spoken of for the office, were the strength of all of them aggregated." Now this may seem absurd and even nauseous, but it is mild and modest compared with what Hearst hires people to say about him elsewhere, and what he will doubtless say of himself here when his praise-factory is in good running order. At the East he has revealed in printed glorification of himself as a young man of vast personal achievement, a better writer than any in his hire, a brilliant speaker, a wise statesman, a powerful debater, a man rejoicing in the strength won in an athletic youth and a temperate manhood. For the facts about Hearst in Congress we may go to the official journal of that body, which shows that thus far he has occupied his seat three times and spoken from it once. For information as to the exercises which he favored in his "athletic youth" there is yet to be published a veracious account of his life and associations in his Sausalito cottage, and for the pursuits of his "temperate manhood" we await a detailed chronicling of his association with the "Sassafra sisters" and others of their stripe in New York.

Doubtless the Eastern press which has dubbed Hearst "the unspeakable candidate" will have considerable to say about him between now and the assembling of the St. Louis convention, and we shall not be surprised if some of the accounts of him are strikingly illustrated by Davenport, the cartoonist whom Hearst once delighted to honor, but now pursues with furious malignity. Hearst for years was so bold and so contemptuous of public opinion in defying the laws and rules of honest, decent living that the record of his misdoings is not obscure. Those who believe that his nomination would be a calamity to the Democratic party and his election a disgrace and dishonor to the nation should have no difficulty in finding evidence of his utter unfitness.

OHIO AND LOUISIANA.

In view of the fact that an Ohio community is making a partly successful attempt at incinerating of a large colored population, it is an interesting story that comes from New Orleans of the appearance in Judge King's court of Samuel Hooper, an aged negro, to conduct his own case. It related to his home. A city board wanting the property for public purposes had offered him $315 for it. He contended that it was worth at least $700. The board entered a suit to expropriate the property. Hooper conducted his own case, examined witnesses, and made an argument in his own behalf. The board was represented by able counsel. Hooper was offered assistance gratis by members of the bar, but he declined it politely, saying that the white folks who composed the jury would do "nuthin' 'ceptin' what's squar'" by him. His confidence was justified, for he won the case. A New Orleans newspaper thinks there is something strikingly beautiful about this old black man's confidence in the justice of his white neighbors, and regards the incident as proof that the deserving negro at the South can always get absolute and impartial justice at the hands of his white neighbors.

SPECIAL PRIVILEGES FOR CHINATOWN.

Why should Chinamen be allowed to violate the ordinances of the city with impunity and the taxpayers of the city and State be forced to spend money and risk their lives and health because it pleases the Celestials to be dirty and unsanitary? The ordinances of San Francisco provide that every property-holder shall keep his property clean and healthy; they provide for sanitary plumbing, for the removal of filth of all kinds and for the closing up of cesspools and unhealthy places. In Chinatown the most filthy and unhealthy conditions are allowed to exist in plain view of every passer-by, and when any cleaning is done it is not the owners who do it but the State. We know, of course, that the cleaning is done under the specious pretense that it is to prevent bubonic plague, but with equal justice the premises of white people could be cleaned by the State on the theory that the cleansing was to prevent typhoid fever or some other similar disease. This State, under several recent administrations has spent nearly half a million dollars cleaning private property in this city, and the city has spent thousands of dollars more, yet to-day the whole neighborhood smells like an operating room, and is filthy and disgusting on every corner. Daily it is sprinkled with lime, and daily it is cleaned by white labor at enormous expense, only to return to its former filthy condition as soon as the cleaners pass by. The Chinese make no effort to keep their quarters clean, and the owners of the property never trouble themselves about the matter, because why should they? The State is paying for the cleaning, and they are drawing down immense rents for the property which no white man would live in.

Only a few days ago the Health Board ordered a cheap lodging house to be cleaned, threw all the furniture out of the windows and destroyed it, and ordered the building torn down. No doubt it did wisely, but why not apply the same rule to the cleaning of Chinatown? Did the taxpayers of the State pay for the cleaning out of the lodging-house? Do they pay when any white man is found allowing filth to accumulate on his premises? No. The offender is arrested, hauled into court and fined. But the Chinese are never arrested, and the wealthy owners of Chinatown are never asked to contribute anything to keeping their property in proper condition.

Evidently there is some mysterious reason for this condition of things. Is there a "graft" somewhere? Are the Health Board afraid to bring the Chinatown owners to time as they do those who rent to white tenants? White tenants are, as a rule, poor; the Chinese tenants are rich though filthy, and it is well known that the Chinese are forever trying, and unfortunately very often succeeding, in bribing police, courts, etc., in their efforts to evade the law. The owners of the property should be made to clean and keep clean their property, and they would soon force their tenants to keep clean if they had to pay the bills for the cleaning. This crying disgrace and shame and danger to San Francisco will never disappear as long as the present system of State and municipal cleaning prevails. It makes too many jobs; it is too easy on the parties interested, but it is a severe load on the taxpayers which they should not and will not stand. The Board of Supervisors should refuse to spend any more money cleaning Chinatown. The Mayor, if he is as honest and economical as he claims to be, should veto any appropriations for the cleaning of Chinatown, especially as it is whispered that he dare not act because his friends and associates are interested in Chinatown property. The State Board of Health and the Governor should insist on the Chinese keeping clean as they do upon cleanliness with the whites. Under Governor Gage the Chinese fund was largely expended in keeping up an army of incompetents and hangers-on. Does that graft still continue? If not, why does Governor Pardee continue this wastefulness? The people will demand of the next Legislature to investigate this scandal if it is not stopped sooner, and meantime the News Letter respectfully calls the attention of the present Grand Jury to the matter and urges that it investigate what has now grown to be a public scandal, and an endless robbery of the taxpayers for the benefit of a few property owners.

"THESE BE YOUR GODS."

The university contingent is even more snobbish than the ecclesiastical. While King Peter of Servia could find a Metropolitan to pray for him on the day after the assassination of his predecessor, the university, in the person of its present President, would pray for or kow-tow to any one who had money to spend. The institution of which he is the controlling head has been obliged to do without his fostering care while he has made a trip to the East. He has now returned, and the accounting which he gives of his time is about as follows: He has dined (or was it slept?) with the President. Congressman Metcalf is very popular, and the California delegation is to stand unitedly. But these matters, which an ordinary reporter could relate more effectively and even in better English, become very secondary to the prime news, the bonne bouche of the intellectual repast served by the Mogul. He says: "I had the pleasure of greeting Mrs. Hearst as she stepped again on American soil. She intends to return to Berkeley about the latter end of April. She said that she has enjoyed her journey abroad immensely, particularly through India," and so on for yards of weary twaddle. Now, Mrs. Hearst is an exceedingly benevolent and charitable lady, who would resent any such ostentatious and disgusting flattery with revulsion. What has she done that this dancing dervish, this fulsome back-bending slave should fill the air with his flattering ululations? We have not yet arrived at the point when our university is simply to serve as a means of advertising those of whom the President fancies that he can make use.

How San Francisco Looks to Me

By Fernand Travers, Tourist

No. 12

You San Franciscans are most assuredly improving by following my ideas. I am glad of it, for you need it, and I assure you that you need not be in the least affrighted at the thought that you have not lots of room left yet in which to exercise yourselves in this direction. The idea put into effect at a first night in a certain theatre here this week meets my approval—not allowing people to enter after the curtain had risen on the first act. This is really a step in the right direction. Why, let me ask you, would it not conduce to the comfort of the artistic theatre-goer to have this same rule enforced at other theatres. A chap who goes to see a play and not to be seen, gets into his chair before the overture. This class of theatre-goers are usually critical and know a good play when they see it. It is, don't you know, manifestly unfair to them to allow the society cult to tread on their toes and break the thread of the play. I think you will agree with me. You can't all take a box or a loge, but this is the one way I use to escape the unpoliteness of the late-comers. The first thought of a well-bred gentleman or gentlewoman is to avoid giving annoyance to others. None of us who are truly of the set would do so willingly, and those who so demean themselves should be kept in the foyer until the end of the act, and they can exhibit themselves during the intermission. It is usually the over-dressed and muchly-jeweled classes who are so careless and annoying. I fancy that it would take a manager of courage to enforce this rule, but if enforced, the so-called society people would fall into the habit quite as easily as the well bred. I saw quite a few nice frocks at that first night and quite a few impossible ones. I saw hats in boxes, a few dress suits, a few more dinner coats and a lot of badly-kneed trousers over muddy boots. Really the dress trouser of the San Francisco man is to my taste as bad as the over-dressing of the woman. I saw a lot of men who considered themselves correctly dressed, but who wore black satin ties tied in what I was told was a bat's-wing bow. Now a black tie at a dress affair is bad enough, but it must be hand-tied by one's man, and flat and square, but a bow thing suggesting a haberdasher's ready-made affair is simply suggestive of a suit hired for the night or of a tailor's clerk out on a lark, I beg of you, if you hire your suits for the night, as I learn you do, get a white tie and tie it yourself. Also, don't, as you care for appearances, perch yourself upon one of those funny places you have here in San Francisco and have your shoes polished on your way home. Gentlemen make their toilets in privacy, and while gentlemen don't polish their own shoes, it is still a part of the toilet. If you have not a man to shave you, you use a barber shop and go in there and get fixed up. You would not by any means tie your necktie or pull on your gloves in the street, would you? Then, why get your shoes varnished in the same public place. It is thoughtless and ill-bred. You are doing better, but I beg of you keep on. I was surprised at a concert affair the other night to see two really decent-looking and properly dressed men get up and leave two ladies alone and walk down the aisle, and was told they had gone to get a drink.

The lady and gentleman with whom I was, knew them, but not socially. I should think they would never be known socially. Men who will do this kind of thing are vulgar; the ladies should have left them then and there. I have my opinion of any well-bred woman who will tolerate such usage from an escort, and I really think that the gentlewomen can commence a useful movement by refusing to accompany any chap who does this thing. It is obtrusive, to say nothing of the acquired odor of the person. It is ungallant to those who have accompanied you and it is caddy and snobbish. It is the act of the fellow with the hired or borrowed suit and muddy shoes. I find the Americans the most gallant and chivalrous chaps to the gentlewomen, and these ill-bred actions, I think, can in a little part be blamed on the forbearance of the gentler sex. They are really too kind. They give the chaps here too many liberties, and they suffer for it. It is in their hands to exact in public the attention which they deserve from the men in both behavior and in dress. I think sometimes they don't exact enough, but if they will follow my hints they will do so from now on. They will have proper acting escorts then, and will please

PLEASURE'S WAND

A TRUSTY TIP ON THINGS THEATRICAL.

ORPHEUM—A very good show.

FISCHER'S—The Rounders—An improvement over last week.

COLUMBIA—The Silver Slipper—Only a fair show.

CENTRAL—Shamus O'Brien—a good performance.

CHUTES—A good show.

ALCAZAR—Parsifal—A dramatic triumph.

TIVOLI—The Gypsy Baron. A fine musical and scenic production.

"Parsifal," the Murphy adaptation, may be classified as a dramatic and musical triumph. It strikes each onlooker in a different key. Many come to the Alcazar performance to scoff and "be amused." They remain to praise. The Fitzgerald performance is a dramatic success. Much of the original music is retained, and the orchestra, augmented to thirty-two pieces, gives the Wagnerian score very acceptably.

The prelude is a solemn, exalted introductory. The Grail, Faith and the Holy Supper are the themes, and these continue throughout the play. Monsalvat, its forest, and, in its depths, unseen to the audience, the Castle of the Grail. The Grail, a cup from which the Savior drank at the Last Supper, given "Titulel" after his conquest of Klingsor, the Magician and Symbol of Evil. Then Amfortas, tortured by the ever-bleeding wound, awaiting the arrival of the "guileless fool." The killing of the swan and the entrance of the fool himself, the unawakened and untaught.

Kundry, lying lethargic, awakens to tell Parsifal of the death of his mother. He springs at her to kill her. Gurnemanz prevents, and believing that Parsifal is the fool of the prediction, he of "enlightened pity," urges him to follow to the Castle of the Grail. The dismissal of the fool by Gurnemanz—Klingsor in his castle calls upon the "Rose of Hades" (Kundry), and she appears only to combat his commands. A struggle for supremacy between right and wrong. A sombre scene, terminated by the clash of swords. Parsifal, invisible to the audience, slays the guards of Klingsor.

A transformation, a burst of beauty, a resplendent scene seldom equaled on any stage; the flower maidens are bewailing the death of their lovers, slain by Parsifal.

They see the fool and try to entrap him; they sing, they dance, and they use all the wiles they are possessed of in their attempts to win him as their lover. He is obstinate and repulses them.

Enter a woman, Kundry (Miss Block) a vision recumbent, a sentient, sensuous and sinister sorceress. Beautiful she is, more beautiful than the flower maidens who have whirled and pleaded in amatory dance to the obdurate Parsifal (Mr. Durkin). Kundry draws him to her by her revealed charms, and here Miss Block is the absolute embodiment of the character; there is lewdness and love and pity and passion intermingled, and then despair and hate. She is partially successful, for he is beguiled by the snakelike twist of her sensuous limbs and body. She speaks of his mother, tells him of his mother's death, gaining his confidence, and then she essays to win him to herself. The hot effluvia of passion floats about him, and she seals her lips to his with a fiery kiss.

It is a duel. The youth conquers the awakened cravings of the flesh. But he loves; the iron is in the soul. He likens his own to the wound of Amfortas. He has found knowledge, and with it comes pain. The fool is a fool no longer. Kundry is repulsed. She launches her curse. He is to wander in search of the Grail and he is never to find it. Klingsor (Mr. Hilliard) appears upon the battlements and flings the spear at Parsifal, who seizes it and makes the sign of the cross—an immediate destruction follows, and a desolation marks the spot where formerly beauty held sway. A wonderful scene.

Good Friday and the last scene but one. Kundry makes her last change and appears as the repentant Magdalene. Parsifal enters, footsore and dejected. Gurnemanz (Mr. Osbourne) recognizes him, and the holy spear, and knows that it is he—at last—who is to heal Amfortas. The scene at the spring and the Magdalene washing the feet of Parsifal, is one that may be construed in many ways. To some it is a beautiful and touching scene, and to others it seems a sacrilege. To the News Letter man it seemed full of religious fervor.

Miss Block's Kundry is a wonderful creation. She is the embodiment of the Eternal Feminine. She is the picture of pulsing passion. She finally becomes the ideal of resigned humility.

Mr. Durkin in the last two scenes strikes the Christ-like and reverential key to perfection, and plays well an awe-inspiring and difficult part. The scene in Klingsor's garden was bewilderingly beautiful, and while Miss Block was its crowning glory, Miss Gordon, Miss Starr and the others, succeeded in arousing the audience to a lambent admiration.

In the last act, Parsifal, with the tip of the holy spear, which now glows blood red, touches Amfortas' wound, immediately healing it. He holds the Grail aloft, and from above the white dove hovers. The last scene is a solemn and reverential one.

The Alcazar deserves the praise of San Francisco for its daring, and that young Irishman, Fitzgerald Murphy, has sent his name a long way toward lasting fame by the dramatization of Wagner's immortal play.

The soprano voice (Harold Forman) is a delight to the immense audiences. It rings clear and sweet through the house, and the anthem follows it in softest melody.

"Parsifal" should be seen by all San Francisco.

The Orpheum has been presenting a programme of unusual interest to the theatre-goer. Beginning with Gillo's Artesto and winding up with the eccentricities of Fergusson and Mack, the show is an exceptionally good one. In the Lowe and Hughes duo, the xylophone playing is a marvel, and the best we have ever seen. The Barrows-Lancaster Company presents "A Chip of the Old Block" in a highly enjoyable manner. Miss Thropp is a chic little maiden and a very good actress. James Barrows, who is the uncle of her husband in the play, is a fine actor, and his portrayal of Mathew Carnehan is without a flaw. The Swedish Ladies' Quartette captures the house, and the vocal numbers by these artists are fine. Emmett Corrigan, whose last visit here was one continual enjoyment to those who had the sense to recognize his wonderful ability, gives a playlet in one act, with the assistance of a good company. "Jockey Jones, or The Day of the Handicap," will dwell long in the memory of the onlooker. It will be a long time before the Orpheum surpasses this bill.

At Fischer's, "The Rounders" is somewhat improved over the first week's production, but no amount of pruning will ever make a good play of a lamentably bad one. Samuel Collins and the old ladies who are employed in the chorus are entertaining at the Columbia. At the Tivoli, the "Gypsy Baron" continues to delight fair-sized audiences. These are all hold-over bills, and I have treated them at length in former issues of the News Letter.

A capital programme has been prepared at the Chutes for the coming week, headed by Gillo's Artesto, the latest European novelty. An automaton, dressed as an artist, is placed in front of an easel, and at request draws a picture of any celebrity in two minutes, and in three minutes makes a portrait of any one taken from the audience. Memphis Kennedy, a most amusing black-face musical comedian, will be new, and the Fenz Brothers, renowned Tyrolean warblers, will make their first appearance here. Deonzo and Schenck will continue their trick barrel jumping and gymnastic act; Lyne and Leonard, the "Dancing Nabobs," will vary their specialty, and Mabel Lamson, the popular contralto, will be heard in new illustrated songs. The animatoscope will show a complete change of moving pictures, and many novelties are promised for Thursday, amateur night. New attractions are being installed at the Chutes from time to time, and the zoo is constantly in receipt of rare and curious animals from all over the world.

At the Central, "Shamus O'Brien" is being given to delighted audiences. Herschel Mayal takes the part of Shamus, and he does his part well. The specialties by the Champion Gaelic Dancers are good.

"Parsifal" is to be continued indefinitely. The play has caught on, and may truly be said to be the fashion. There is a display nightly of splendid gowns. Monday night was a premier that rivaled anything ever seen here in grand opera.

The immediate future at the Grand Opera House is the coming next week of Minnie Maddern Fiske. Mrs. Fiske has not appeared in San Francisco for many seasons, and her advent will be a welcome change from the commonplace and the threadbare performances seen at the Grand for some time. Here at last is something we can bet on.

Wednesday evening, the members of Islam Temple, Ancient Arabic Order of the Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, and their ladies will take possession of the Tivoli and enjoy "Mr. Pickwick."

Californians in particular and the public in general are at the present time more or less interested in Japanese Literature. Japanese are far different from Western ideals, and this fact is to be borne in mind by those who are studying the future of the Far East. There are a great number of historical books on Japan and China now on the market, and for the benefit of book readers the following list, although incomplete, will prove useful:

"Japan in Transition," by S. Ransome. (1899. Harper.) A comparative study of its progress since the war with China; a sound, useful book.

"Advance, Japan," by J. Morris. (1895. Allen.) General history and present condition, social and military.

"The New Far East," by Arthur Diosy. (1900. Cassell.) Useful for the understanding of political conditions.

"A History of Japan," by Sir F. O. Adams. (1874. King. 2 vols.)

"The Real Japan," by Henry Norman. (1893. Fisher Unwin.)

"The Story of Japan," by David Murray. (Fisher Unwin.)

"Japan," by Dr. David Murray. (1894. Story of Nations Series. Fisher Unwin.) Only the later chapters are "topical."

"Japan, our New Ally," by A. Stead. (1902. Fisher Unwin.)

"Japan and China: Their History, Arts, Science, Manners, Customs, Laws, Religions and Literature," by Captain F. Brinkley. (1903-4. To be completed in 12 volumes. T. C. & E. C. Jack.)

"Feudal and Modern Japan," by Arthur May Knapp. (1898. 2 vols. Duckworth.)

"A Maker of the New Orient—Samuel Rollins Brown," by W. E. Griffis. (Revell.)

"What Will Japan Do?" by J. Morris. (1898. Lawrence and Bullen.)

"Japan and the Pacific," by M. Inagaki. (1890. Fisher Unwin.)

"Things Japanese," by Basil Hall Chamberlain. (1902. Murray.) May be counted as an "essential book."

"Japanese Homes and their Surroundings," by E. S. Morse. (1888. Sampson Low.) A fascinating book.

"Japanese Girls and Women," by Alice Mabel Bacon. (Gay and Bird.)

"Glimpses of Unfamiliar Japan," by Lafcadio Hearn. (1902. Gay and Bird.)

"Kokoro: Japanese Inner Life," by Lafcadio Hearn. (1902. Gay and Bird.)

"Kotto: Being Japanese Curios," by Lafcadio Hearn. (1902. Macmillan.)

No one can understand Japan and the Japanese who has not read Lafcadio Hearn.

"Queer Things About Japan," by Douglas Sladen. (Second edition, 1904. Treherne.) A picturesque account of Japanese life and manners.

"The Soul of the Far East," by Percival Lowell. (Houghton, Mifflin, and Gay and Bird.)

"Unbeaten Tracks in Japan," by Mrs. Bishop. (1900. Newness, 2 vols.) A brilliant book; a peep into the "interior."

"The Ideals of the East," by Okakura. (1903. Murray.)

"An Artist's Letters from Japan," by J. La Farge. (1897. Fisher Unwin.) Admirably written; pictures seen with the eye of an artist.

A Modern Hotel.

On next Monday evening the magnificent new Hotel St. Francis will open its doors to the public. This will be one of the great events of the year, and Manager Pollok will offer to the world the finest modern hotel in America.

The logia is flanked with massive granite pillars, and between these one enters the lounging room from the street. The golden ceiling thirty feet above is upheld by twelve monolithic columns, and the walls are treated in panel effects of red. This is a repetition of the beautiful tones in the carpet and the tapestries. The ceiling is ornamented with coffers and rosettes, and it is a reminder of the glory of Roman architecture. The office is to the right, as you enter, and to the left is the marble fireplace, and over this is placed a fine painting of Mount Tamalpais, by Keith.

From the Promenade Corridor the restaurant is reached, and this immense room, capable of caring for some six hundred and fifty people at one time, is a dream of splendor. The tints are of grey-gold. The carving and ornamentation carry the same tone sentiment, and the whole is relieved by the glitter and reflection of thousands of reflecting prisms of crystal from the elaborate electroliers. These are reflected a thousand fold by the mirror panels of the room in its entire length. There are seven electroliers and they hang from the paneled ceiling that is supported by the fluted Tuscan columns. The Utah stone fire-place, with its grey tone, blends beautifully with the general tone of the whole room. The carpets are of a rich, warm red, and the hangings to the windows are of the same tone.

From the side of the lounging room is the cafe. It is flooded with light, and there is a beautiful view from here of the Dewey Monument and Union Square, with its shrubbery and flowers. The walls are a succession of panels of English oak, the ceiling is broken by gilded ornamental beams with the intervening paneling of red. The columns supporting this ceiling are Ionic and are surmounted with gilded caps. Soft green carpets cover the floor and the window drapery is of green velours.

The library contains four thousand volumes, and the cases for these are of San Domingo mahogany. The panelled ceiling is embellished in turquoise and gold. The walls are covered with sole leather. The rug covering the oak floor is of a pale deep green.

The ladies' parlor is a useful adjunct to the St. Francis. The wood-work is cream colored, and the furniture is gilded. The walls are covered with pumpkin-colored tapestry, the rug, the coverings of the furniture and the draperies of this room are of soft green, about the color of maiden-hair fern.

To one side, nearest Post street, is the ladies' entrance leading to the reception room, paneled to the ceiling with dark English oak. From this reception room one may reach any of the elevators of the hotel without entering any of the entertaining rooms.

The 450 bed-rooms of the St. Francis hotel possess a unique advantage over most rooms in other houses. There is not a room in this house that has not an outside frontage. The view from any of them is magnificent, and they are all easily accessible from the elevators. The service is quick and efficient, owing to the short distance each bell boy has to travel. Each room is sumptuously furnished, and there is a bath to every suite or connecting room.

Besides the handsome restaurant and cafe is the "Grill." Here the artist and the designer have given us an impression of the Tyrol. This is one of the most artistic halls in the hotel, and everywhere may be seen the trophies of the chase. Over the huge fireplace hangs the head of a huge Alaskan moose. The electroliers are fashioned from the horns of deer from the far Northland. The wood-work is light English oak, and the walls and ceiling are in brown cinnamon. The bar, with its resplendent array of glass, takes up one end of this room.

The barber shop of the St. Francis has every modern improvement, the latest massage machines, vibratory machines, compressed air appliances, etc.

The ladies' manicuring and hair-dressing parlors will contain the very latest ideas.

The official staff of the hotel is a guarantee of its efficiency. Mr. Allan Pollok, formerly with the Palace, is manager. Mr. John McDermott, genial John of the Palace, will be at the desk. Mr. William McMurray, formerly (for 16 years) in the Passenger Department of the Southern Pacific Company, will be in charge of one of the most important adjuncts to this modern hotel, the Information Bureau. Mr. McMurray is peculiarly fitted for this position, and the traveler who goes to him for any information will be given it politely, and, above all, correctly.

Mrs. Helen Laughton, formerly of the Hotel Touraine, Boston, will be in charge of the book department. Mrs. A. L. Boyle, also of the Touraine, will hold the responsible position of housekeeper. In charge of all culinary arrangements will be Mr. Victor Hirtzler of the Waldorf-Astoria and Sherry's. Gaston Renon, formerly of Ritz, Paris, will be in charge of the pastry cooking. Prosper Reiter, who needs no introduction to the San Francisco public, officiates as maitre d'hotel. Mr. Reiter, it will be remembered, was formerly with the Holland House.

One feature of the St. Francis is the fact that the pictures which are hung in every room have all been selected with absolute good taste, are all Californian in character, and are a standing advertisement, without that appearance, of the various advantages of our beautiful State.

It is not amiss to give a few figures: The kitchen range is forty feet long and has ten fires. There are ten feet of charcoal burners for broilers. There are individual broilers for individual orders. There are brick roasting ovens to roast large joints or to roast 50 turkeys at once. The broilers have cold storage tables in front to keep meat and game until wanted by the broiler chef. There are 4000 lbs. of copper kettles and pans. The dough mixer is of three barrel capacity. There are three Otis vertical cylinder high-speed passenger elevators. Two Otis vertical cylinder light speed service elevators; four Otis direct lift dumb waiters; three Otis direct lift Otis service elevators, for waiters from restaurant and cafe to kitchen. There are 11,469 16-candle power lights in the house. Total, arc and incandescent, 12,720. There is nearly one hundred miles of copper wire in the building.

The air for ventilation is obtained at a point near the roof, and a system of thermostats keeps the temperature, winter and summer at 69 to 70 degrees. The foul air is taken near the floor line and is discharged through a large shaft above the roof. All the toilets are operated by a separate mechanical system, and the kitchen has a mechanical ventilating system of its own.

The entire cost of the St. Francis Hotel and its furnishing was two and one-half millions of dollars.

"Everybody is buying it." "Of course. Do we not advertise it as not appealing to the multitude?"—Puck.

"Hear the Crier"
"What the devil art thou?"
"Oo that will play the devil, sir, with you"

TOWN CRIER

(The United States Consul-General in Berlin complains that Californian fruit is dishonestly packed.—Daily Paper.)

Our Western fruit's beyond compare,
We grow the orange golden,
The downy peach and the Bartlett pear
The nectarine and the grape fruit rare,
We pack and send them everywhere
To the lands that bards call "olden."

But a foolish folk are our growers brave
When they go to do their trading,
An honest deal is the deal of a slave,
So the best big fruit for the top they save,
And the trade they seek they lay in the grave
With a fraudulent bill of lading.

"Jane Doe" warrants have been held illegal by Judge Murasky. The decision is good both in law and common sense. It does not matter how poor and how degraded the women against whom these warrants were issued, they still have legal rights, and in this case they have actually benefited the community by the settlement of this question. The low condition of legal practice in this city receives no more complete proof than the attempt to draw warrants issued with fictitious names and without such description as would sufficiently identify the persons against whom they were to be issued. The merest smooth-faced tyro at the law school should know better; the men that suggested the warrants knew better. They contemplated an attack upon the rights of the citizens, and thought that the poverty of their victims would render their case victorious. They ran into the wrong Judge, however. The fact that there is always a man ready to do the right thing actually tends to give one confidence in that queer thing called Democracy.

Lots of jute bags on hand and seventy thousand dollars short which will have to be advanced by the State to keep the institution running, is the latest news from San Quentin. As for the shortness of the funds, that is natural enough—at San Quentin. I must confess a doubt, however, with regard to the number of grain bags in stock. Who has counted them? If the unsupported word of the managing body is taken, I suggest that it is insufficient, and that a committee of convicts be appointed to make the count. I also suggest that in accordance with prison discipline as conducted in this State, said committee be composed of particularly hard cases, convicted of beating feeble men and old women. The work being light should, in accordance with the teachings of modern penology, be especially suitable to them.

An Oakland attorney has put in a claim for seven thousand five hundred dollars, for services against Lindblom and his wife. He has married a lady doctor, who claims five thousand dollars against the same people for medical attendance. It looks as if they were forming a sort of professional syndicate to pillage Lindblom. They are a thrifty lot in Oakland, and have looked on the millionaire tailor as a fine, juicy article for home consumption only. It would be interesting to see a list of names of the reputable gentlemen who sneer at and denounce Lindblom and file their little extortionate claims against him at the same time.

The cowboy who was arrested the other day for insulting a woman on the public street is a curious example of the point of view from which the general rustic likes to regard the city. He thinks it an abode of vice, a roaring, ripping, festive place where morals exist not and a wild-eyed populace goes eternally on the festive tear. He comes with a pocket full of money, this innocent rustic, and haunts places from which the discreet would shrink. So far, everything seems to favor the illusions with which he began. When, however, he attempts to extend the scope of his operations, as in the present case, he discovers his mistake and finds out that there is probably about as much of heaven in the city as there is of hell in the country.

Mrs. Botkin is to have a trial after all. At least there is every appearance that a trial will take place. But in San Francisco it is so easy to have a trial that it is not a trial. The gentle art of working juries, what the coarse-minded call packing juries, to fit the case and secure an acquittal, is by no means unknown. I hope that no such arts will have an opportunity of displaying themselves in this case. What is wanted is a good jury, an honest jury, a jury that cannot be swayed by the mere appearance of a handsome woman, but will convict without hesitation if it believes that conviction should result from the evidence. Should such a jury be found, I fancy—nay, but this is no time to fancy—the case is on trial and justice clamors.

The Hearst papers have a most disingenuous way of reporting the fact that certain delegates are pledged to the support of their proprietor. The political complexion of the States from which the Democratic delegates are so pledged, is hidden from the reader, and it is doubtless hoped that the fact that these States are so far Republican will escape notice. The unscrupulous way in which these preliminary matters are reported is something new in American politics. The evil, which a vast mass of wealth and property devoted to a political campaign of a base and ignoble kind can produce, will be another lesson to be learned by this too careless electorate. If Mr. Hearst tries to emulate Cleon, he had better consider Cleon's fate.

"Industrial peace, arbitration and conciliation" are as Fluellyn would have said, "brave 'orts." It remains to be seen whether they are anything more. We have heard so many such before, and conciliation, from the local boards formed to deal with labor disputes up to the great fiasco at The Hague, does not appear to meet the success which the seductiveness of the name would lead us to expect. But however small the actual results may be, it is pleasant to contemplate the pleasure which the floods of oratory will give the orators.

There is another free speech agitation on foot, and Market street is a howling cacophony, where the lost h's of the pert Cockney and the shattering gutturals of the newly imported German mingle in diabolical discord with the tongue of soft, mushy Cork. "Free speech?" There is nothing so free. It is on tap all the time. It is cheaper than the steam beer which moistens the roaring gullet of the orator. Gentlemen, asses, however, experience shows that while you use your voices, none need dread your heels.

SOCIETY

Dear Bessie: Hurrah for the bachelors! They are not going to allow the girls to do all the entertaining, for the news has gone forth that preparations are on foot for a dance to be given at the Palace during Easter week, I believe, which is to be something worth going to, and of course every one is on the tiptoe of anxiety as to whether their name is on the invitation list. Don't you remember what a lovely dance the bachelors gave last year? That is the chief item of news just now; another one is that Ruth McNutt's engagement to Fitzhugh Lee, which has been talked of more or less ever since she came back from her visit to Mamie in Texas, has at last been formally announced, possibly because his regiment, the 11th Cavalry, will soon be coming home from the Philippines, where it is at present, and then we shall have another button wedding. In the meantime Ruth is off on a visit to her future relatives, the Lees.

I hear that Eleanor Eckart, whose marriage to Ed. Hume comes off next month, has selected Mabel Donaldson and Georgie Spieker for her bridesmaids, and Mrs. Ben Thomas as matron of honor.

Cards are still the staple form of entertainment, either preceded or followed by luncheon or dainty refreshments. Mrs. Horace Davis's bridge and luncheon party was one of those given last Saturday; Mrs. Will Sherwood had a bridge party last week, and the army card club met on Tuesday at Mrs. Woodruff's. But cards are not the only dissipation; Mrs. Coolidge has been doing a good deal of entertaining of late in the way of dinners and luncheons at her pretty home on Van Ness avenue; she is a charming hostess and has such a knack for setting a pretty table it is a delight to look upon and to sit to it.

May Colburn had a luncheon in the Palm Garden on Wednesday for Mrs. Peter; we had the postponed pony races at Tanforan on Thursday, and it has been quite the thing to go to the Darrach recitals at Steinway Hall; he has illumed Shakespeare in a way that even the dullest could not fail to understand that immortal bard. Then Henrietta Moffat, who is going abroad with the Bull girls, leaving next week, has been variously entertained, been given several luncheons, and her sister, Mrs. Sharp, and Mrs. Medau gave her teas.

Lilly tells me they are having good times at the Presidio. There was a jolly hop given by the officers of the Twenty-eighth on Friday evening, followed by the big euchre party of the Tenth Infantry in their mess hall on Saturday evening; I understand it will soon be considered the correct caper to go out there to have a look at the Philippine scouts, who will be here some little time before they continue their journey to the St. Louis Exposition, whither they are bound. Major Frank Carrington—you remember Frank at Angel Island, surely—has them under his command, and the different tribes of natives of the Philippines which the Scouts represent are great objects of curiosity.

"Showers" are a fad just now, and Ethel Kent has been the chief recipient of them of late; that is, mixed in with other things. Last Wednesday at Florence Cole's she was treated to a linen shower; on Saturday last Jane Wilshire had a card party in her honor, and afterwards she was showered with handkerchiefs, and yesterday Noelle de Golia, who is to be one of her bridesmaids, gave her a luncheon, followed by another linen shower, and then they all played "500."

Mrs. Russ Wilson is the happiest woman I know, to have her sister, Mrs. Dutton, back here again. Mrs. Dutton has taken a lovely apartment on Pine street, and with her is her daughter, Mrs. Leland, who you must surely remember when she was Louise Dutton, before she married and went off to the Philippines. I forgot to tell you last week that Louise Holladay, now Mrs. Messer, is here on a visit to her mother, Mrs. Sam Holladay, and will probably be here all summer. Southard Hoffman is home again from Honolulu for "keeps," and as if that were not joy enough to have him here, Northrop Cowles is said to be looking so longingly in this direction that we shall soon see him in this little hamlet. There is great rejoicing at Burlingame at getting Mrs. Henry Scott back again sooner than was hoped, for she is so energetic and does so love to have a "good time," the prospects for them at that exclusive settlement this summer were never brighter. But the gain of one is to be the loss of another, as the Walter Martins having got the European bee in their bonnets, will soon be off there again, so they will be among the missing at San Mateo this year. And how glad Laura McKinstry's friends are to have her back safe and sound I need not say; she has been fairly overrun with visitors since the home-coming, and says she is glad to be home once more.

The Fechtellers have gone to Washington, where he has been ordered for duty, which means two years of life in the nation's capital.

There will soon be quite a scattering among the girls. Maylita Pease has gone already—left last Monday with Mr. and Mrs. Pease for Portland, then East, with the St. Louis Exposition as a wind-up to their travels. The three Bull girls and Henrietta Moffat leave for Europe next week, and Hazel King is going, too—but not till June, when she joins Genevieve and the Herricks in Boston, and then away across the Atlantic. Helen Chesebrough has been down at Burlingame, and had a real good time; and just here, before I forget it, Frances Moore's engagement to Tom Breeze has just been made known.

The gossip is that Ethel Tomlinson is coming out here this summer for another visit; she may possibly come with Leontine Blakeman, who has been having a perfectly lovely time with her in New York this winter; and Mrs. Greer Harrison and Ethel are also to be with us again ere long. The Flood party, which includes Miss Jenny, John Twiggs and Major Rathbone, returned on Tuesday from their trip East. The Von Horsts leave about the first of April for Europe;

The congregated Colonels of the National Guard think the Governor is about to deprive Major-General Dickinson of his peacock feathers. The rumor has spread abroad that the General's glory has aroused envy in the breasts of not a few statesmen, who wish to increase their greatness by appearing in uniform. Dickinson has been a Guardsman for many years. It must be a quarter century ago when he was an ambitious young fellow in the old City Guard. He was successively Lieutenant, Captain, Lieutenant-Colonel, Colonel, Brigadier-General, and now Major-General. Incidentally he has been Mayor of Sausalito and State Senator, and his eagle eye has been fixed this long time on the Governor's chair. Time was when Dickinson wielded some political influence, but the wise ones say he has run his course. To be relieved of the command of the National Guard should be the least of his troubles, for the only satisfaction any man ever got out of that position was the pleasure of spending his own money, and the praise of the fellows that drank his good liquor.

The State troops exist mostly on paper, and in the imaginations of enthusiasts, and a Major-General is about as much use to them as Otis was in the Spanish war.

I happened to drive past the music stand at the Park last Sunday just as the band started the overture—"The Star Spangled Banner." Upon the programme was printed a request that the audience arise and remain standing during the rendition of what has come to be considered the national anthem. I confess I was curious to note the spirit in which the request would be taken by the people on the benches. There were probably two thousand people scattered in front of the music stand, the threatening weather having had an effect upon the attendance, and I wagered the cigars that not ten per cent of them would arise in honor of the spangled banner. Nor am I less patriotic than most men, nor do I think that San Franciscans are devoid of patriotism. I have noticed, however, that in the mass they seem to shrink from doing anything they deem unconventional. New ideas impress the crowd but slowly. I had seen hundreds of men and women in this city gaze with much curiosity and considerable amusement upon a visitor who had risen in a public place while the band played "The Star Spangled Banner." Upon a public occasion I had heard remarks upon the probable insanity of one who, upon the streets, uncovered while a concert band played the hymn in a square. So I figured I would win the cigars. Imagine my surprise when at the opening bars of the anthem, not only ten per cent, nor fifty per cent, but practically every man, woman and child of the two thousand seated in the immediate vicinity of the music stand arose, and remained standing until the music ceased. It was an impressive sight, and one that gives the idea that San Francisco is developing. The people are no longer ashamed to do the things that count, from a sentimental standpoint. Presently we shall see men pause on the curbstone of Van Ness avenue and uncover, the while a passing hearse slowly conveys to the Presidio a casket enwrapped in the stars and stripes. When such a sight is possible, we shall know we have reached man's estate.

It was in the Bohemian Club dining room. Four of them were at table, when a discussion arose regarding the ability and integrity of the local police force.

"They are no good," said one commentator. "They couldn't catch anything except a cold, and then not frequently enough to do the city any good." He was a physician, and spoke with feeling.

"Oh, I don't know," said another; "they are not so worse." He was in a position to know, officially, whereof he spoke.

"Betcher hundred dollars," said the physician, "that I can prove absolutely that half the men are crooks, and are standing in with crooks."

The official withdrew. He did not like the trend the talk had taken. Also, the physician was pugnacious. The latter crowed over the declination of his bet, and asserted loudly that he could prove that not only half, but all, the police were crooked.

"I would just like some of that hundred dollars," said a quiet fellow at the end of the table—a coal merchant. "Or you can make it a thousand, if you wish. I bet you a thousand dollars you don't know what you are talking about, and that you can't prove any statement you have made."

That is how the trouble commenced. The physician glowered and sputtered and roared; he wanted to know why the thousand dollar man was chipping in, anyhow; he did not think it gentlemanly to interrupt a member of a club in the exercise of the great American privilege of denouncing public officials; he considered himself insulted.

"Had no intention of insulting you, I am sure," said the other. "I just wanted to call you down. Of course, if I have said anything to offend, I apologize. At the same time, if you will step over into the Hammam, or some other quiet place, I shall take great pleasure in smashing your face."

Then the others stopped it—which is to be regretted—for if it had continued it is possible the question whether or not the police are corrupt might have been submitted to the "wager of battle."

Fate made an awful bull of it when it tried to conceal the President of the Mormor Church by calling him Smith. He has overcome the handicap with which he started in life, and has raised forty-two saplings in the vineyard of the Lord, from each of which floats the banner of his name. Incidentally, it has been "revealed" that this latter-day Joseph has, just at present, five wives and about a thousand descendants, all bearing the grand old name of Smith, which reminds me of this story:

A traveler in Utah, where the Smith clan flourishes like weeds in a garden patch, had wondered where they all came from. Strolling around Salt Lake, his attention was attracted by a very imposing sign on the front of a very imposing building. Upon the sign was this inscription: "Smith Manufacturing Company." The visitor heaved a sigh of relief.

"At last," said he, "I shall find out."

He entered the place and asked for Mr. Smith.

"Which one?" a clerk responded; "Smith senior, or one of the young men?"

"Oh, I want to see the old man," said the searcher after truth.

He was conducted into the private office. A venerable man sat at a desk. Long gray whiskers dangled from his chin.

"I am Mr. Smith," he said. "I am the president and managing director of the Smith Manufacturing Company."

"Let me press your hand, sir," said the traveler. "I would not have missed meeting you for very much. I have traveled over the world, and everywhere have I met your sons. In fact, sir, the woods are full of them. I wondered where they all came from, but now I know. The Smith Manufacturing Company is engaged in a great and noble work. Keep it up, sir, keep it up! Posterity will bless you for having conferred a boon upon humanity. There can be no fear of race suicide so long as you continue in this magnificent enterprise. And to think that so much is due to the efforts of one man! Ah, it is too much. My emotions overcome me!" And the stranger wept.

Mrs. Botkin's second trial is under way. Bets are offered that it will result in an acquittal or a disagreement. It may be remembered that Judge Cook stated two years ago, when Mrs. Botkin was in jail, that he had seen her upon a street car. Subsequently it was considered an instance of mistaken identity. Judge Cook, remember, tried her the first time, and was very familiar with her appearance. Yet, he mistook another woman for her in a street car. The question of identity is of primary importance in Mrs. Botkin's case. Judge Cook presides at this second trial. Who is paying for Mrs. Botkin's defense? Surely, Knight and McGowan are not working just for love of their profession.

A Club Symposium

The San Francisco Riding Club will give a Horse Show for the benefit of the Doctor's Daughters on Friday evening, March 25th, at 8 o'clock, and a matinee for children on Saturday afternoon, at 1:30 at the Riders' Club Building, corner Seventh avenue and C street. The members of the Riding Club have been busily practicing for some time, and the programme for evening and matinee promises to be most attractive; some interesting features of the evening will be tandem and random riding by members of the Club, obstacle and high jumping by the members of the San Mateo County Hunt Club. The mounted Park police, through the kindness of Mr. Howell, will give an exhibition of their skill. The Doctor's Daughters promise the children a happy time at the matinee on Saturday.

A fine pedigreed dog will be disposed of; the dog is the gift of Mr. Alexander Hamilton; there will also a pony and cart which takes the place of the usual doll house. The little outfit is in the hands of Mrs. Wakefield Baker and Mrs. Fred Tallant, and tickets for it will soon be on sale at Sherman & Clay's.

Miss Jennie Blair has change of the boxes and reports them all sold. The Doctor's Daughters regret that there are no more boxes, as constant application is being made for them, but they advise the purchase of seats, the view being equally good from all parts of the building. Many box parties are being formed, and a very jolly, pleasant evening is anticipated. The box holders are Mrs. Antoine Borel, Mrs. J. D. Spreckels, Mr. J. C. From now on until the annual election of the California Club, which will be held the first Tuesday in May, there will be lively campaigning, not for the under offices, but the executive position. Friends of Mrs. Aylett R. Cotton, one of the candidates for the presidency, are indignant at the charge that she represents the faction which became an entity at the time of the "color line" controversy, and which had as its leader Mrs. Lovell White, the founder of the club and the first president. It is true that Mrs. Cotton served under Mrs. White, but when Mrs. White retired from California Club activities, Mrs. Cotton went right on doing exactly as she had before. If there were a difference she was more active than ever in her efforts for the welfare of the club. In the face of that, Mrs. Cotton's friends do not mince words when the word "faction" is mentioned. The contest between Mrs. Cotton and her opponent, Mrs. J. W. Orr should be most amicable; both ladies are capable and deserving of honor at the hands of the club, and when the last ballot is counted, it will mean only that one has more active friends than the other.

Club women have something to talk about just now because of the defection of prominent San Francisco clubs from the California State Federation of Women's Clubs. Two months ago Sorosis sent in its resignation, and the ink is not yet dry on that of the Forum Club. On the heels of this comes the unofficial statement that the Philomath is about to retire. In all cases the reason given is that the clubs in question are essentially social organizations, and that they have nothing in common with the State Federation. The moving spirits in the larger organization hold that the Federation is all-inclusive, and that there is no reason why the most exclusive social club should remain without the fold. This being the case, the wise ones are looking about for other reasons. It cannot be that there are any disgruntled club women in the north, because the office of President of the Federation has been swinging back and forth between the North and South with the regularity of a faithful old pendulum. So the trouble does not lie there.

The Federation was born in the South through the energy of a woman of that district, notably Mrs. Robert J. Burdette, and quite properly in the first place the offices went to that part of the State. Since that time the North has had its share. One truth is that women of the southern part of the State are more "clubable" than their sisters in this district. The majority of them are more recently from the conservative East, where clubs are as much a part of a woman's life as her church. With the exception of the Woman's Parliament of Southern California, which remained in the Federation but a few months and withdrew because it wanted free swing, the women of the South are devoted to the Federation. Up this way they are not concerning themselves much about it.

Women wise in club lore say that the trouble is not with the Federation, but with the personnel of the present administration. The Federation crown must pinch and press in several spots.

The Central Theatre will present on Monday evening the melodrama by Theodore Kremer, "The King of Detectives." The play will be magnificently mounted, with new and beautiful scenery, and many original and startling scenic effects.

Rosario Guerrero, the famous Spanish dancer and pantomimist, who has been the idol of Paris for the past five years, will make her first appearance in this city at the Orpheum this coming week. She will be assisted by the prominent French actor, Philippe Dufaure, and will present a pantomimic sketch founded on a Spanish legend, entitled "The Rose and the Dagger."

"Mr. Pickwick," a musical comedy in two acts, founded on Charles Dickens' most amusing work, will be produced for the first time in this city at the Tivoli Opera House next Monday evening. The music is by the well known composer, Manuel Klein, the words by Charles Klein, and the lyrics by Grant Stewart. All of the characters made famous in the story will be seen in the flesh.

The San Francisco Art Association will hold its annual spring exhibition at the Mark Hopkins' Institute of Art, beginning Friday, March 25th and ending Thursday, April 21, 1904. The exhibition will be open daily from nine till five o'clock, and also on the evenings of Thursday, March 31st, April 7th, April 14th, and April 21st, when a musical programme will be rendered.

The Minetti Quartette will give the first concert of its eighth season of chamber music recitals at Lyric Hall Friday afternoon, March 25th. The programme arranged for that occasion will be as follows: String Quartette in D minor op. 75 (Bazzini); Lento, from Quartette in F major op. 96 (Dvorak); "Sehr lustig, moeglich rasch," from Quartette in D minor op. 77 (Raff); Piano Quartette in B flat, op. 41 (Saint-Saens).

The production of the musical comedy, "His Royal Nibs," by W. H. Clifford and Shafter Howard, will take place in April on Thursday the 21st and Friday the 22d in the evenings, at the Alhambra Theatre. The rehearsals for this production are progressing most favorably, both as to chorus work and that of the principals. This entertainment is to be given for the benefit of the California Women's Hospital.

The P. & B. Paint Company is reaping a reward these rainy days in the shape of compliments. Users of the various brands of roofing, the Malthoid; the P. & B. Ready Roofing, the P. & B. Building Paper and the P. & B. Building Paint, have causes to congratulate themselves as well because of the lasting quality and the imperviousness of these various materials. The company will send you an interesting catalogue for the asking—a booklet of each of the above—if you will only ask for it.

—The mince pies furnished by Swain's Bakery on Sutter street are real treats. You can wander the world through and find none to match this place for wholesome food and good attendance. The San Francisco best people know this, and are its constant patrons.

FOUR FLUSHING IN THE GARDEN CITY.

San Jose is a continually seething mass of politics and from the swirling mess comes occasionally an interesting story. The story of T. J. McGeogheghan is one in point. He was only 26 years old when elected to the office of Treasurer of San Jose a year ago. He promptly filed bonds in the sum of $100,000 and he handled and had in his possession at all times during his official life the sum of $75,000 to $100,000.

It transpires that it cost him the sum of $1,300 to secure the treasuryship, and this office only pays $1,500 a year. The treasurer was not allowed a deputy, but as he was frequently absent, he hired a deputy, to whom he paid a salary. For weeks at a time this deputy was alone in the office, and there was no bar to his purloining any amount of money he may have had use for, and unless Mr. McGeogheghan was caught in the act of actually falsifying the records or stealing the coin, it is an impossibility to fasten the crime upon him. It is a matter of interest to note and remember that the Treasurer was the only man elected on the Boss ticket.

J. D. Worswick was elected Mayor on the ticket of the Hayes faction. San Jose is at the present divided into four political factions, and as we said at the beginning of this article, is a continually seething mass of politics. It was to be expected that if the Mayor was attending strictly to the duties of his office he would have watched argus-eyed the actions of the opposing faction, and especially the actions of the only representative of the Boss elected to office.

There is an effort being made in San Jose to make good what is politely called a "deficiency." The amount stolen was between seven and eight thousand dollars, and the attempt to cover the "deficiency" is being made with a view to prevent prosecution of a criminal nature. It is kind of his friends to attempt to save the Treasurer from the Penitentiary. It is the duty of the Mayor or some Supervisor to see to it, however, that (no matter how strong the pull or how prominent the connections) that the criminals are punished. There is altogether too much of this white-washing of those who infract the moral law in public office, and it is high time that the real criminals be ferreted out and brought to book. To let this pass as a "deficiency" or as a mere speculation is to put a premium on crime. Let no guilty man escape.

POLO PONY RACES.

The Pony Races at Tanforan have been postponed because of the rain, and as a consequence the last races are scheduled for this Saturday afternoon. A big attendance is predicted, and society will be out in full force. The rules of racing as adopted by the California Polo and Pony Racing Association govern. The ponies will be ridden by qualified gentlemen riders. A great deal of interest centers in these races, and there is sure to be a vast turnout of the admirers of the various racing colors. The fact that the rain prevented the races in the beginning of the week will ensure a larger audience than under ordinary circumstances. Pony racing and the fascinating game of polo is an exciting sport, and is fast becoming immensely popular in California. It is a pleasure to watch a race that is being run absolutely on the square.

CORRESPONDENCE INVITED.

The Minister of Foreign Affairs

Developments in the Far East the past week have been anything but an open book. Four new factors have appeared, and together or separately, what their influence upon coming events is likely to be is decidedly uncertain. The first of them is the announcement that the Czar has decided to go to the front and assume the general direction of his cause. If he were in any sense a soldier by education or experience it would become him to place himself at the head of his army, but he is not even so much as a carpet knight. It is doubtful if he could direct a batallion in field maneuvers with nothing more hostile to confront him than gentle winds and singing birds. Then why does he go? The belief is growing that it is his purpose to dwell with his soldiers in his capacity of "White Father, vicar of the Lord Christ and head of His church upon the earth." That would mean his purpose to be to incite and enthuse his troops to a high degree of religious frenzy, when every one of them would imagine himself a special instrument in the hands of Providence to crush paganism as represented by Japan and China. That is to say, make the war a religious struggle to stamp out heathenism, but it so happens that practically the entire Christian world outside of Russia is in sympathy with the pagans. If it is the role of "White Father" to make it a religious war that the young autocrat proposes to assume, he will make a mistake from which his country would never recover. Religious wars are things of the everlasting past. The second "straw" of the past week may indicate a great deal. It is the little stream of British military officers—experts in the several branches of the service—that is quietly and noiselessly flowing into Japan. The London Government declines to offer an explanation, but some of Russia's friends see in it a plan to immediately supply China with a very capable general staff of trained English soldiers in the event of the Peking Government becoming involved in the Russo-Japanese war, which now seems inevitable. Far-seeing is John Bull's diplomatic statesmanship strong point, and not often is he found far away when needed for quick work. The third surprise of the week is the change in Russia's plan of campaign. Instead of immediate clashes, the newly adopted strategy provides for the avoidance of anything like a great battle, and retreat if need be upon the inland centers of supplies and concentration until enough reinforcements are in hand to make the force in Manchuria aggregate fully 500,000 strong, and then rush down upon the Japanese and crush them by sheer numerical force. It is a good paper plan, and it will work very well if Japan is willing to wait for such a blow, but all the chances are that the little yellow men will rush forward and defeat the enemy in detail before he is concentrated. That was Napoleon's way of doing things, and the Japanese seem to know all about the great Corsican's rapid method in fearless dashes. The fourth revelation the past week was the bombastic and spectacular exhibition General Kuropatkin made of himself upon leaving for the Far East to assume supreme command of the Russian forces. Hitherto, Kuropatkin has been looked upon as a field commander of considerable ability, but he now stands before the military world not only a self-discredited soldier, but a blow-hard and bag of wind. With a flourish of both hands that shook and tangled yards of gold trappings that adorned his body, he bade the admiring multitude that had gathered at the railway station to see him off adieu, and assured his countrymen and all the world that upon his arrival at the front, he should promptly commence walking over the dead bodies of dead Japanese soldiers, and that after hitching Korea to the Russian Empire he should cross over to Japan and force the brown nation to get upon its knees in Tokio and surrender its horse, foot and dragons. Government and all into his mighty hands. Military men are not at all backward in expressing their contempt for the braggart, nor in predicting his speedy retirement because of incompetency. The great General is not a peacock sort of man, nor does he fight battles with his tongue, especially when he is several thousand miles from the theatre of action.

Japan's Puzzle Prize, though she may not take formal possession for a little time.

The next great prize will have to be taken in a wholly land game, but when or where the effort is to be made, soldiers of large experience are too cleverly enveloped in the mist of Japan's puzzling strategy to venture even a guess. But certain it is, Japan's land establishment is being moved and handled exactly contrary to Russia's expectations, and this has disconcerted the Bear's Generals so much that they are not at all disposed to venture anything until they have two or three times the Japanese force well in hand. Evidently there are pretty broad threads of demoralization running through Russian navy and army circles, which only large reinforcements can prevent spreading. It is clear, too, that the Russian army supply departments failed utterly to get themselves into any sort of a state of preparedness for even so much as a two months' supply ahead. The consequence is the entire army is already on short meat rations, and bread-stuffs are running low. But all this is not likely to seriously cripple the army, though short rations are patriotism's sworn enemy when the latter has to make forced marches and fight battles. From a careful and unbiased analysis of the situation, the conclusion must be that Japan has already won a moral victory that has never been equaled by any nation. She has gained the sympathy, good will and admiration of the civilized world outside of Russia by maintaining a standard of manliness, truthfulness, patriotism and modesty that is far above what would be expected in even the Anglo-Saxon. There has been no boasting, no threats, no coarse vilification of the enemy, no attempt to conduct the war upon lines other than would be indorsed by the world's loftiest war ethics. Not an act or purpose has yet been revealed that is to the nation's discredit. On the other hand, from the jump the nation has not for a moment lost sight of the fact that war is war; that war means bloodshed, and that the ways of the dress-parade are not the ways of the battle-field. Whether right or wrong, there has been an unconcealed directness of purpose and a forcefulness of national and individual action on the part of the Japanese that stamps them as being a people of a high sense of honor and of a quality of bravery and love of country that advancing civilization may well be proud of. And to think that a third of a century ago these people were under the feudal system of Government, while to-day they enjoy a constitutional system of rule and a public school system that finds no equal in all Asia! Still, the question to not a few, is what influence would the 450,000,000 adherents of Buddhism, Confucianism, Taoism and Shintoism in China and Japan exert in Christian lands should Russia be driven out of Eastern Asia and these "pagans" fix their countries firmly as mighty members of the family of nations? And what nation would dare refuse them equal footing with Christians because of their anti-Christian beliefs, religious customs and "idols of wood and stone?" However, commerce, institutions of learning, personal liberty and civilization believes in the Rights of Man without reference to his religious faith; therefore let the Christian heathen rage and let the pagan heathen have a chance.

Business in the Comstock Pine-St. Market. market has been fairly good during the week, owing to the frequent fluctuations in the North-end mines, which have enabled smart operators to make considerable money. Some very interesting work is now going on in the middle group, in addition to the development of the Ophir ore body, the extension of which will likely be found in some of the neighboring mines. The Ward shaft is being cleared out and repaired. When this work is finished a connection will be made with the Sutro tunnel, and a pumping plant will be installed in the Ward shaft to be used for the drainage of the South-end mines. Everything along the lode is now put in the best condition for a prolonged course of operations, and the plans arranged in detail will cover all important points along the lode, where there is any promise of ore being found. The indications are that this will be an unusually active year in the Comstock mining market, and people will have a chance to make money the like of which they have not had for a long time past.

Eastern Men Take Hold. A noteworthy incident took place during the week, in the way of a change in the personnel of the directory of the Savage, one of the more important mines on the Comstock lode. George R. Wells, the old-time president of the corporation, and C. H. Fish, vice-president of the company for years, resigned, their places being filled respectively by Franklin Leonard, Jr., of New York, and Charles Hirschfeld of this city. Mr. Leonard is said to represent a big Eastern syndicate, owning a large block of the stock. It has been known for some time past that large quantities of this stock have been purchased and sent East of late. There were no other changes in the personnel of the directory.

A Good Financial Showing. At the annual meeting of the shareholders of the London, Paris and American Bank, held in London on March 10th, the directors submitted balance sheet and statement of accounts for the year ended December 31, 1903. The gross profits for the year, after making provision for all bad and doubtful debts, amounted to £65,968 6s. 9d.; expenses of management amounted to £36,522 7s. 0d., leaving a profit of £29,445 19s. 9d., against £40,603 ds. 2d. for the previous year. The net profit of £29,445 19s. 9d.; together with £9,144 16s. 1d. balance that had been brought forward December 13, 1902, made £38,590 15s. 10d. available for distribution for the year. In September, 1903, an interim dividend of 4 per cent absorbed £16,000, and a second dividend of 4 per cent, or £16,000, was declared at the meeting, making 8 per cent for the year, the two dividends accounting for £32,000, leaving £6,590 15s. 10d. to be carried forward to new account.

Business in the local Stock and Bond Exchange was rather light during the past week. There was a little better movement in bonds, but the demand for stocks continues dull. Under the "prop" process S. F. Gas and Electric shares were pegged higher. There is no outside demand for this stock. There is every prospect that before the end of the year a new and rival company will have entered the field.

The Hibernians' Lament

Oh, Paddy dear, and did you hear
The news that's going round?
The Mayor forbids Hibernians
To dance on any ground.
St. Patrick's Day we cannot keep,
His pipers can't be seen,
And the only comfort that we get
Is wearing of the green.

For we went to Schmitz, the spalpeen,
And he wouldn't take our hand,
But he knocked our plans all endwise
And he boycotted our band.
We're the most distressed Hibernians
That ever yet were seen,
For there's nothing left but whiskey
And the wearing of the green.

And was it last November
That he said he was our friend,
And promised lots of offices
And graft without an end?
We were the most important folk
That ever yet were seen.
Now we cannot pipe our music
For the wearing of the green.

Because the union Dutchmen
Cannot play an Irish jig,
Because our music is our own,
Because the Mayor's a pig,
A band of pickets round our hall
St. Patrick's Day has seen,
And tears mix with our whiskey
At the wearing of the green.

A SOUTHERN PACIFIC IMPROVEMENT.

The Southern Pacific Company has just completed an improvement in the line between Santa Barbara and Los Angeles. The new line runs through the mountains and saves the time consumed in the run from Santa Barbara to Los Angeles by three-quarters of an hour. While this time saving is not to be taken advantage of immediately (the time table not taking it into account), it may be taken advantage of later, as the necessity arises, to make quicker time. The tunnel through the mountains is longer than the San Fernando Tunnel, being nearly 7,000 feet long. There are now two trains daily between Los Angeles and Santa Barbara, and these will be run as usual, via Saugus, but through trains will run via the new cut-off.

—The appetizing things that come from the broiler at Moraghan's Grill, in the California Market, are responsible for the crowd that goes there for luncheon. It has become a regular business men's exchange. The quality of the chops, steaks, oysters and game served cannot be surpassed. More than that, the wants of the guests are attended to by perfectly trained waiters.

—Few come to San Francisco without paying a visit to Zinkand's, which has done so much to establish our city's reputation as the best restaurant town in the United States. It's the favorite after-theatre resort.

A rub at the Post St. Hammam will do you good.

Obituary

Mrs. George W. Caswell mourns her father. William G. Badger is gone, and with his passing much of the history of California loses a living representative. Mr. Badger came to California in 1850, and in 1858 he started the first Sunday school from which the Advent Church sprang. He was instrumental in the firm establishment of the Public School System in San Francisco. He was president of the Industrial School Department from 1867 to 1868, and was elected president of the Bunker Hill Association in 1861, a position which he held until his death.

It was largely his zeal that made the annual Bunker Hill day celebration a success. Mr. Badger was presented with a life membership in the Mercantile Library in recognition of the work he had done in aiding to extinguish its debt, and was a director of the library at the time of his death. He was the second president to be elected to that office in the Young Men's Christian Association, and was a member of the Exempt Firemen and the Sons of the Revolution. In his Masonic affiliations Mr. Badger was a member of the Scottish Rite, a member of California Commandery and of Mount Moriah Lodge of Masons, and in 1887 was elected a member of the Masonic Veterans' Association.

His wife died some years ago, and he leaves three daughters, Mrs. George W. Caswell, Mrs. Henry S. Foote, Jr., and Mrs. Edward L. Burlingame, of New York.

William G. Badger was born on October 2, 1821, at Charlestown, Mass., and his forebears bore arms in the War of the Revolution.

San Francisco should have a woman's automobile club. It is strange that we have not heard of such a club ever being formed. Experience has taught us that if a woman really wants anything she always gets it. That's what we are on earth for. Now we might turn this to good account. Let us have a woman's automobile club. After a few meetings the women will take up the proposition of good roads, for they see the present condition. With them working together, it will be like a tidal wave. They will hold up the merchant, press, public officials, and everybody until they have achieved the object they start out to accomplish. There may be a few fights in the club, but that will only happen when they are through and are dividing the glory.

If we want good roads in California, and want them quickly, let us have the woman's club, and we will all give up easily.

The only thing of importance that has happened during the past week was the discussion of "the King's Highway." It looks as if something might be done. At the present time they are all handling that cheap commodity—talk. It will never build the road. Good, honest action with a liberal expenditure of money will be the only thing that will accomplish anything like good results.

In the report of the bureau of statistics which has lately come to hand, it is seen that during the fiscal year ending June, 1903, $1,207,065 worth of automobiles have been shipped out of the country. Europe received $853,437 worth; North America, $180,487; South America, $24,557; Asia, $38,113; Oceania, $51,163, and Africa, $59,308.

The shipment to England and the United Kingdom amounted to $670,811. All these figures tend to show the importance of the industry.

From the East comes the report that up to June, 1903, for a period of six months, 1771 persons were killed and 22,972 injured by locomotives; 134 persons a day.

There are 41,225 locomotives, an average of one person killed or injured per locomotive each year.

What would happen if automobiles caused the same death rate?

They do not and never will. It is this new conveyance that is going to solve the problem of traveling in safety, but at the same time with a greater speed. But we must have good roads first.

There is great need for a club station for the Automobile Club of California at the Ocean. At the present time the members of the club have to use the public places, which are not always congenial. An owner does not always want to eat before a lot of sight-seers, and a pretty club station that would be solely for the club members would be a welcome innovation.

Mr. A. A. Hubbard, of Reno, Nevada, purchased an Oldsmobile from the Pioneer Automobile Company.

The Mobile Carriage Company has received a carload of 2-cylinder Arrows, which were unloaded this week, and some of them delivered to the customers, who were awaiting their arrival.

During the past week, Mr. H. H. Dana has received his 2-cylinder Pope-Toledo touring car with King of Belgium body.

Mr. D. H. McEwen purchased a new 1904 Winton touring car from the Pioneer Automobile Company. Both Mr. McEwen and his daughter are receiving instructions in driving the machine.

The automobile has rendered services in many capacities, beyond the dreams of the most sanguine automobilist, but it was for San Francisco to furnish the first automobile band-wagon. The Mobile Carriage Company hired six automobiles to a business house on Market street to announce their opening. One of their large traps was used as a band wagon.

Mr. Ganes of New York (the owner of a four-cylinder Locomobile), reached San Francisco Thursday from Los Angeles. Mr. Ganes and party of friends are spending a few months touring in California. They left on Friday last for Monterey, where a few days will be spent touring that section of the State, at the expiration of which time they will return to San Francisco and remain here several weeks.

Dr. Paul Oesting has become one of the most enthusiastic automobilists in the city, and was out every day last week in his new 2-cylinder Knox touring car. He is an apt and promising pupil in the art of handling the big machine, and gives promise of becoming an expert chauffeur.

Mr. C. B. Hale of Santa Barbara is the purchaser of a new 1904 Winton touring car. Mr. Hale, it will be remembered, purchased a 1903 Winton touring car in September of last year, and after touring in it for two months in the northern part of the State, ran the car through to Santa Barbara, and was so well pleased with the machine that he placed his order for a new 1904 machine at the beginning of this season.

Mr. G. Stewart, for nine years superintendent of the manufacturing department of the George N. Pierce Company of Buffalo, has come to San Francisco and entered the mechanical department of the Mobile Carriage Company. Mr. Stewart built the first automobile which the George N. Pierce people turned out.

"I am not a betting man," said President E. P. Brinegar of the Pioneer Automobile Company, "but if any of our competitors wish to make small bets of hats, suits of clothes, cigars, etc., on the score that they know what the Winton Motor Carriage Company will do in the way of abandoning the horizontal motor, let them make their proposition." He then showed a letter from Mr. Charles B. Shanks, which read as follows, viz.: "The report is again being industriously circulated that the Winton Company has decided to abandon the horizontal motor, and will shortly bring out a model equipped with upright motors. This report is false, absolutely and without qualification. The Winton Motor Carriage Company does not contemplate abandoning the horizontal motor and adopting the upright, now or at any future time."

Mr. B. D. Merchant was out all day Sunday with a party of friends for an airing in his 4-cylinder Pope-Toledo.

The Commercial Motor Car and Boat Company have opened up a large, commodious and well-equipped shop, at 126 Fremont street, this city, expressly for the repairing and storing of automobiles. Expert workmen, experienced in the care and handling of all types of machines, are employed, and down town merchants will find the new establishment a convenience as well as a necessity.

A mile in thirty-six seconds is the present ambition of H. S. Harkness, whose racing car failed to make the American team for the international race last year. For such a mile Mr. Harkness will have constructed a special machine for the purpose. This racer will have no extra parts, the differential even being cut out of the running gear, and every spring being removed. The body will be of special design, and the car will be extra long. He has the builder ready for the work now, and this builder guarantees to design for him a thirty-six second machine or receive no pay for the work. The cup racer Mr. Harkness now has in Brooklyn, where it will remain until April, when he will take it south for time trials.

"My present racer has practically never been run," said Mr. Harkness. "It was taken out once for a fast go, and the immense horsepower—it is 120 horsepower, you know—when brought into play with the light parts, caused a break of the crank case. It was required that we reach 2,204 pounds, and to do so safety was sacrificed to speed. On Ormond beach I can have five miles to start the machine gradually, and it is so fast that I firmly believe it possible to lower the record of Vanderbilt with my car. Yes, I shall probably drive this car myself, and I hope to give it a great record mark before retiring it to the stable.

"I do not wish to say that I shall compete in the Vanderbilt 300-mile cup race, still I may do so, rebuilding the car for such a race, provided weight does not make a difference in such a race."

INSURANCE

Mr. William B. Joyce, President of the National Surety Company of New York, is in the city on matters connected with the company with which he is the Chief Executive. Mr. Joyce is well known in the East as a leader among the most skillful liability underwriters. Mr. Dean was the president of the National Surety Company up to January of this year, when, at the request of the company's board of directors, he resigned and Mr. Joyce was elected to succeed to the position. It is generally conceded that this move will increase the present popularity of the company among the agents. Mr. James Borland, who was for some time General Agent of the company on this Coast, resigned recently, and Frank L. Gilbert, who was the Assistant Manager here, has been promoted to fill the position of manager. A better selection could not have been made by Mr. Joyce. Gilbert, by those who know him, is called "Pop," and he is universally beloved and respected by those who do business with and get business for him. He may be numbered and counted among the best-known and most popular surety insurance men on the Coast. One of Mr. Joyce's first actions after assuming the presidential chair, and one which at once showed him a shrewd manager, was to request the Insurance Manager of the State of New York to examine the affairs and condition of the National. The examination resulted in a complete surprise to the management of the company, proving the condition of its affairs to be in far better shape than it claimed, showing a surplus, as regards the policyholders, of $704,000, which, besides its reserve fund of $200,000 and other resources, gives the company a surplus of over $1,300,000. All the directors of the company, and they embrace the strongest list of names to be found in the directory of any insurance company in America, have the interest of the National Surety Company solely at heart, and as a consequence its prospects were never brighter in its existence, except possibly the first six months of its organization. The company is now better equipped and better managed and more popular.

It has a thoroughly equipped plant, an enthusiastic corps of loyal employees, and a vigorous management. These combined means that the National Surety will grow faster and stronger than heretofore.

The report of the Chief Examiner of the insurance department of the State of New York shows the total admitted assets to be $1,627,901; the liabilities $723,431. The reserve fund, voluntarily set aside by the company to meet any contingencies, is $200,000; surplus, as regards policyholders, $704,000; other securities and re-insurance will add $50,000 more to this sum. The cash capital of the company is $500,000, and the total admitted assets of $1,627,901 is securely invested in nothing but gilt-edged securities, over a million of which is bonds of the United States and the State of New York.

The Railroad Merger Decision.

Justice Harlan's decision in the merger case has set the insurance men to thinking. After discussing the authorities bearing on the case, Justice Harlan deducted from his consideration of these precedents the following propositions as to the case in question:

"That although the act of Congress known as the anti-trust act has no reference to the mere manufacture and production of articles or commodities within the limits of the several States, it embraces and declares to be illegal every contract, combination or conspiracy, in whatever form or whatever nature and whoever may be the parties to it, which directly or necessarily operates in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States or with foreign nations.

"That the act is not limited to restraints of interstate and international trade or commerce that are unreasonable in their nature, but is directed against all direct restraints, reasonable or unreasonable, imposed by any combination, conspiracy or monopoly upon such trade or commerce.

"That combinations even among private manufacturers or dealers whereby interstate or international commerce is restrained are equally embraced by the act.

"That Congress has the power to establish rules by which interstate or international commerce shall be governed, and by the anti-trust act has prescribed the rule of free competition among those engaged in such commerce.

"That every combination or conspiracy which would extinguish competition between otherwise competing railroads engaged in interstate trade or commerce, and which would in that way restrain such trade or commerce, is made illegal by the act.

"That the natural effect of competition is to increase commerce, and an agreement, the direct effect of which is to prevent this play of competition, restrains, instead of promotes, trade and commerce.

"That to vitiate a combination, such as the act of Congress condemns, it need not be shown that such combination in fact, results, or will result, in a total suppression of trade, or in a complete monopoly, but it is only essential to show that by its necessary operation it tends to restrain interstate or international trade or commerce, or tends to create a monopoly in such trade or commerce, and to deprive the public of the advantages that flow from free competition.

"That of the constitutional guarantee of liberty of contract does not prevent Congress from prescribing the rule of free competition for those engaged in interstate and international commerce.

Justice Harlan further said it was the intention of legislation of this character to prescribe a rule for interstate and international commerce which should prevent vexation by combination, conspiracies or monopolies which restrain commerce by destroying or restricting competition. Justice Harlan in his opinion did not confine himself (as seen by the above) to the strict consideration of the case at bar. Following his line of reasoning to a logical conclusion is what has set the insurance men to thinking. Anti-compact laws have been passed in many States and a deal of annoyance has been suffered and a great deal of money spent by insurance companies to protect themselves. In some few cases they have gone into court and secured relief; in others they have abandoned the States whose laws were obnoxious, but with this decision standing as the opinion of one of the last courts of resort, it looks as if the companies would be compelled to seek self-protection in some other manner than by rating bureaus, compacts or local bonds. The liability companies conference, the Plate Glass combine, the Burglary insurance pool are all in danger of the first attack. It was ruled in a Kansas court that insurance commerce and the insurance companies are now subject to more bedevilment at the hands of the irresponsible class of mendacious camp followers of corporations than heretofore. It begins to look now as if the only safe refuge is the Department of Commerce, which means national supervision.

The New Amsterdam Casualty Company shows in its annual statement a steady and solid growth. Its assets increase year by year, and its surplus to policyholders show the same steady ratio of gain. The reserves maintained by the New Amsterdam display the care and prudence with which this company provides for future contingencies. These reserves are much larger than is required by the law of the State of New York; the added amounts being placed among the liabilities in the statement. The company's invested assets are admirably placed in the very highest class of securities and its business methods invite the admiration of the most discerning critics. The fund which the company holds for the protection of its policy contracts are as follows: Cash capital, $314,400; reserves, $322,737.73; net surplus, $75,358.64; making a total of $712,469.37.

Mr. F. B. Lloyd is the General Agent for the Coast, and by persistent effort and tireless energy has placed the New Amsterdam in the proud position it now holds with the leading insurers of this section.

Political

The Republicans of California have practically begun the Presidential campaign of 1904. Their State Central Committee has met and decided upon the State Convention to elect delegates at large for May 18, 1904, and has unanimously indorsed Roosevelt for the Presidential nomination. To the readers of this column there is nothing but confirmatory news in all that of what has been predicted in this department of the News Letter for months. The appearance of Ruef as a delegate or member of the Central Committee holding the proxy of Supervisor Rea was also in confirmation of the statement that I have several times made, that everything is harmonious in the Republican ranks, and that all factions in the late Mayoralty contest will stand together when it comes to electing a President. Just what that means in strengthening the ticket, those who have studied the figures of the recent elections in this city will have but little trouble in guessing. It ought to give Roosevelt a good majority in this city, even if some stronger man than Hearst is nominated.

Speaking of Hearst reminds me that he evidently is feeling the strenuousness of his campaign in that most sensitive of all nerves, his pocket nerve. The Examiner is cutting down expenses in wonderful shape. Eight members of the city editor's force alone have been discharged lately, and wages of copy readers, etc., have been reduced. The Examiner now has a smaller force by far doing its local work than any of the big dailies, which probably accounts for the fact that it is able to give so much more space to republishing old stories about Hearst's enemies. The New York Evening Post evidently touched a tender spot when in an editorial denouncing the infamy of the possible nomination of Hearst, it called attention to the Congressional Record, and the date on which it contained Grove L. Johnson's speech in Congress showing up the editor's private record, which Judge Maguire defended, and thereby secured the support of Hearst for his candidacy for Governor and his subsequent defeat, for it is well to remember that the Examiner has not supported a successful candidate for an office since the time when the mind of man runneth not to the contrary. It is well to recollect that fact, because some timid people with poor memories are likely to fancy that his newspapers can carry Hearst into the White House. If they do, they will have done more for their owner by far, notwithstanding his unsavory record, than they were able to do for any one else. In this State the Examiner fought Stephen M. White for the Senate, and he was elected with ease. It did not want Budd for Governor and he was nominated and elected. It wanted Bryan, and he was the worse beaten man who ever ran for the Presidency (the Journal, by the way, helping him in New York.) It nominated Maguire for Governor, and although he had been repeatedly elected to Congress from this city, and was considered a very able man, he was the worse beaten man who ever ran for Governor, although very few people north of the Tehachapi had ever heard of his opponent before he was nominated. It supported Bryan again, and McKinley carried San Francisco. It fought Lane for Governor and he carried San Francisco by ten thousand votes, and was nearly elected. It supported Lane for Mayor, and he did not carry a precinct in the city. Its record of failures nearly equals that of the Los Angeles Times, which always supports on principle the candidate who is sure to be defeated, and if there is any doubt on the subject, nominates a weak one of its own and supports him. "But did he not carry his Congressional district by a big majority?" some one will ask. "Yes. He secured a certain Democratic district from Tammany, one that never went Republican by any chance, and by spending enormous sums of money and importing ex-vice-President Stevenson from Illinois and ex-Governor Budd from California, he managed to get a large vote, but no larger than Timothy D. Sullivan got in another Tammany district with none of the extraordinary expenditures and assistants. Let it never be forgotten that politically in his papers and personally, William Randolph Hearst has always been a failure.

If the Democrats should conclude to follow the example of the Republicans and allow each district to elect its own delegates to St. Louis, the State Convention only electing the delegates at large, Mr. Hearst will not have a solid delegation by any means from California. He will undoubtedly get the votes of this city, both at St. Louis and Sacramento, which latter may give him the delegates at large, as the city will be much stronger in the Democratic convention based on the Gubernatorial vote than it will be in the Republican; but that fact will not overcome the country opposition, and several of the Congressional district delegates would be anti-Hearst if their districts elected them.

* * *

The Second Congressional District is still looking for a candidate for the Republican nomination, and the latest name to be suggested is that of George A. Stutevant, at present Deputy Attorney General, who is one of the best-known citizens of Mendocino County, which he represented in the Legislature in the 29th session, and of which he was afterwards the District Attorney. Though the county is Democratic, Stutevant has always carried it, when he ran for anything, and his friends say he can be elected now. Bell only beat Coombs 335 votes, and of that majority 172 came from Mendocino County, and 182 from Sacramento, where Stutevant is also well known and has many friends. Stutevant is reluctant to leave his present place, but if he were nominated, no doubt he would accept the nomination, and those who know him best think he would give Bell a warm fight.

Speaking of the Second Congressional District naturally suggests the name of Duncan McKinley, who has been mentioned for the Republican nomination also, and who has just been appointed first assistant United States District Attorney. This promotion, which is the result of the recent death of E. J. Banning, has been followed by the promotion of Benjamin McKinley to the place Duncan formerly occupied, and the appointment of Charles M. Fickert to the place of Benjamin. For this last appointment Senator Bard is said to be more or less responsible, and thereby has gotten himself into a row with Congressman MacLachlin, who claims that Bard promised to support Luther Brown of Los Angeles, who for years has been MacLachlin's manager, politically, and who has been trying to break into some appointment ever since he passed the bar a few years ago. Luther wanted to be a deputy in the office of Attorney-General Webb, but that official could not see where he could place him. When Banning died he at once through MacLachlin applied for the new place thus created in the United States District Attorney's office in this city. He is now out for Bard with a knife, and if necessary to defeat him for the Senate may announce himself as a candidate for the Senate in opposition to the Ventura statesman. Bard, by the way, has written to his friends at home authorizing them to get up a Bard club, but not subscribing to its funds apparently. The Bardites have accordingly met and nominated H. S. Snow as their candidate for the Republican nomination for the Assembly, in opposition to Major Driffle. Those who know the two men think the Major has a cinch to win out. One thing is certain, if either Driffle or Snow is elected, Ventura is likely to have a member who can at least introduce one bill and move to adjourn, which is more than can be said of her past Senator and Assemblyman.

Metcalf wants to go to the National Convention if he can get there without any hard fight for the position of delegate at large. His candidacy means that George C. Pardee will not go, because while Alameda usually gets the earth, it is hardly likely she will be able to get half the delegates at large when there are so many aspirants for the honor from the rest of the State. Charley Spear is to manage the fight of the Governor for the place, and presumably brother-in-law Rooney will do all he can to help out, too.

Both ex-Senator Bulla and ex-Judge McKinley of Los Angeles were in the city last week attending the meeting of the State Republican committee. They are the two rivals for the position of delegate at large to the National Convention from the South, and both think they will win out. The contest is going to be the most interesting of any in the State in connection with the election of delegates to the State Convention, as it means much in its effect on the Senatorial Candidacy of Senator Bard. If Bulla goes down, ditto Bard.

Miss Helpful—So, you know all about "first aid to the injured," hey? What would you do if a man were shot out in front of this hotel? Sagebrush Ben—Ride like the wind arter the coyote wot done the shutin', mum! I reckon I knows!

A bright little boy in West Philadelphia, who had visited a school attended by an elder brother, came home in great excitement to inform his mother that he had learned lots of things. "What is one, dear?" asked the fond mother. "I learned in the 'rithmetic class that the square of the base of the perpendicular of a right-handed triangle is equal to the sum of the hippopotamus."

And here is the other: "Pa!" "Well?" "Is a vessel a boat?" "Yes." "Pa." "What is it?" "What kind of a boat is a blood vessel?" "It is a life-boat, my son; now run away and play."

"Some of my family have been very long-lived," said the woman in the cerise panne hat. "My father died at forty, but one of my grandfathers lived to be ninety-eight." "Which grandfather was that?" asked the white beaver. "Oh," said the lady in cerise, "that was my grandfather by my first husband."

Wes Ruddles spent last Sunday in this burg, sparking around with several of our fairest. We know of three separate and distinct personages that he called on, and if this thing keeps up some of our boys will be out in the cold completely. There is something about Wes that seems hard to resist.

The Valet—I can't seem to keep that crease in your trousers, sir. Fiddleton—Well, you know, James, she's a pretty heavy girl.—Life.

Cobwigger—Did the women's clubs have a harmonious convention? Merritt—No. The only time they got together was when they were having their pictures taken.

Maisie—Did you convince her that she was wrong. Daisy—No; but I made her admit it.

My daughter asked the count To be her valentine.

He first asked the amount Of money that was mine.

And then he whispered yes, So now I'm feeling blue. It's up to me, I guess, To pay the postage due.

The outlook is gloomy for the American boy. With a Brooklyn school teacher's pronouncement in favor of spanking with a rubber hose comes the news that all the shingle mills in Wisconsin are starting up again.

"I have carefully studied the matter, and it seems to me that we are fitted for each other." She gazed up at him with her large dark eyes. "Explain yourself," she said. "Simply this," he replied, "looking at the matter as we should in the strictly scientific sense of the word. You are light, and I am dark. You are short and I am tall. You are sprightly, vivacious. I am somewhat sober and phlegmatic. In fact, we are opposites, and opposites should marry." "Yes," she said, "opposites except in one respect, but that is enough. I cannot marry you." "In what respect do you mean?" he asked, almost fiercely. She smiled. "You are like me in this," she said. "I never could earn my own living."—Life.

Citizen Train used to tell of a little Union Square girl to whom he once gave a rich cake. She ate it and asked for another. "I'd like to give you another," said the old man, "but it would make you sick." "Give it to me anyway," said the little girl. "At the dispensary I can get medicine for nothing."

"I advise you to take this poem to a chiropodist," said the editor in a kindly tone. "Because why?" queried he of the uncut hair. "Its feet need attention," replied the editor.

"Whew! but it seems good to get near a radiator!" exclaimed a man the other day as he walked into the office of a friend. "Warm enough now?" inquired his friends a few moments later. "Yes, all right now, but I was about frozen when I came in her," said he, still spreading his hands above the gilded pipes. "That's funny," said the other; "there isn't a bit of heat in that radiator. We've been using the furnace this year."

Capt. Charles L. Potter, the United States engineer in Duluth, was sitting at his desk busy with some figures a day or two ago when he heard a hollow, sepulchral voice in the room. He glanced around through curiosity, and, observing that the doors were closed and he was entirely alone, he became doubly interested. Again he heard the voice. It sounded like that of some invisible being trying to attract attention. The voice seemed to come from behind his desk, and at others seemed almost at his elbow. The captain located the general direction from which the voice was coming, and kept crowding his left ear that way. He listened intently, and the hollow, distant, tomblike voice was heard to say: "Please hang up your receiver." Then the mystery was cleared up. Captain Potter smiled and hung up the receiver of the desk telephone which he had accidentally left off the hook, and proceeded with his labors.

"When I say good-bye to you this evening," said Mr. Slowman, "do you think it would be proper for me to place one reverent kiss upon your fair hand?" "Well," she replied, coquettishly, "I would consider it decidedly out of place."

Ivan the Terrible

Richard Mansfield is said to have struck a gold mine in his new play of "Ivan the Terrible," and as this is to be produced in San Francisco the coming season, I may be pardoned if I give just enough of the plot to make it interesting to the readers of the News Letter:

The tragedy of "Ivan the Terrible," the first of a trilogy written about 1865 by Count Alexis Tolstoi, deals with the death of Ivan Vassilyevich, surnamed "The Terrible," and the rise to power of Boris Godunoff.

The interest of the tragedy may be said to be fairly divided between the Tzar Ivan and Boris Godunoff. In order to comprehend the remarkable character of Ivan, it must be remembered that in his boyhood he was neglected, maltreated and even insulted by the Shuiskis, who directed and controlled the oligarchs.

Men to whom Ivan showed attachment were imprisoned or put to death, and he lived, as it were, alone in the palace, neglected and harassed. The plan was to stunt his intellectual growth to such a degree that he would be incapable of rule.

Meanwhile the boy, impressionable and passionate, had great natural gifts; he read all the books that were accessible: The Bible, "Sacred History," "Fathers of the Church," "Russian Chronicles," and "The History of the Roman Empire, Eastern and Western." Ivan was self-educated.

The Shuiskis, who hesitated at nothing in seizing power and holding it, began by poisoning Ivan's mother. Having gained possession of the boy, they did everything to deform him morally. Ivan himself has left a vivid picture of what he endured in childhood.

The evil spirit of the Shuiskis roused terrible hatred in Ivan, and he later paid his enemies in kind and with overflowing measure. Ivan, who had sought everywhere in books for reasons to strengthen his position, resolved with all the vividness of his boyish enthusiasm to become in Moscow what David and Solomon had been in Jerusalem; what Augustus had been in Rome, and the first Christian Emperor in Constantinople.

He finally revolted and destroyed the power of the Glinskis and the Shuiskis, and founded the Oprichniks, a body of men organized by Ivan for his own special service. Hereafter Ivan ruled with an iron hand. Ivan died in 1584.

Concerning the events dealt with in the tragedy of Ivan's death, and the appearance of Ivan at that time, the following may be of interest:

"Ivan, in gloomy despair, summoned a council, declared that he wished to enter a monastery, and ordered them to proceed to the choice of another Tzar. Yielding, however, to the repeated prayers of the Boyars, he consented to remain upon the throne.

"Losing his possessions one after another, threatened on every side by enemies, Ivan was cruelly stricken; his tortured feelings were reflected in his manner and in his exterior. He had become careless in dress, his lofty stature was bent, his eyes had grown dim, his lower jaw dropped as in advanced age and only in the presence of others did he constrain himself, stand proudly erect, and look with suspicion on those around him to find if any man noted the decline of his spirits. In those moments he was still more terrible than in the days of his grandeur. Never before had Moscow been under such pressure of despondency and fear."

The historian states elsewhere that "Ivan's face had grown greatly old, the furrows had sunken deeper, on his head there remained but little hair, 'his beard had fallen out altogether.'"

Boris Fyodorovich (Godunoff) at this period had risen with rapidity. He was the brother-in-law of the Tzarevitch, whom his sister Irina had married. It is recounted that Ivan, wishing to show how near Godunoff and his daughter-in-law were to his heart, raised three fingers, and counting them with the other hand, said: "This is Fyodor (his son), this is Irina, this is Boris, and as it would be equally painful to my hand whichever of three fingers were cut off, so would it be grievous to my heart to lose any one of these beloved."

Godunoff is described as "modest, cordial to everyone, temperate in speech, and his bearing grave and dignified. He was, however, utterly false, unscrupulous and overwhelmingly ambitious."

The Tzarevitch Fyodor, or Feodor, at this time had been married two years, but he was a weakling, and looked more like a woman than a man. His expression was puerile. In stature he was small; his constitution feeble; his face pale. He smiled continually, and looked timid and frightened. Ivan remarked of him: "Fyodor should have been born a sacristian, not a Tzarevitch."

The play is given in five acts, and the scenery is said to be magnificent and sumptuous to a degree. The Imperial Regalia was designed by Tiffany. San Francisco may prepare for a great feast.

THE ASPEN TREE.

By Theodosia Garrison

The little aspen tree stands high
 Upon the hill that guards the lane;
 Her leaves are green as emeralds,
 Her prattle is like dancing rain;
 She gossips to the wind, the sky,
 And we are comrades, she and I.

I climb the hill at evenfall;
 She stands so high she may look down
 And whisper me if you have turned
 The winding highway from the town,
 And in the wind's arm bend to see
 And murmur that you haste to me.

And with her hundred voices tell
 Each step you take to reach my side,
 And laugh in merry mockery,
 Pretend to scold and weep and chide,
 And stand a moment mute in grief
 Then laugh with every rustling leaf.

And when at last you take my hands
 And call my name in mimicry,
 She chatters it a dozen times,
 And then, in gay and elfish glee,
 Attunes her happy leaves to this—
 The lisping cadence of a kiss.

GENIUS.

What seest thou on yonder desert plain,
 Large, vague and void?
 I see a city full of flickering streets;
 I hear the hum of myriad engine-beats.
 What seest thou?
 I see a desert plain,
 Large, vague and void.

What seest thou in yonder human face,
 Pale, frail and small?
 I see a soul by tragedy worn thin;
 I read a page of poetry and of sin.
 What seest thou?
 I see a human face,
 Pale, frail and small.

What seest thou at yonder dim cross-roads
 Beside that shuttered inn?
 Untraveled Possibility,
 The inn of splendid Mystery.
 What seest thou?
 I see the dim cross-roads
 Beside a shuttered inn.

A Pumpkin-Colored Presidential Impossibility

An open letter to Mr. M. F. Tarpey, B. D. Murphy, W. H. Alford, Ben F. Geis, A. Caminetti, Frank Freeman, James Van Dyke, James H. Budd, James G. Maguire and M. F. Cochrane:

The Examiner of Sunday, March 20th, makes the statement in scarehead that you endorse the candidacy for President of William Randolph Hearst. Glancing over the list of names as given above we discover that there are some of you men of family and reputation. You are not all of you lost to the sense of shame; you are not all of you attorneys hired by the year to advocate certain ideas. You are not all of you so lost to society that you have forgotten the name of mother or the influence of home. You are not all of you devoid of honor. Some of you may still have a lingering conception of honesty. Some of you may still believe that a man whom you would not introduce to your sister or your mother is not fit to be a candidate. Nay, that man is not even fit to be mentioned as a candidate. Such of you as may have been tricked and not bought to betray the Democratic Party may yet hesitate in disgracing the party and making a laughing stock of your State. Surely in your sober moments, when the glamour of gold is removed from your eyes your conscience speaks. To such of you the following is addressed, in the hope that that last little glimmer of honesty may be fanned into a blaze and that some honest soul will arise in Convention and prevent the awful stigma, consequent on the nomination of a social pariah, from settling on the nation and the party.

Republication from News Letter of May 2, 1903:

"W. R. Hearst, the 'Emperor Norton' of pumpkin colored journalism, has taken unto himself a wife, wherefor a yellow rash breaks out all over the first page of the Examiner, disclosing among other things a large portrait and carefully deodorized biography of the man that owns the newspaper. One of the basic principles of the Hearst idiotical policy is that all tidings in which the name of W. R. Hearst can be made conspicuous shall be broken to the public with a brass band. The Hearst policy reckons with names rather than events as news. For example: President Roosevelt, Pope Leo, King Edward—any of these is a news name. But in his own publications, W. R. Hearst is a name and one-half. When anything of a nature fit for publication happens to Hearst, his editors, knowing where their prosperity lies, get out Hearst editions. Some idea of the importance attached by Hearst to his wedding may be had through reading last Wednesday's Examiner, in which the account of the marriage in New York crowded the account of a local prize-fight into the inside pages. The only rivals that Hearst has in his own columns are prize-fights, and when a prize-fight is made to play a muted second fiddle in a Hearst paper, there is, indeed, as the Congressman from the redlight district of Gotham would say, 'something doing.'

"In order to see what is 'doing' in the case of Hearst, one never needs a field-glass. This much that has been said of many an honest, honorable gentleman may be said of Hearst: His life has been an open book. This much of Hearst, but no more. For the pages of his book are foul. That they have long been open, stinking under the nostrils of the people, is due not to Hearst's contempt for concealment, but to his petted aversion to the simplest decencies of civilization. His life is as spotted as the leopard—or the leper. And all the world has seen the spots. Where other men of fleshly viciousness have made some outward pretense at abiding by the common canons of decency, or have at least buried their heads ostrich fashion, Hearst has walked in the open, neck perpendicular, with the Scarlet Woman strutting by his side. No place has been so public, no community so modest, as to cause him to draw a veil over the painted features of his harlots.

"Born, as he was, to a fortune as great as his lust, bawds have fattened on Hearst as vultures fatten on plague spots. 'Woman' has meant 'meat' to W. R. Hearst, and his journeys through the world are marked by the slaughter houses he has left behind him. One of these stands to-day in the beautiful suburb of Sausalito, a monument to the strumpet that received a fortune, cash down, for removing her soiled person from the State of California. But all the money that all the humiliated relations of W. R. Hearst could ever pay would not make a clean man of him. To the core he is rotten. And the young woman that has had the misfortune to become his wife has my deepest sympathy.

"She—doubtless unwittingly—is being used in the biggest scheme of self-advertisement that ever was sprung by the Dr. Munyon of Newspaper Row. Hearst is just now employing every quack method known to dirty journalism and corrupt politics with the idea of making himself the Democratic candidate for the highest office in the gift of the people. And since all these United States of ours are not a single Hearst Tenderloin, the one thing on earth that can save him from overwhelming defeat at the polls is to miss the nomination. Hearst will be saved all right—but like many another fatted egoist he will take the pound of cure in preference to the ounce of prevention. And, like murderous cronies of his that were aided by his San Francisco newspaper in escaping prison stripes; cronies that hid behind a woman's skirts in dodging the wrath of a people—like them, W. R. Hearst seeks the shelter of a petticoat. He has married with the pitifully obvious intention of becoming politically respectabilized through his wife.

"'Bachelors are not in demand at the White House, especially a bachelor of taint,' said Hearst's political leg-lengtheners; 'so, Willie, you'd better get a wife.' And Willie got a wife—not a very difficult thing for a man of millions to do. And perhaps somewhere in the world there are mothers who, in behalf of their daughters, envy the bride of this young millionaire. But these mothers do not live in San Francisco, nor in any other place where the bridegroom is known to the bone.

"I cannot congratulate Mrs. William Randolph Hearst. I cannot even hope that the libertine whose name she bears will be less dishonorable as a husband than he has been as a journalist. Hearst's yellow streak is not confined to his journalism. He is taking this young girl abroad, perhaps to the very spots where in other years he lingered with his mistresses. W. R. Hearst is not a tactful man."

INCONSISTENT POLICE REGULATIONS.

The Board of Public Works, captained by the Mayor's brother, is busy persecuting the flower peddlers at Market and Kearny streets. Its policemen watch with keen eyes the men and boys who carry bloom-laden baskets up and down. If one of them halts for a moment inside the "dead line" of the curb or rests his basket on the sidewalk while he rubs his aching arms, off he goes in the patrol wagon. Meanwhile the Mayor has in his hands the ordinance, demanded by the whole community and passed by one vote short of unanimity, creating a free flower market at this point and elsewhere. Meanwhile and all the while the sidewalks of the wholesale district are piled high and wide with boxes, barrels and bales—so wide that a fat man must go to the cobbles for elbow room. All day and all night these goods lie on the sidewalks, and the Works Board's policemen and the Mayor's policemen watch with keen eyes—not to catch a merchant obstructing the footway, but to keep thieves from removing the obstructions. And this is the equal justice of the law as the Schmitz family sees it!

Two poverty-cursed Italian flower peddlers, arrested for momentary infraction of the Schmitz family's law as it runs in the latitude of Market and Kearny streets, asked a jury trial. A police court which belongs to the Mayor—or to the highest bidder when the Mayor is not using it—said that the jury was stuffed with members of a trade association closely allied with the Retail Florists' Association, and steered the case to a speedy conviction. On that same day the sidewalks in front of the stores kept by members of the Florists' Association were bordered on both sides by potted plants that stood there for hours. On that same day, as the day before, and as to-day, the sidewalks of Sansome, Battery, Front and a score of other busy down-town streets were in many places all but impassable by reason of goods stored there to save warehousing and re-handling. In fifty places we know of sidewalks in the wholesale district are blocked by piles of chain, rusting anchors, old engines and pumps, and giant blocks of coal and salt, that have stood there for years. There is no police court record for a year or more of an attempt to enforce the sidewalk law against these offenders. Not so long ago—and this is a case still closer in point—a saloon-keeper at Market and Geary streets piled his sidewalk high with empty whisky barrels, and before he could procure his own arrest and complete his scheme of self-advertisement, he was forced to bribe a policeman to escort him to the City Prison.

The discrimination against the flower vendors, with its flouting of a remarkably unanimous body of public sentiment, is just Schmitzism, that's all.

MASSIE-SPEAR.

Governor Pardee's pet, "Charley" Spear, keeps on getting himself and his master ill-spoken of. The latest unsavory mention of Spear comes in connection with a most cowardly assault upon J. A. Massie, an Oaklander who publishes a semi-occasional paper which he calls the "Arrow," and devotes largely to the exploitation of Spear's public and private record. He has printed in this sheet a variety of unpleasant charges against Spear. Among them was the accusation that the lusty Harbor Commissioner at one time used his aged father for a punching bag. On Spear's behalf the answer was: First, that he did not beat his father, and second, that he beat his father for improper conduct, including persistent crapulence. Besides parent-punching, editor Massie taxed Spear with a long list of personal and political shortcomings. Speaking with frankness about his predatory manipulation of the news-stand privilege in the interest of himself and an equally needy brother-in-law.

The editor of the Arrow has declared in print that soon after he began this torrid campaign, Spear first tried to buy him off, and failing, threatened him with legal proceedings and with personal violence. Last week, while Massie was waiting for a car near his Oakland home, a bunch of thugs took him unawares and were hammering him into a pulp when passersby ran to his rescue and the thumpers fled. One of them, it is said, left behind an umbrella with the letter "S" on the handle. Editor Massie says he did not recognize any of his assailants. Now there are not sufficient proofs to connect Spear personally with this outrage. True, we have the alleged threat of the Harbor Commissioner and the initial on the umbrella-handle, and the three-to-one feature of the assault which squares with Editor Massie's sizing-up of his parent-punching foe's courage. But these are mere circumstances. Massie must have better evidence than has been exposed before he can arrest Spear, take him into a police court and seek to punish him for an act unquestionably murderous in its intent. There is no disguising the fact that the purpose of the three thugs was to break the keen point of the Arrow, and put its publisher out of the business of digging up the records of public officials and others. Quite possibly Massie has learned enough about the police court pull of men like Spear—supposing that it was Spear who engineered the assault—to make him appreciate the uselessness of looking for justice and protection from that quarter. That he has reason to fear a repetition of the outrage is shown by his course in providing himself with a weapon and a husky bodyguard. He will do well to walk in the middle of the street o' nights, revolver in hand, climb his door-step backward, to refrain from sitting between a window and a light, and to let his household cat sample the morning's milk first. These and other like precautions conduce to longevity in editors addicted to writing the truth.

It does not matter who actually assaulted Massie. What does matter is that this crime if completed would have inured to the benefit and to the vast relief of Spear. Since this attempt, people who had heretofore given little heed to Massie's charges, have been looking up Spear's record for themselves and are beginning to understand why he does not criminally prosecute Massie and why an attempt should have been made to silence the editor with bludgeon and slung-shot.

Spear has done infinite harm to Governor Pardee's administration, and as yet there has been no sign that Pardee disapproves of his pet's attitude toward the game of "graft" as it is played on the waterfront.

The latest appreciation of the Spear character is the immense sign in blue and white that disgraces the front of the ferry building facing the bay. Does the State receive pay for this disfigurement? We shall have more to say about this infliction on good taste next week.

Spear has soiled the political garments of Pardee, and has put dirt on his hands. Let the Governor look to it, or the stain may turn to crimson.

BEAUTIFYING OF A CITY.

A note of hopefulness is sounded by a club of Berkeley citizens who purpose, among other things to keep unsightly buildings out of the district to which their activities are devoted, and in which their homes and their interests lie. They are fortunate in having a distinct natural beauty of foothill slopes, of trees native to the soil, and of view to inspire the efforts of their architects and builders. What the club may do to keep the charm of its section unspoiled by the apostles of ugliness in architecture must be done quietly and privately, there being no law to prevent a man from parading his bad taste when he builds. It must operate by a most delicate use of moral suasion, proceeding along educative lines to reform and to elevate. That it has at least made a sound beginning is evidenced by the fact that the opening of its campaign for artistic houses and picturesque streets is the opening of a library for the dissemination among home builders of ideas and information touching house-designing, gardening and the like. We commend this movement right heartily and trust that it may not fail of early and satisfying results.

Here in San Francisco there is great need of some such movement. We have an organization of energetic women, the Outdoor Art League, whose object it is to do what it can toward the beautifying of a city most picturesque in its site, but hideously ugly in the laying out of its streets and in the building of most of its houses. The Berkeley Club's work is wholly constructive and restrictive, inasmuch as most of its homes are yet to be built; over here in San Francisco the mischief has been done—was done years ago when such architects as we had appear to have been men of no taste at all, utterly without ideals or conceptions of grace and beauty. One might think that the designers of a quarter century ago who filled the fair valleys and terraced the noble hillsides of San Francisco, with rows on rows of ugly dwellings reproduced their plans by stencil. The result as we see it to-day, is a maddening monotony of design and construction, as if the families of that day demanded of their architects houses exactly like those of their neighbors. In that and the preceding period it seems to have the fundamental idea in laying out streets to make them straight—nothing else mattered. And the result of that is a town like a checkerboard, except for the redeeming diagonal of Market street. The Outdoor Art League will not expect to execute any such large order as to re-make the city map, blotting out painful rectangularity and replacing it with pleasing curves, but it promises much in the way of softening harsh outlines. No club, no association of architects leagued together for the combining of the aesthetic with the utilitarian could hope to induce owners to tear down revenue-yielding properties merely because they are ugly, but good can be done by harmony of purpose and unity of action, just as it is being done spasmodically and sporadically by individual owners and designers. A few of those who build houses to sell or to rent have found that an artistic home does not cost appreciably more than an ugly one, and that it sells better and rents better. Thanks to this, we are beginning to have in the outlying districts modest homes with pleasing and distinctive exteriors and interiors arranged for effect as well as for comfort.

Let us hope that there will be some vigorous movement here along the lines marked out by the Berkeley beautifiers.

VERTICAL HANDWRITING.

The News Letter's argument against vertical handwriting has aroused the attention of businessmen of San Francisco, and it is for them to urge the School Board to discard the present system of vertical penmanship. As an illustration of the dangers of vertical writing the News Letter has but to recite one of many more or less similar incidents of recent transpiring: Not many evenings ago the "copy" in the vertical handwriting of a class of boys in the night High School was handed in to the teacher for inspection. At the bottom of the page of one of the specimens was written, "turn this over and see." Naturally the teacher did as bidden, but only to find a sentence that was neither elegant nor decent. The matter was referred to the Superintendent, and he quickly devised a plan to detect the evil-doer. A teacher was detailed, after a day or two; to dictate sentences to the same class, and to so adroitly employ the words "turn," "this," "over," "and," "see," in different places in the construction of the several sentences that the offender would not have the slightest suspicion of what was being done. The several copies were then handed to the teacher, which is customary, and at once the specimens were submitted to the teachers in groups to compare the offending words with the same words in the "adroitly" dictated sentences. There was no doubt about the detection of the guilty boy, it was supposed, but to the humiliation of the whole corps of teachers, they found they had taught the "vertical system" too well, for so uniform was the handwriting on all the specimens, and so completely had "verticalism" covered up the individualism and characteristics of the several pupils that the argus eyes and insulted dignity of some twenty-five teachers failed utterly to so much as find a trace that would even lead to a suspicion as to who was the guilty boy. Certainly an educational system that encourages the unfoldment of the worst nature of boys by forcing them to use tools of treachery and low cunning is not a very moral system.

But verticalism is doomed. Parents who have more than one child of school age are confronted with the painful fact that they cannot distinguish between their children's handwriting because their character, individuality and force of mentality are sacrificed to the mathematical precision of rigid perpendicular lines, which show no development of mind nor give any exhibition of their children's advancement in the art of expressing character in letters and written words. The vertical system to the pupil is as the theodolite is to the surveyor. Both mark accurate lines, but the lines do not indicate who made them.

On one page the Examiner roasts the Police Department because policemen are not to be found on every block where a crime is committed. On another page it roasts the Chief of Police for asking the Supervisors to give him more men. If the force is increased the Examiner will say it caused it by its yellow tales of crime; if it is not increased, the Examiner will boast it prevented the increase by proving there are enough policemen. Hearst always plays both ends against the middle.

The Police Judges should be pardoned for all their sins, if they only soak it to those dog-catchers who stole the coach-dog of an army officer. The dog-catcher is probably a necessary evil, but, on general principles we are against him.

Judge Kerrigan now has a magnificent opportunity to make himself popular. All he has to do is to throw the search-light on the Perrys and the Nagles.

An oyster digger has sued the Oyster Diggers' Union for damages. They caused his discharge because he dug up too many oysters, thereby making the other fellows look like small fry. Any intelligent jury will give the plaintiff damages in this case. What does all this cry of prosperity amount to, if we are to be deprived of our daily oyster?

Gavin McNab appears as a director in a million-dollar investment company. Abe Ruef is rich; Chris Buckley is a retired capitalist; Sam Rainey left a fortune. Politics pays.

Radium has gone up in price a couple of million dollars a pound. This proves again that the poor man has no show. Hearst should sue the radium trust.

Dr. Frank Blaisdell will deliver a free Lane lecture on "The Relations of Insects to Man." We always thought the California flea was some kind of a poor relation, because of his insistence on free lunches. This lecture will probably prove the theory.

Scientists say the fatal sleeping sickness, now prevalent in Africa, is caused by a fly. The owners of the shanties on lower Market street must have been bitten by this bird.

Supervisor Lunstedt says Ruef forced him to vote to sustain the Mayor's veto by threats against the Supervisor's saloon license. Bent and Alpers, also saloon men, voted with the Mayor. Why shouldn't they? That's what they are there for. Why elect saloon keepers as Supervisors, if you intend to complain of their actions?

Judge Coffey refuses to permit the lawyers to divide the dollars of Mrs. Moxey among themselves. He found her incompetent, after trial, and now that she wants to give away her wealth to the attorneys the Judge is sure she needs a guardian. The lawyers should take the case into Judge Troutt's court. He is so easy.

A double-jointed wife was sent up for thirty days by a Police Judge last week for having beaten her poor, little, inoffensive husband. We feared it would come to this. The emancipation of women is not without its danger to the lord of the universe.

FINANCIAL

The Jumper Losing Ground.

We are in receipt of a report of the annual meeting of the Jumper Gold Syndicate held recently in Glasgow. The chairman's statement was not quite so cheerful as those in years gone, the returns for the year being insufficient to warrant the payment of the customary dividend, which will disappoint a great many shareholders of small means. The reason assigned for the decreased income during the past twelve months is the heavy expenditure of money required to re-timber caved ground, and to meet other exigencies liable to occur at any moment in the mining industry. An attempt was made by some one present to shoulder the responsibility of the decreased revenue upon the new superintendent, but this could only emanate from an anxious shareholder who never saw a mine in his life. There are few better mining men on the Coast than the superintendent now in charge of the Jumper mine, and the shareholders can depend upon it that while he retains the position he will be serving their interests faithfully and not his own. With a lower grade of ore and a heavy expenditure in the way of repairs and improvements, too much ought not to be expected in the way of clear profits. The Jumper people have had too good a proposition from the first. A continuous run of dividends on a comparatively small investment has unfitted them for the worry and expense encountered in the ordinary course of mining. During the meeting the subject of the £20,000 recovered in the settlement with the former manager came up. A shareholder wanted to know in whose name it stood, and was practically told it was none of his business, and furthermore that it could not be appropriated as surplus funds of the company for dividends, legal advice having been obtained upon that point. It was developed, however, that it cost the company no less than £1937 5s. 3d. to effect this settlement, and the secretary, named Parker, took quite an injured tone when explaining the hard trip he had to California and back upon an allowance of $26 a day in round numbers, his salary running on all the same for the two months he was away from his desk in Glasgow. The election at the close of the meeting resulted in the return of the old Board.

Thieves Now Rule the Roost.

There is a good deal of work going on just now in the different mining camps throughout the State by individuals who, as a rule, are possessed of small means, and it is pleasant to be able to say that in the majority of instances, with much success. This is the way to develop the mineral resources of the State, by opening up a prospect to a point where the enterprising owner is in a position to go to his friends, possibly no better off financially than himself, and get them to come in and assist in taking out enough money in a small way to make the necessary showing which will appeal to the man of capital as an opportunity for investment worthy of investigation. The day for the promotion of old-time shells with a capitalization of millions is gone by. People are not to be lured into wild-cat propositions, which enrich the promoter, on statements regarding to prospects which would prove to be comparatively worthless upon examination by some practical man who knows his business. The swindlers who have been reaping a golden harvest of late by spreading broadcast the most infamous lies in regard to mining values have practically killed the goose that laid the golden egg. They have raked every financial community within the borders of the United States as with a fine comb, and corraled enough gold to keep them in easy circumstances for many a year to come. Not a dollar of this money will ever be recovered by process of law, the courts in nearly every case favoring the swindler. This is the reason that persons of this class have managed to keep out of jail. Quite a number of them have been rounded up of late, but that is all it has amounted to so far. In every case the wily individuals have managed to escape at some convenient juncture when the bars were let down. This will continue until the legitimate mining interests combine together with the officials of mining associations and mining bureaus to effect a radical change in the way the law is now administered in dealing with swindlers of the kind, all working in a united effort to see justice done and the industry cleared of a class of petty larcenists who have already brought it to the point of ruin.

A Queer Transaction.

The Plumas Gold Mining Company, Limited, a 5,000,000 share concern financed in New York, is now an object of interest to certain creditors in this city, many of whom helped to fit out the proposition with plant valued at $40,000. All of this plant and the mine with its millions of capital in shares, has, it is said, passed out of the ownership of the shareholders, Eastern people being the chief sufferers as usual, upon the foreclosure of a contractor's lien for something like $6,000. Between the creditors in this city and those in Plumas County, there is likely to be quite a mix-up in the segregation of the several interests, and it is just probable there will be a strong effort made to throw the mining company into involuntary bankruptcy. It certainly does seem rather a strange proposition on its face that any company should surrender a property equipped like this one is without an attempt to protect themselves and for a bagatelle at that.

Improvements on the Comstock.

The Pine-St. market continues quiet, with prices strong at the North-end where Ophir is still opening out upon a vein of high-grade ore. The drainage operations at this end will soon be under way again, when it will be possible to start the work of explorations in the deep levels which have been under water for so many years past. About the same time all will be ready at the Ward shaft to make the connections with the Sutro Tunnel system of drifts, preparatory to the installation of a pumping plant at that point to handle the water in the South-end mines. Part of the new plan of work on the Comstock will be the introduction of an electric trolley system in the Sutro Tunnel, for the purpose of handling the ores of Savage and other mines. These will be run out of the tunnel to a reduction plant about to be erected in the near future.

The State Treasury is richer by $10,000 this week by the filing of articles of incorporation of the great Pacific Steel Corporation, about to start up at San Diego, with its capital of $100,000,000. The officers just elected at a recent meeting of its directors are headed by General Harrison Gray Otis of Los Angeles, president. The others are in point of order: C. W. French of Cleveland, Ohio, chairman of the board of directors; A. A. Pudman, Cleveland, Ohio, vice-president; V. A. Dehnel, Cleveland, Ohio, secretary; George W. Fishburn, San Diego, general counsel; Willard Fuller, Cleveland, Ohio, general manager. The Union Trust Company of Pittsburg, as fiscal agent, will attend to the financing of the steel plant.

The proceedings of the twelfth annual convention of the California Miners' Association have just been published in pamphlet form, and embodied in this report are a number of papers read before the convention by some of the leading men connected with the various branches of the mining industry. Among the leading papers which will be found in extenso are "The Cyaniding of Gold Bearing Sulphurets," by Prof. S. B. Christy; "The Storage of Waste Waters for Mining Purposes," by Mark B. Kerr; "The Use of Fuel Oil in Chlorination"; "The Development of Abandoned Mines," John B. Tregloan, and "Economy in Compressed Air Mining," by Edward A. Rix.

The market for local stocks and bonds has been quiet during the past week, and the volume of sales has been small. In the matter of prices, bonds were firmly held for all the better class. In shares, Spring Valley was steady. The S. F. Gas and Electric has been a shade firmer, which serves to stimulate short selling, which seems to be going on now on quite an extensive scale. For the man with money who can stand a few turns of the screw on the up-grade without weakening or going under, shorting this stock is the proper thing. It is only a matter of time until prices in this column get on the toboggan. Sugars hold firm, with a strong undertone in Alaska Packers.

Never a week passes without the announcement of a license having been granted to some new banking institution, the most of which are noticeable more particularly by the small amount of cash which figures in their make-up. This unsatisfactory condition of affairs is due entirely to the opportunity offered by the abrogation of the Banking Commission which was deemed necessary in order to remove an erring official. If trouble does not follow the out-crop of these mushroom concerns it will be an everlasting wonder.

The new mining camp of Gold Field, Nevada, has hardly made its bow to the public before the law courts of the State are brought to take cognizance of its existence by a suit brought to oust one set of mine locators by establishing the rights of other locators who now hold the ground with rifles. This looks like business. Nothing like a little gun play and a few law suits to boom either a mine or a camp.

LIBRARY TABLE

Truth or Fiction. Some time ago a correspondent of the News Letter, signing himself "Bec-de-Fer," in an article entitled "Witless Willie," gave a mere "aperçu" of a couple of volumes issued from the press of "Fischer's Foreign Letters, Inc.," under the title of "Private Lives of William II and his Consort and Secret History of the Court of Berlin."

"Bec de Fer," it seems did but touch on the contents lightly. He barely skimmed the surface. These volumes are a scathing rebuke of the sovereign now ruling over Germany, and these memoirs, ostensibly written by a woman, the Countess of Eppinghoven, make no claim to revelations in the realm of higher politics; they give a side-light more or less strong on subjects closely akin to higher statecraft.

The mild and tearful frau of the Reise-Kaiser is very aptly described, and the various characteristics that make her more fit to be the housewife of a "bauer" than an Emperor are clearly set forth. The Empress emerges from the hands of the Countess scathless as regards her fine womanliness. She is shown up as a simple German woman, who is at all times supremely unhappy.

So much for the consort. But what can we say of the Emperor. His character in every shade is laid before us. We have our doubts as to the identity of the author. We do not believe that any woman wrote these memoirs, and if it was a woman, she certainly missed her vocation. The style is more that of a man. A man that is conversant with his subject, and if we may hazard a guess, we will say that Mr. Fischer wrote the memoirs of the fair Countess from a transcript of the notes of some clever "kammerdiener."

Bereft of the artificial atmosphere that has been built "around the All Highest" by such writers as Poultney Bigelow (we have no reason to believe that the Contezza is lying), we must admit that the Emperor, as a mere member of the human family, is a poor specimen of a man. He has, according to this chronicler, the usual flashes of genius that go with congenital insanity, and he has the incurbed brutality inherited from the great Frederic and his immediate ancestry. The same characteristics that prompted the aforesaid great man to hang the picture of his mistress in an outhouse, after having deified her on his palace walls, holds in William II. At least, so says the Countess. The books make good reading for those of us who believe in a more liberal form of Government, and who are not apologists for the gentleman who would calmly appropriate to the use of his wife's family the one hundred thousand dollars belonging to widows' and orphans' fund in his temporary keeping, and who when he is made to disgorge this, by the newspapers, plunges his hand into the Guelph fund and attempts to make this over to his and his family's use. The Countess leaves us a man unanointed, unprincipled, small in mind, a fraud, a libertine and a man capable of unlimited cruelty.

A man who has achieved his reputation as a musician by appropriating the fame rightly due to Count Moltke; a man who has achieved a reputation as an artist by paying some poor dramatist or dauber to do the work he may then claim as his. A man who employs a press agent to tell his people, and the world in general, what manner of Wunder Koenig he is, while he sits in the guard-room of a barracks and encourages weird tales of lust from young officers, and who in turn takes pride in telling a stronger and a dirtier story to overtop the last effort. Madam Von Eppinghoven, whoever she may be, has given us a rude expose, if it is true, and if it is not true, she has proven herself a clever writer of historical fiction.

Fischer's Foreign Letters, Inc. New York. Two volumes.

The Tariff Dictionary.

This is a half-crown book issued by Simpkin, Marshall & Co., of London, and is a handbook to the fiscal question as discussed in Great Britain at the present time. It appears to be a carefully prepared and useful little work for speakers, editors and others who are obliged to consider political subjects.

"Cap'n Eri" is by Joseph C. Lincoln, whose short stories in various magazines, relating to the New England Coast, have made his name familiar to readers of current magazine literature. The worthy Cap'n is one of those modern Americans of the David Harum variety whose sole object appears to be a continual attempt to maintain a standard of humor. In this particular case the Cap'n is sufficiently amusing and there is plenty of incident, besides a love story sufficient to make the book entirely interesting. The illustrations, which are better than the ordinary, are done by Charlotte Weber.

Published by A. S. Barnes & Co. New York.

Did you ever hear of Quelparte? I never did, but then, my geography was always limited. In the preface of the "Queen of Quelparte" we are informed that it is a province of Korea, in the Yellow Sea, but after taking in this fact, we do not feel much the wiser. At the most, this story (having the Chinese-Japanese war as a foundation), is a mixture of Cos-sacks, "Quelpartians," Russians, Japanese and Chinese, with a great deal of wild adventure, hair-breadth 'scapes, Russian intrigue, and Chinese queues, but coming as it does in the midst of the Russo-Japanese affair, it is bound to prove of interest to those who glory in tales of "war and the rumors of war."

Queen of Quelparte. Little, Brown & Co., price, $1.50.

The House of the Seven Gables.

"The House of the Seven Gables," brought out as one of the "New Pocket Edition Library," by John Lane, is "an old friend in a new dress." It is too well known to bear a lengthy criticism, but after a surfeit of the surface-skimming novels of these latter days, it doubly impresses its earnestness and imaginativeness upon us. The writer evidently felt the same subtle influence of atmosphere that characterizes Longfellow's poem of "Haunted Houses":

"Impalpable impressions on the air,

A sense of something moving to and fro."

And the lines:

"We have no title deeds to house or lands—

Owners and occupants of earlier dates,
From graves forgotten stretch their dusty hands,

And hold in mortmain still their old estates."

certainly coincide with Hawthorne's idea that old Matthew Maule haunted the site of his former home, and made the unlawful ownership of the "House of the Seven Gables" a dreaded burden, rather than an advantage.

"The House of Seven Gables," John Lane, price, 50 cents.

OBITUARY.

Adam Grant, one of the oldest and the most successful merchants of the Pacific Coast, passed away on last Monday at his home in this city, 1112 Bush street. Mr. Grant was a warm and consistent friend of the News Letter, and his demise was looked upon in this office as much of a personal blow. Mr. Grant was an enterprising citizen and his death is a distinct loss to the entire business community. He was born in Sutherlandshire, Scotland, in 1828. Adam Grant came to San Francisco at the time of the rush in 1849, and he immediately assumed a place as a factor in the community. As an instance of his rapid rise, the story is told that in his first employment his salary was fixed at fifty dollars a month, and that his employers, realizing his great capacity for work, increased it to two hundred and fifty dollars the second month. The life story of Adam Grant was one of success brought about by adherence to honest principles and by hard and unremitting labor. Mr. Grant died leaving several millions of dollars to his wife and one son who survive him. It may be said of him in all truth and earnestness—"A good man gone."

Mr. William R. Grace, one of the foremost of America's business men, died on last Sunday in New York. The immediate cause of his death was a relapse in pneumonia. Mr. Grace was the head of the mercantile firm of San Francisco known as William R. Grace & Co. Mr. Grace was a well-known politician as well as a business man, and he had at one time led the Independent Democrats in New York and become Mayor. At the time of his death, Mr. Grace was the President of several large banking institutions, and the head of the most important importing house in America.

William J. McMullin, Assistant General Passenger Agent of the California and Northwestern Railway, is dead. He died of heart failure. He was only forty-three at his demise, and he had acquired a wide repute as a capable traffic man.

TOWN CRIER

What have they done to the Russ,
And what have they done to the Jap?
Who is the worse off for all of the fuss,
And how does it matter a rap?
For the crash of the guns that resound o'er the deep
Are but lullaby murmurs that send us to sleep,
And the town of Port Arthur escapes pretty cheap—
In fact there is not a mishap.

Why do the infidels rage
And the people imagine vain things?
And what is the use of the newspaper page
And all of the nonsense it brings?
For there isn't a single report that is fair;
The Retvitzan was sunk, now she's under repair
If that's the right way to pronounce her, but there—
Poor Mercury's dropped both his wings.

For once the schemes of attorneys to defeat Justice have been foiled. Griffiths of Los Angeles will be obliged to serve his two years for assaulting his wife with a deadly weapon. The sentence is light, far too light, in fact, and yet there were to be found attorneys of some position and at least reputable, who prepared affidavits by means of which they expected to secure his release. Could there be a more disgustingly eloquent commentary upon the State of the California bar? Will Griffiths, therefore, serve his time? I trow not. He has money, and petition after petition will go up, backed by affidavits and doubtless by the certificates of physicians, supposedly reputable, but in reality ready to sell their medical opinions. In the meantime this brutal assailant of a woman is to be pampered up with every luxury and to receive treatment altogether superior to that of his fellow prisoners. One may smile at this hypocrisy, but it must not be forgotten it has to be paid for.

The inherent gentleness of the feminine disposition was shown lately in the case of a woman who, having a sick husband, took the opportunity of exercising her muscles on his bedridden body. So well and so strongly did she ply her athletic tasks that she reduced him to a state of collapse. When he was in this state she left him alone until he recovered a little, whereupon she renewed her calisthenics. The Judge sent her up for three months. The familiar lines should be altered to meet the occasion somewhat as follows:

"Oh, woman, in our hours of ease,
Uncertain, coy and hard to please;
But when misfortune lays us low,
A demon for a body blow."

An Indian tea was given at a private house this week, in which the participants dressed in Indian costume and were surrounded by Indian furniture and ornament. Society must be very hard up for amusement. As a substitute for a monkey dinner it may be argued that the Indian tea has its advantages, but as a means of entertainment it would appear to be of about the same grade as grinning through a horse-collar. To imitate savage customs is a curious way of inculcating refinement. The decadent French aristocracy used to pretend to be peasants, but such charming peasants were they that their manners actually shone all the brighter for their rustic dress. It is to be feared that the manners of our fashionables are inferior to those of Lo Ben.

The editor of the "Arrow," Oakland, has received a thrashing for publishing disagreeable things about Harbor Commissioner Charles L. Spear. The friends of this gentleman are acting in a time-honored fashion, but how about its effectiveness? Now that the editor has been satisfactorily beaten, it will be worthy of notice that the points at issue are whether Spear is a hoodlum; if he has been twice arrested for beating his father, and whether he is not an all round dishonest crook. I cannot see that a single one of these questions has been disposed of by beating the editor, and as a matter of fact, the docket containing his conviction for battery glares in unshaken security in spite of the beating of John A. Massie. I am sorry for Spear—his friends are such a reflection on him!

The criminals are escaping and the police and the judges dispute as to which of the departments the blame belongs. The police claim that they make the arrests; the judges complain that they do not have the proper testimony presented. I fancy the judges have the best of the argument. It is easy for the police to make a show of arresting their criminal friends and put in such a poor case that they must be acquitted. The judges on the other hand must convict if the proper evidence is forthcoming. At all events, the criminals are escaping, and the friends of the Mayor are no poorer for the fact.

"Microbes in the milk" was the complaint only a short time ago. Now the Health Office is about to make an inquiry with regard to fraudulently defective measures in which the milk is retailed. If the microbe question is still unsettled, the shortness of measure may be actually good for us. At any rate, the whole milk business is a nice commentary on the morals of the dairy people. Who would ever have imagined that association with the gentle cow should be so corrupting, and who was the bold man that whispered that cows had nothing to do with it?

A week or two ago I referred to the claim of the "sweet-pea girl" as being most ludicrous, and would not have imagined in spite of my knowledge of legal methods in this State that she would be able to secure any money. She has been granted alimony amounting to one hundred dollars a month, and her attorneys are to be allowed their fees. This opens up an unending vista of graft to unscrupulous women. All they have to do is to take advantage of a man's condition and make him marry. A keen lawyer and a sympathetic Judge will do the rest.

Four children abandoned by their parents in this city in one week testify to the rapidly growing unpopularity of the rising generation. Their actual advent is hemmed in with so many obstacles nowadays that but few survive their first trying experiences—what Mrs. Wilcox would call the "prenatal influences." Those who do see the light, however, so frighten their parents that the latter abandon them. Truly, a gift of the Lord.

The aged capitalist is a target for the aggressive female. There are several ways of getting at him. The massage artist has an opportunity of which she occasionally is able to take advantage. Thus in the Knauer case, which was settled by agreement last week, the massage widow is allowed thirty thousand dollars. From a small room and your ad. in the Bulletin to thirty thousand would be a good jump for most people.

SOCIETY

Dear Bessie: Don't you think we are going to end the season brilliantly? Two dances in Easter week and the promise of one over in Sausalito. To be sure, one of them is to be given by the younger set girls not yet out, and beaux to correspond, but it will be a fine affair all the same. Easter week is filling up; on Monday there are to be the two weddings, afternoon and evening; Tuesday night the members of Grace Church give a reception at Century Hall in honor of their new rector, Mr. Evans; Wednesday night is named for the Bachelor ball at the Palace; and on Friday the youngsters have their dance. So you see, the Easter season promises to be a gay one even though it may be short.

Ollie Palmer had a luncheon on Wednesday for Jessie Hobart Leonard, who is down here from Nevada on a visit to Mrs. Brownell; there were two "openings" on Thursday—the annual exhibition of the State Floral Society in the Ferry Building, and that of the Art Institute—but I shall have to tell you about them next week. Laura and Edna Hamilton give Frances Harris a luncheon to-day. Mrs. Sam Buckbee had a bridge party on Tuesday night, and Kate Voorhies Henry another; at Mabel Toy's card party in honor of Frances Harris and her futur, we played seven-handed euchre and had the jolliest kind of a time. Don't you remember what a wide swathe that Italian Prince, Louis of Savoy, cut at Burlingame when he was here some years ago? You can therefore be sure there is great glee manifested at the news that he is on his way here in command of a frigate; so then look out for good times on board; he does so love to entertain—at least he did.

May Burdge has joined the ranks of Easter brides, as she and Bernard Miller are to be united in wedlock on Easter Monday night. As I told you before, Mrs. Smith is making the most elaborate preparations for the event; the ceremony is to be performed at Arbor Villa, with only a few friends to witness it, but a grand reception will follow, which is to be something quite gorgeous. Pink and white are to be the colors, both in the decorations and the costumes worn by the bridal party. Winifred Burdge, as maid of honor, is to wear a gown of pale pink, and the attendant maids—eight in number—are to be gowned in white and carry bridesmaid's roses. Charley Gooding is to be Bernard's best man, and there will be eight groomsmen—or ushers, call them by either name. Edna Barry is, I hear, to be an April bride, her wedding with Philip Clay being named for then.

Florence Callaghan's wedding is to be a very quiet home one, as her mother's health is so uncertain. It will take place about the middle of the month. The marriage of Edith Findley and George Gardiner will not come off for some time yet. I have heard September or October named as the probable time, and it will be at Mrs. Findley's home over in Sausalito. Did I tell you that Bee Hooper is engaged to John Blanchard? And they say the wedding is to take place very soon.

The last was quite a week of surprises in the engagement line. First came that of Ruth McNutt and Lieutenant Lee, followed by Eleanor Warner's to Stuart Rawlings, which was formally made known at the pretty tea Mrs. Warner gave last Thursday for the recent bride, Mrs. Frank Wakefield, and Mrs. Frank Baldwin; and then a third was Bee's. And now comes what is not exactly a surprise, but a story that Kate Dillon is to announce her engagement to Lieutenant Winship almost any day, so the prettiest cups in town are being looked up to be despatched the moment it is "out."

As usual, we are having a lot of charity entertainments before the close of the season. The Indian tea at Mrs. George Law Smith's last week was a financial success, and has been supplemented by yet another "performance" on Thursday of this week. The Doctor's Daughters will have no cause to complain of the result of their exchequer from their horse show yesterday and circus to-day; and next of large affairs will come the musical comedy of "His Royal Nibs," the joint production of Shafter Howard and W. H. Clifford, which will be given at the Alhambra Theatre for the benefit of the California Women's Hospital, on the 21st and 22d of April. All the cast are to be amateurs, and great things are promised and expected. And we have also the dog show to look forward to, which opens at the Pavilion on the 13th of April.

Was it not a heart-break that the two days for the pony races at Tanforan should have been so vile—there is no other word for it? The rain spoiled a lot of pleasant parties that were arranged for them, and instead of automobiles and other vehicles being utilized, those who had courage enough to brave the elements went in the prosaic cars—steam and electric. Jean Reid was among those on Thursday, and had with her her friend Kate Barney, who is becoming almost as much liked as charming Jean; Mrs. Frank Carolan had Miss Kirk in her party—another visitor who is quite a favorite. We have all been condoling with Nellie Spreckels on the loss of her beautiful home in Sonoma County; you have no idea what a delightful place it was for house parties, and quite a number had been arranged to be given there as soon as the spring was fairly here. She had a lovely little luncheon last week for Mrs. Romualdo Pacheco. Another of last week's pleasant affairs was the pretty informal tea which Mrs. Taylor gave as an adieu to Pearl Sabin, who left on Monday to officiate as Kathro Burton's bridesmaid in Washington City.

The Clokes are among those who will be among the missing ere long, as Captain Cloke has been ordered to Fort Totten, New York, so we must make the most of them while they remain at Fort Baker. The Burgesses are in their new quarters at the Presidio—generally known as No. 9 of officers' row—where they hope to remain some time; their late locale was such a hard one to get to. Mrs. Burgess has always been noted for her hospitality, and once they are well settled, which will be about Easter, intends to open her doors to her friends from the city, who are delighted to have her back again with the prospect of a residence of several years.

People are not only planning where they are to spend the spring and summer, but some have already actually left town; others are busily packing up their belongings for an early flit, and Easter week will see a number of our winter residents safely ensconced in their own country homes. The Ross Valleyites are usually among the earliest to get away, and of those who are going next week are the Kittles, Harry Allens, Ed. Schmiedells, Clinton Joneses and Harry Bothins, and not long behind them will be the Eels, and the Ed. McNears. The Arthur Pages have decided to give Belvedere the cool shake this year, and go to San Rafael; the Ed. Eyres have already gone to Menlo Park, as well as the Taylors, and the Weirs are about to follow in their footsteps. The George Shreves go to San Mateo next week, and the Martin connection, including the Downey Harveys, when they arrive in May, will be found down in that vicinity later on. The Walter Magees go south to their ranch. The H. B. Chases do not return to Stagg's Leap until May, and the Wakefield Bakers go to the McCloud River early in June for most of the season; the Oscar Beatties are going to spend the summer at the Hooper ranch at Woodside; Mrs. Hearst, who is in New York, will pass the summer at her Pleasanton hacienda; Mr. and Mrs. Harry Bates are building a bungalow at Belvedere, where they will spend the summer, and the Sam Knights are to build a villa at Burlingame in the immediate future. Among prospective losses are the Kruttschnitts, who are about to remove to Chicago; Mrs. Kruttschnitt entertains delightfully, and will therefore be greatly missed. But the McClurgs are to be back from San Diego, where they have been all winter, and what a warm welcome home they will receive; every one will be glad to see them again; Fred Horne is on the Adams, you know, which is expected here soon, hence their return. The Warners go back to Mill Valley in June, where, I believe, Eleanor's wedding is to come off some time during the summer.

Society was out in full force at the opening of the millinery establishment of Miss Marie L. Sweeney, at 121 Post street, and if we were permitted we might mention some of the names of the most smartly dressed women in San Francisco as visitors. Great delight was manifested by these visitors in viewing the pattern hats and exclusive styles. This establishment bids fair to become one of the most fashionable in San Francisco, and judging by the attendance and the exclamations of pleasure of the ladies present, Miss Sweeney must have an intuitive idea of what goes to please the well-dressed woman.

THE LOOKER-ON

(San Francisco women have formed a new club called "Cap and Bells," for fun and folly.—Daily Paper.)

"When lovely woman stoops to folly,"
(And everybody knows the rest,)
She throws aside all melancholy—
She does her little very best.
For man is but a creature doltish
Who slowly yields to pleasure's sway,
While woman is by nature coltish—
The sort of dog that has her day.

Her daring dash, audacious, winning,
Half-hid by prudence, moves our smile,
She thralls us with her covert sinning,
Enchants us with her pretty guile.
But what will happen when she places
No further trust in cunning spells,
But throws aside her airs and graces
To wear the public cap and bells?

—Roland Whittle.

To one acquainted with the procedure of the police in the Police Courts, the agitation raised by the Grand Jury over what appears to be a lack of energy on the part of the Police Judges in administering the law, looks suspiciously like what Carter Harrison calls "four-flushing." Nor would I attempt to defend the Police Judges against some of the charges made against them. I think, for instance, that they are guilty of neglect of duty in that they do not give sufficient time to their official business. In this respect, Conlan and Mogan are the greatest offenders. They may be seen too often in and about Tom Ferguson's to warrant the belief that they are giving the people $4,000 worth of their time every year. In brief, Conlan and Mogan are lazy—and that is putting their dereliction very light. The Grand Jury, however, is on the wrong track when it holds the Judges responsible for the decreased income from fines levied upon offenders against the lottery laws.

For many years the lottery business has been licensed in this city. The statute books do not provide for a license, but it has been the custom in the police courts to levy nominal fines in lottery cases. These fines are promptly paid, and the result amounts to licensing lotteries. All this has been done not only with the knowledge, but upon the recommendation of the police department. The police have never yet brought into court sufficient legal evidence to convict a Chinese lottery player, or the keeper of a Chinese lottery game. The Judges, the prosecuting attorneys and the police themselves all admit this fact. Whenever a Chinese, convicted in a lottery case, has appealed to the Superior Court, the finding of the Police Judge has been set aside for lack of evidence, and the man has been liberated. Six or seven years ago, the Judges, at the instigation of the Grand Jury, levied fines of from $100 to $250 in lottery cases. In every instance, upon appeal, these convictions were set aside. The fault, therefore, is not with the Judges. It is with the Police Department. Again, it is more than passing strange that the police never arrest the white lottery dealers, against whom legal evidence can be secured. All their efforts are concentrated on Chinatown. Some years since, the Chief of Police and the Chinese gamblers had an understanding that the gamblers would submit to paying into the courts in the shape of fines a certain amount each month. That agreement was kept for a long time. If, toward the end of any month, it appeared that the amount had not been paid in, the Chinatown squad organized a raid, and arrested enough lottery players to bring up the amount to the right figure, the men being fined $5 each. In these instances, it is known that certain boss gamblers hired coolies to submit to arrest, and then paid their fines. If the Grand Jurors really want to find out something about the lottery business in the police courts, they should institute a secret inquiry. It would develop much of interest.

The usual wrangle about the proper administration of the School Department is now on. Arrayed on one side are the Superintendent and the principals; on the other are the School Directors. The Superintendent and his supporters argue that, as they are school men; that as the proper instruction of youth is their specialty; that as pedagogy is their profession, to them should be left the direction of the scholastic part of the business of conducting the schools, and that the School Directors should give their exclusive attention to the economical expenditure of the vast sum appropriated annually for the department. The Directors, on the other hand, insist that as they are responsible, they should personally conduct every branch of the business, from deciding whether the children shall write according to this system or that, to determining how much paint shall go on a school fence. To one who considers the subject only from the standpoint of the betterment of the department, it would seem that the Superintendent and the principals have the strong end of the argument. Pedagogics is a science. Some thinkers say it is an art. But whether science or art, or both, certain it is that its principals can be best applied, and its methods made productive of the best results, only by those who, by long study and application, have become qualified to practice it. Only one of the School Directors is a teacher, and his greatest claim to distinction is his success in advancing his own interests. The others are business men, who may be competent to handle the finances of the department, but who are certainly not qualified by experience, education or inclination to formulate curricula or to suggest any improvements along scholastic lines. Of course, the argument will be decided finally in favor of the Directors. They will have their own way, for along that way lies patronage and big contracts occasioned by changes in text books.

The Duke of the Abruzzi is coming back to Burlingame. He is reported bound for this port in command of an Italian man-of-war. The Duke is one of the most likable of the various heavy swells who have caused flutters in local society circles from time to time. When he was here several years ago, he followed the anise-seed bag over the fences and ditches down at Burlingame with as much enjoyment as an ordinary mortal—whereat the clubmen somewhat marveled. They had a limited acquaintance with the nobility, to be sure, for Lord Talbot Clifton, of pleasant memory, was much at the club in those days, and George Hall had just been decorated with the Order of the Medjilie by His Sultanic master, and was considered the real thing. But a real live Duke was big game, and the clubmen made the most of him. The Tobin boys led the hunt with the Abruzzi, and after the run luncheon was enjoyed on the club veranda. Some cold chicken had found its way into the Italian's department of the interior, when a lone and weary looking mounted figure was seen coming up the drive from the fields. It was Harry Simpkins. He and his noble steed had been lost in the shuffle upon the hillsides. The Duke speaks French fluently, and by this time, doubtless, can turn out a fair brand of English. Since his fox-hunt at Burlingame he has been within sighting shot of the North Pole, has gone around the world, has written a book, and is now in command of a warship. This scion of the ancient House of Savoy believes in the strenuous life.

One Hugh Spillane was taken to the Central Emergency Hospital a few evenings ago, suffering from a fractured skull. The intelligent young medicos appointed by the Board of Health to attend to the unfortunates who drift into them at the hospital, looked at Spillane, and promptly decided that he was suffering from pneumonia. They wrapped him up in blankets, and let it go at that. Spillane promptly died. Then it was discovered that his skull was fractured. Now the Board of Health's doctors are trying to explain. No explanation they can make can satisfy the public. Since Schmitz took charge of the Board of Health, its record has been one of failure. One of its appointees had no license to practice medicine, and was forced to resign under threat of arrest and prosecution if he attempted to practice; another appointee was a dentist, and he was also forced out; a third appointee received a sailor whose intestines were protruding through a knife wound in the abdomen, and sent him in a wagon to the County Hospital, four miles away. The man died in the wagon. Now comes the Spillane case. The Board, however, has done much to retrieve itself. It has made Dr. Ragan Health Officer. Dr. Lawlor has been given some other job, and McQuaide, the ex-prize fighter, has been made assistant Superintendent of the County Hospital. You know, we should be consoled. It might have been worse.

I am glad to know that something is about to develop from the movement to erect a statue in honor of Hall McAllister. He was certainly a great lawyer, and the city should honor him. It seems strange that only $3,600 has been raised for the statue. That may be enough, but the amount indicates that the lawyers are not liberal givers. The statue will be erected on the McAllister street side of the City Hall. A splendid site would be in the grass plat at the eastern side of the Hall of Records. Incidentally, whom does Colonel Kowalsky represent in connection with the monument? He accompanied Judges Morrow and Hunt in the visit to the Park Commissioners to ask for a site. Is Kowalsky the successor of McAllister at the local bar? Has the accumulation of wealth, by whatever means, purged the Kowalsky of any delinquencies that might be charged against him? Or, by aiding to raise monuments to others, does he wish to suggest one to himself, entitled: "Kowalsky,

Dr. Hachet-Souplet, a French savant, contends that the high speed of the automobile tends to break down the moral sense of the 'bilist, just as would the excessive use of opium or alcohol. He asserts that many chauffeurs are reckless, not really because they enjoy danger, but because the high speed at which they send their machines results in a condition of actual intoxication, in which they lose all self-control. Under these conditions, he says, even the normal instinct of self-preservation seems to disappear, and all the worst side of a man's nature forces its way through the cuticle of conventionality and comes to the top. That explains, says this very satisfactory Frenchman, why it is that a speeding chauffeur, interrupted by the hand of the law, is very apt to be pugnacious, spiteful and even violent. He is simply suffering from an automobile jag. Dr. Hachet-Souplet's ideas are interesting, if not convincing.

It was after "taps" at a National Guard encampment. The soldier boys, restive under restraint, were sending out catcalls from every tent. The Captain of G Company whose ancestors had fought at Fontenay, determined to subdue the row. He rushed to a tent from which escaped the loudest volume of sound, and angrily shaking the flap, cried: "Here, here, this won't do at all, at all. How many of you divils are in there?"

"Three of us, Captain."

"Well, thin, half of you come out of that at once."

PLEASURE'S WAND

A TRUSTY TIP ON THINGS THEATRICAL.

GRAND—Mrs. Fiske—Mary of Magdala—Scenery fine; acting, mediocre.
COLUMBIA—Miss Mannering—Harriet's Honeymoon—A splendid, enjoyable show.

ORPHEUM—La Belle Guerrero; Emmett Corrigan Co., a fine entertainment.

TIVOLI—Mr. Pickwick—Funny and playing to good houses.

FISCHER'S—The Rounders—Fair show.

ALCAZAR—The last week—Parsifal—Go.

CHUTES—A good performance and new attractions.

CENTRAL—King of Detectives—Blood and thunder; drawing big crowds.

RIDER'S CLUB—Horse Show Matinee—This afternoon.

FERRY BUILDING—Spring flower show.

Minnie Maddern Fiske is a wonderful woman. She is more than that—she is marvelous. Her Mary of Magdala at the Grand is fascinating in its intensity and compelling in its interest. Mrs. Fiske is the reason of this. She has a subtle magnetism that holds her hearers with breathless interest. It is the suppressed emotions that tell on her audiences.

Her mouth twitches at times, and she becomes nervous, reminding one of her wonderful portrayal of Becky Sharp. The story is told throughout in the shades that Mrs. Fiske loves. She is artistic and intellectual, and this exemplified in the purple of the bejeweled wanton to the white of the passionless woman. As in "Parsifal," the audience sits spellbound and does not applaud.

Speaking of "Parsifal," it is regrettable that the orchestra at the Grand, under the baton of Mrs. Fiske's own impresario, Mr. Byrne, should have attempted a pretentious musical programme. Schubert, Rubenstein, Gounod, Wagner, Simonetti, Handel and Mendelssohn were successively murdered by the incompetents. The best mishandling of all was the march from "Athalie." This was hauled around and mauled into a flatness that bore no comparison to the score of the composer.

The Aulus Flavius of Frank Gillmore was very good. The rest of the men were only fair in their respective parts, while the women, except Mrs. Fiske, had little more to do except stand around.

It would be unfair to pass this play by without a mention of the wonderful scenery carried by Mrs. Fiske. The room in the house of Mary of Magdala, the scene in the house of Flavius, are magnificent creations by the scenic painter and the scene of a street in Jerusalem, the storm on the day of the Crucifixion, at the foot of the mountain, are magnificent pictures that overtop the actor and that will remain in memory long after the play and the players have been forgotten.

Mrs. Fiske's enunciation in the first act is excruciatingly bad, more like the catarrhal gabble of a guinea fowl. It is one of the kind of voices one hears in society's drawing rooms, an affected semi-French accent, a gloo-gloo agglomeration; the words come too fast, and the r's are rolled too much, but after the first act you become accustomed to the idiosyncrasy, and you seem to hear better. Judas (Mr. Hobart Bosworth) is afflicted by the same voice difficulty. Mr. Bosworth made the worst of a good part throughout the play. There's nothing like consistency.

At the Columbia, Mary Mannering and Arthur Byron are the life of the show. Miss Mannering is perfect, and in "Harriet's Honeymoon" she has a chance to show her immense versatility. She runs the gamut of human emotions from gay to sad and from pleasure to anger very well indeed. She is the jealous wife to perfection, and the loving, cooing better-half to the dot. There is a lot of quaint humor in the play. In the German watering place in which the plot of the play is laid, there is splendid scope for ludicrous situations, and the company make the most of Ditrachstein's comedy. "Harriet's Honeymoon" is a show well worth seeing.

The woodland scene in the third act of "Harriet's Honeymoon" is one of the most artistic ever presented on any stage.

The Alcazar is still giving us a splendid production of "Parsifal," and I am disappointed at the short run of the play. The management announces next week as the last. The orchestra is doing fine work, and the musical end of the programme has been much improved since the premiere.

* * *

Narcissus-like the performers at Fischer's in "The Rounders" have fallen in love with the play—their shadow. I am glad to be able to announce the coming of something good, at least I am told it is good. I have been fooled so often by the local theatrical managers that I am wary. "Kismet" looks good to me, and I sincerely hope it will turn out as predicted by those that are interested in its production.

Manuel Klein is making a great name. He has given us some of the best lyrical music we have had in days. "Mr. Pickwick" is funny; it is tuneful and holds the interest of the audience well. Many of the solos, duets, trios and quartettes and choruses are being encored ad lib. The Tivoli always has good stage setting, and it has not fallen away from the record in "Mr. Pickwick."

Dora de Fillipe sings well and is rather pretty. This is certainly an improvement, and we should congratulate ourselves on this one point. She makes a splendid Arabella. Bessie Tannehill does the part of Mrs. Bardell very acceptably, and Aimee Leicester, as Rachel Wardle, is the ugliest good-looking woman I have ever seen. The men in the cast are all good. The house should be full at the matinee this afternoon.

* * *

The concert by the pupils of Dr. H. J. Stewart at Steinway Hall on last Thursday afternoon, March 17th, was a grand success in point of numbers attending and in artistic excellence. The clever participants were Mrs. Zilpha Ruggles-Jenkins, Mrs. Wallace Wheaton Briggs, Miss Leola C. Stone, Mrs. Blanche King Arnold, Mrs. A. Silverman, Miss Camille Frank, Miss Ella V. McCloskey, Miss Juliet Greninger, Miss Florence Darby, Mrs. L. Snider-Johnson, and Miss Viola H. Samter. The programme contained 15 numbers, and it held its audience to the very last.

* * *

The Central is enjoying its old-time prosperity again. "The King of Detectives" is a play suiting the tastes of its patrons, and the audience manifests its displeasure or approbation in vociferous style. The villain is hissed and virtue finds its meed of praise. The Central is playing to good houses.

The date of the auction sale for seats at the performance of "His Royal Nibs" will be announced next week. This is the vaudeville to be given for the benefit of the California Woman's Hospital.

Mazuz and Mazett, "The Brakeman and the Tramp," who created such a sensation on their last appearance in this city some years ago, will return to the Orpheum next week. The Five Mowatts, Coakley and McBride, Wesson, Walters and Wesson, James H. Cullen, La Belle Guerrero, assisted by Philippe, will appear in the bill.

Following "Kismet," the musical comedy to follow "The Rounders" at Fischer's Theatre, the house will close for two weeks to complete the improvements contemplated.

There will be a main entrance at Fischer's Theatre when the improvements are finished, forty feet wide. Two stairways will run direct from the balcony to the street, and the entire auditorium will be enlarged.

* * *

The plot of the new skit, "Kismet," at Fischer's is quite a novel one, and the possibility for gorgeous costuming is unlimited. There are specialties galore and a number of new acts for the favorites.

* * *

The Central Theatre's bill for the week beginning next Monday night will be the uproariously funny farce-comedy, "The Hustler," which has made the biggest kind of a hit in all the large cities of the East.

* * *

The Military Band of the University Cadets will repeat the enjoyable "Half-Hour of Music" at the Greek Amphitheatre, Berkeley, to-morrow afternoon.

* * *

Some weeks ago, Mr. Richard Mansfield fell and sprained the tendons of his leg. He has been playing "Ivan the Terrible" with one leg in plaster cast. This was removed on last Wednesday, and it is said that the leg, which for a long time was thought broken, is as good as ever.

The next Columbia Theatre attraction will be Anna Held and an immense company in the gorgeous production, "Mam'selle Napoleon." The star will be surrounded by many of the clever people who were with her last year in "The Little Duchess." The chorus is said to be the handsomest in the world, and Miss Held's "A La Mode" girls are said to be a great feature of the production. Anna Held's engagement opens on Monday, April 4th.

The Tivoli announces the "Beggar Student" in preparation. There are some great chances for fine work in this opera by the company now playing at the Tivoli. I want to protest against interpolations; give us the opera as the composer intended it to be given, and do not expect us to enthuse over any South of Market slang in a standard comic opera.

* * *

Mrs. Fiske, whose production of "Mary of Magdala" is playing at the Grand Opera House, will, in accordance with her plans as already announced, present William Winter's adaptation of Paul Heyse's Biblical drama only during this, the first week of her engagement. The bill will be changed for each of the four weeks of her stay. Next week, beginning on Monday evening, Mrs. Fiske will present Henrik Ibsen's masterly play, "Hedda Gabler," one of the most powerful and thrilling dramas known to the stage.

Easter and the Alcazar announces a series of lighter plays. Colliers "On the Quiet" is announced for the immediate future.

The Minister of Foreign Affairs

News Centers in the War Zone.

It would seem that Russia's military and naval commanders in the Far East deem it essential to their reputation to burden the despatches with accomplished or contemplated exploits in which they personally are the issue and the all-important factors in making material for the historian. In this particular feature of the struggle the Northmen differ widely from their antagonist. By common consent, as well as being actuated by modesty, the Japanese give out no news concerning the personnel of their staff of commanders, nor do they do any boasting. In this connection it may be observed that as yet only one bit of news has come from Japanese sources, and that came in the nature of Admiral Togo's official report of the Port Arthur affair, but not until a month after the battle. They assume that the civilized world is not altogether composed of credulous fools, and do not try to bolster up their cause nor try to mislead by sending out "semi-official" or "from a high authority" manufactured news.

Events the past week seem to throw a little light upon Japan's strategy and Diplomacy. Japan's strategy, and it may be a positive departure from the original plan of operation. It seems to include the occupation of Port Arthur in any event, and the confining of field movements to Korea. That is, to hold all of Korea with the army's point on the Yalu, but not cross that river and attack the Russians in their fortified positions. Korea is surely destined to become a part of the Japanese Empire. Its square mileage is greater than that of Japan and nearly as great as that of California. But that would not be giving up a slice or all of Manchuria forever. The tactics of Japan's diplomacy seems to be just now to take and hold Port Arthur, retain possession of Korea, and then with an immense army concentrated on the Manchurian border she could say with grace and the force of logic to China: "The Russians stole Manchuria from you and are in possession of it. Now just throw an army into Manchuria, and we will stand by you with a helping hand." Those who know something of the hatred the Chinese have for Russia will not be slow to see how such an "offer" from Japan would inflame the Chinese population far beyond the control of the Peking Government; besides, an effort to rescue Manchuria would necessitate a formal declaration of war against Russia by China.

Japan's Strategy and Diplomacy.

Events the past week seem to throw a little light upon Japan's strategy, and it may be a positive departure from the original plan of operation.

It seems to include the occupation of Port Arthur in any event, and the confining of field movements to Korea. That is, to hold all of Korea with the army's point on the Yalu, but not cross that river and attack the Russians in their fortified positions. Korea is surely destined to become a part of the Japanese Empire. Its square mileage is greater than that of Japan and nearly as great as that of California. But that would not be giving up a slice or all of Manchuria forever. The tactics of Japan's diplomacy seems to be just now to take and hold Port Arthur, retain possession of Korea, and then with an immense army concentrated on the Manchurian border she could say with grace and the force of logic to China: "The Russians stole Manchuria from you and are in possession of it. Now just throw an army into Manchuria, and we will stand by you with a helping hand." Those who know something of the hatred the Chinese have for Russia will not be slow to see how such an "offer" from Japan would inflame the Chinese population far beyond the control of the Peking Government; besides, an effort to rescue Manchuria would necessitate a formal declaration of war against Russia by China.

How Matters are Going.

The policy of Russia in field operations is a waiting game, just as the News Letter said at the outset it would be. Falling back upon centers of supplies and strategic points of concentration, and avoiding a general engagement is Russia's tactics, and because and only because of fear to engage the Japanese upon anything like an equal numerical footing; besides, such strategy obliges the opposing force to attack under disadvantages as well as keeping open a long line of communication with the base of operations. Therefore, Russia's tactics is an open book.

France is Restless.

On the surface the relations between England and France are reasonably friendly, but a little deeper down there is only friction. Recent utterances of leading French socialists, however, are likely to cause the Government to go very slow in picking a quarrel with England to please Russia. The socialistic following in France is numerically strong, and to a man they hate Russian autocracy; besides, the Czar is making much of one of the Orleans princes by appointing him to an important command in the Manchurian army, and French socialists are using the incident to show that Russia's game is to make this young prince Emperor of France in return for French aid and comfort just now. It is this more than anything else that has turned the "common people" of France against Russia, and under such a condition of public sentiment it is not likely that the French Government will attempt to crowd England. However, all the French coast defenses are being put on a war footing, and Frenchmen in foreign lands who are subject to military duty have been notified to join their regiments forthwith.

The United States is in the Far Eastern complications a little deeper than a while ago, but Japan's aroit diplomacy to involve China to the extent of lending a helping hand to rescue her own territory—Manchuria—from Russia's grasp, if successful, is pretty sure to relieve this country and England from actual participation; still they will have to keep in hearing of the artillery. But what is bothering the United States very much just now is a clear title to the Panama Canal franchise. It looks very much as if the Washington Government had been "worked." All along certain cliques in France have insisted that the Panama Canal Company, nor yet France herself, could give a clear deed to the property; besides, the Republic of Colombia is in with a bill of exceptions on the ground that the withdrawal of Panama from the federation did not convey to her Colombia's interests in the venture. The French courts are wrestling with the title, and President Roosevelt has despatched a special commission to Paris to investigate. Fortunately, no part of the purchase price and bonus—aggregating $50,000,000—has been paid to the canal ring. It looks very much as though in his break-neck haste to favor the canal syndicate, President Roosevelt came very near paying $50,000,000 of the people's money for a brick that had none of the earmarks of gilt, much less of gold. Already the "deal" has cost the nation over $1,000,000, not counting the expense of occupying Panama with marines for several months to keep the "Republic" from slipping back into the Colombian Federation. It is believed that the hitch in the transfer of the Panama franchise will not delay the policy of the President in San Domingo. The plan was to first close up the Panama deal and then take San Domingo as a necessity to complete the Atlantic and Gulf defense approaches to the Canal, but it is pretty well settled that the little Negro Republic will be "beneficently assimilated" without waiting for a clear title to the canal.

Brazil and a half-dozen other of the Latin Republics have joined in an offensive and defensive combination against the United States because of a suspicion born of this nation's treatment of Colombia that the Government's colonial policy and "manifest destiny" fad means the acquisition of more or less of the Latin States. The combination is simply a prudential step so as to insure pledged co-operation in the event the United States undertakes to extend their real estate holdings in South America. Although this agreement between the Latin Republics mentions only the United States, France and Germany are likewise under suspicion. On the whole the outlook for peace and good will among the nations for any length of time is not very encouraging. Not in a century has there been as much restlessness and uncertainty, and never before did a war between two nations engender as much sympathy and hatred as the Russo-Japanese war is developing, and seemingly the people of every land are bitter partisans of the one or the other, and what is still more disturbing is the unfortunate fact that war is becoming the favorite theme of conversations, songs, dramas and religion.

"YE OLDE ENGLISH INN."

For years there has been a demand for some eating place for ladies and gentlemen in the down-town district. Gentlemen of Bohemian taste who prefer their Bohemianism without the usual attendant dirt have been forced to walk many blocks to Market street in order to enjoy a meal without the usual smoke and filthy floors. "Bab," who has made such a success of the Epicurean Inn on Larkin street and Golden Gate avenue, conceived the idea of a clean and at the same time original restaurant. The result is "Ye Olde English Inn," on California street, at No. 212, below Battery street.

This inn will in time become one of the great show places of San Francisco. Everything in the way of comfort and convenience has been provided. There is plenty of room. Above all, there is cleanliness.

The decorations deserve especial mention on account of their originality. The ceiling is finished in a paneling of old English oak, and immediately below this we have a wide frieze, a submarine effect. Sunken ships are shown, in which disport themselves the denizens of the deep. Here is a mermaid with a babe mermaid in her arms. Here is a diver probably looking for that mermaid. His way is blocked by a sword fish. These and various other scenes depicting what might happen in the bottom of the sea have given scope for some clever artist's brush. The fauna and flora of the ocean's depths have been shown in a way that cannot fail to be attractive. The whole is seen through the mesh of a sun-browned fish-net. Pendant from this net are real star fish and all the shells of the Pacific and other seas.

Below the submarine frieze, in lighter tones, is the frieze of all nations. This represents the various nationalities in the act of partaking of their daily meal. We have the American, the Parisian, the Russian, the Jap, and a host of other peoples, under the genial influence of Bab's excellent cuisine, in amity.

Immediately under this frieze is a plate shelf, which is burdened with every pattern of stein that was ever made by man.

Under the plate shelf is the "Pickwickian Strip." This is a succession of mottoes that should appeal to all good fellows. One of them is the celebrated: "He that loves not woman, wine or song," etc., and we have others which state that "Who neither loves, nor drinks, nor sings, his life to no fruition brings." "Eat, drink and be merry," etc.

There is a fine bar on one side of the large room, and back of this is a magnificent leaded glass wine shelf. On this shelf may be seen the finest vintages of California and a representation of the wines of the Old World as well. Opposite the bar is a fine old brick fire-place that will add not a little to the cheer of the place with its fires.

Midway toward the rear of the room is the most original of all the original features of this wonderful eating place. Here are a number of booths. These are most comfortably arranged with benches instead of chairs. The walls and benches are upholstered in heavy leather and one sinks into their softness inviting to pleasant dalliance.

Each booth bears the name of a city. Thus we have New Orleans, Boston, New York, Pittsburg, Louisville, Saint Paul and other names displayed. Here birthday and other parties may be given. A broker or business man wishing to give a luncheon to some visitor from the East or to some city friend, and wishing especially to honor his guest, invites him to the booth that bears the name of the guest's birthplace. This idea, as far as we know, is unique with "Ye Olde English Inn."

The kitchen is a roomy, spacious affair, and the array of copper pans and kettles over the grill give a most inviting effect to the rear of the room.

Over the grill is a large shaft, open to the outside air. This will serve to carry away all the smoke and smell that is usually so offensive in down-town restaurants. The floor is heavily carpeted, and this is in itself a feature the man of business will certainly appreciate.

The restaurant will be run on the popular price principle, and as Mr. Babcock has overlooked nothing that will tend to good-fellowship, comfort and good cheer we feel justified in saying that "Ye Olde English Inn" will immediately jump into popular favor.

The Battle of Charter Hill

They told us the brave days were ended,
The rush was a thing of the past;
That the lamb and the pigeon were blended
In a new college breed that would last;
That the angel of peace had descended,
And the might of the heroes was grassed.

And we all gave our word to the tyrant,
The word that we meant not to keep—
So when night fell each plucky aspirant
For battle, refrained from his sleep;
And we all drank grim death to the tyrant
In whiskey, draughts potent and deep.

And when one from the college clock sounded
We faced the grim heights of the hill,
Where the hosts of the freshmen were rounded.
In ominous darkness and still.
While we felt that our fears were well-founded
And reckoned to swallow the pill.

As we mounted the steep in the dull light,
And our heart-beats kept time to our tread;
We came suddenly into the full light
Of a search-lantern stationed o'erhead.
And the foe galloped down as a bull might
And fiercely he whacked at our head.

We recked not the why or the wherefore,
But suddenly leaped in the gloom
Strange forms, that we knew not, and therefore
We saw o'er us hanging our doom,
And little was left us to dare for;
For our finish was plain as the tomb.

And the tyrant he caught a round dozen,
And handcuffed us there in the night,
In spite of our kicking and fussing
We were held in that horrible plight,
And the rest of us ran away cussing
And dropping our things in our flight.

And this is the terrible story
They will whisper in ages to come,
Of the battle-field awful and gory
And the beat of the militant drum.
They will tell of the triumph of Cory
And the sophomores beaten and glum.

So the battle of Charter Hill ended,
For they called in the Oakland police;
And the spirit of dullness descended
Which our foes call the spirit of peace,
But our poor little gang is suspended
And our days at the college must cease.

SPRING ART EXHIBITION.

Not since the opening of the Mary Frances Searles Memorial Gallery at the Mark Hopkins' Institute of Art has there been so keen an interest in an exhibition as that which opened last Thursday evening with a promenade concert, and this because the gallery has been refurbished with an effort to correct the mistakes in construction. Something more than a month ago the gallery was closed for repairs; it comes out of this time of seclusion with the entire room in a different color and the hanging space brought down to about the height of a home ceiling with a moulding from which the heavy pictures are hung by wire. The lower part of the wall is a soft terra cotta burlap, and the upper part and the ceiling a light tint of the same hue. The hanging space is divided by pilasters of green, the same color as other woodwork in the room. The light overhead has been tempered by canvas that is suspended in midair, an arrangement that is temporary and an experiment.

All these things gave the hanging committee a chance to distinguish itself, which it has not done. In the first place, the committee has been too lenient. Fully one-third of the pictures should have been rejected. This would have raised the standard of the exhibition to what it should be, and then there would have been space in the gallery to properly hang good canvases. As it is, some notable pictures—and there are many of them in the collection—are disastrously grouped with small and inferior ones. For instance, a portrait done by Mrs. Lucia Mathews, unquestionably one of the best things in the exhibition, was entitled to a proper setting. It is "on the line," but crowded about with inferior work. Another instance is the grouping of three large canvases at the end of the gallery, all good things, but one practically killing the other. The best in the trio is a French landscape done by Charles Rollo Peters, quite out of the vein in which he is accustomed to work. He has sent to the exhibition some moonlights and day-lights as well, and altogether his pictures add distinction to the collection.

William Keith, always honored and ever faithful to the Art Association, has sent two canvases which honestly represent him. One is a landscape of the woods, and another of the wind-swept, storm-racked high mountains. Cadenasso has done himself credit in three pictures, and C. Chapel Judson has one picture which shows that he can get out of the rut in which he has been painting for a long time. A picture which will certainly attract attention is from Southern California. It is a large landscape done by the mute artist Granville Redmond. Wachtel's pictures, on the whole, are not so good as on former occasions. Willis E. Davis's contributions to the exhibition are uneven, a few good, the others indifferent. John M. Gamble has a creditable California landscape. The sculptors make an excellent showing. Among the exhibitors are Robert I. Aitken, Earl Cummings and Arthur Putnam. Among the best miniatures are those done by Lillie V. O'Ryan, although others are well up to the best mark. The exhibition will be open the usual time, Sundays included.

A neat little coffee and lunch house has been opened at 216 Sansome street, by Mr. J. Iversen. The establishment is artistically finished in natural oak, and well appointed in every way. The cuisine will be excellent and prepared by experienced chefs, with obliging and attentive waiters.

BY THE AUTOCRAFT

It has been decided by the officers of the Automobile Club of California to hold a meet this year at Del Monte. The affair last year proved to be such a success that those in charge this year feel perfectly safe in making it an annual event.

The date has not been fixed, but it will take place either during the middle of May or the middle of June. It will not be definitely settled until the return of R. P. Schwerin to the city. The meet will be followed by a race meet in the city.

The start for the Del Monte event will be made on a Thursday. The first day's run will be to San Jose. The following day they will proceed to the destination. There will be racing on Saturday, a special run on Sunday and likely another day's racing on Monday.

If the weather will permit of it, the first run of the season will be held by the club to-day to San Jose. The San Francisco members will leave on the 3 p. m. boat, going by the other side of the bay.

According to President Flemming, of the committee of arrangements for El Camino Real State Convention, the greatest automobile run ever held in the West is being planned for April 18th, to be the feature of the convention. It is to be a run from Los Angeles to Santa Barbara over the road which in part will be followed by the King's Highway.

The run will be made under the Southern California Automobile Club or directly under El Camino Real auspices. The plans will include the meeting of the Los Angeles delegation at the county boundaries by the automobilists of Santa Barbara, and the many owners who will be sojourning here during April. The run in the main will end just outside the city, and a triumphant entry en masse will be a feature.

The members of the Automobile Club of Southern California are now contemplating another automobile meet here, to be held in May at Ascot Park. Preliminary arrangements are already under way. It is said that Barney Oldfield will be here to make a new world's record for Los Angeles. Among the prizes will be the cup offered last fall by H. E. Huntington, which is valued at $1000. It was won by H. D. Ryus, his record being five miles in six minutes and six seconds. The track at Ascot, it is said, is much more advantageous for automobile racing than was the track at Agricultural Park. The turns are said to be of sufficient width so that they can be made with safety while the machines are running at a high rate of speed.

Work will be begun in a few days on the new model road and speedway planned by the Automobile Club of Southern California, that is to run between Los Angeles and Playa del Rey. Last week the last right-of-way signature was secured, and now the entire road is assured from the city limits to the ocean. This road is to connect with West Washington at the city limits, and will be built in a substantial and thorough manner.

The Mobile Carriage Company has taken an order from Mr. Livingston Jenks for a four-cylinder Pierce-Arrow touring car to be delivered at the earliest date.

Miss McEwen, daughter of Mr. D. H. McEwen, who was recently presented with a new 1904 Winton touring car by her father, is fast becoming an expert driver of her car.

Mr. H. C. Tilden has received his two-cylinder Pierce Arrow touring car, canopy top. Mr. Tilden is greatly pleased with his purchase, and he anticipates much pleasure in touring during the coming summer.

A carload of Stevens-Duryea automobiles is due to arrive at the Pioneer Automobile Company's garage this week. The car contains a machine for Mr. W. H. Taylor, of Oakland, one for Mr. Eloise Merriam of Oakland, and one for Mr. Charles Morse of this city.

The automobile busses of the St. Francis Hotel which are being furnished by the Mobile Carriage Co., are now in operation, meeting all the trains and steamboats. San Francisco can boast of the only automobile hotel busses in service in the United States.

Mr. R. E. Olds, of the Olds Motor Works, at Detroit, Michigan, spent several days last week in San Francisco en route home. Mr. Olds was on the Coast purely for pleasure, having spent the last ten or twelve weeks in Southern California. He is very much pleased with the outlook of the automobile business on the Pacific Coast, and believes that California will use as many, or more, automobiles than any other State in the Union, the population considered. Mr. Olds spent the most of his time viewing the city in an Oldsmobile and at the Jefferson Square Club. He says the Pioneer Automobile Company's new garage is positively the largest and best-equipped automobile place in the world, and he believes that the automobile dealers throughout the East would do well to imitate the energetic California dealers.

Mr. W. J. Hole has just purchased from the Mobile Carriage Co., through their Los Angeles branch, a two-cylinder Arrow car. Mr. Hole is right-of-way agent for H. E. Huntington's system of electric roads in Los Angeles. He has purchased the car not only for pleasure, but for making trips along his lines. This is the first two-cylinder French type car which has been introduced in Southern California. On the good roads of the South the Arrow has made a great record.

In a recent letter received by the Pioneer Automobile Company from the Olds Motor Works at Detroit, Michigan, they have the assurance that the first carload of Oldsmobiles will be shipped about March 25th. In the meantime, orders for these machines are piling up on the books of the Pioneer people, and this good news is very welcome. From the reputation the Olds Motor Works has gained during the past three years in the selling of their small curved dash runabouts, great things are expected of the new models, and from information received from automobilists who have been East to the Chicago and New York automobile shows, the surprise will be a big one. The Oldsmobile Company have adopted the policy of rating their machines low, as is the practice with French automobile manufacturers. For instance, the Olds Motor Works rate their new tonneau car at eight horsepower. A letter was received, however, from an Eastern enthusiast, who has already received one of these machines, and who writes as follows, viz: "From the demonstration of tonneau, it has shown an excess power, and figuring by the liberal rules of makers of other machines, my carriage could well be rated at anywhere from ten to twelve horsepower."

It is claimed that almost $150,000 worth of vehicles have been sold during the automobile show by Banker Brothers of New York, Philadelphia and Pittsburg. It seems to strengthen their claim of being the largest automobile dealers in America. The orders taken are all for Pierce Arrows and Stanhopes and Peerless machines.

The Pierce Stanhope and Arrow touring cars which Banker Brothers are selling all over other makes, both foreign and American, are represented on the Pacific Coast by the Mobile Carriage Co.

HIS ROYAL NIBS.

Shafter Howard has at last attained his ambition to appear as a playwright, a maker of operas, a sketcher of musical skits, and his genius in that line has been utilized in a collaboration with W. H. Clifford. Their joint production is called "His Royal Nibs." All society is interested, and there is sure to be a grand turn out. The list of patronesses comprise the names of all that compose "Who's Who" in San Francisco. The San Francisco production is scheduled for Thursday and Friday, April 21st and April 22d.

The performance in Oakland will be given at the Macdonough, on the evening of April 29th. The San Francisco performance will be at the Alhambra Theatre. We append a list of patronesses for this occasion:

Mrs. William Irwin, Mrs. John D. Spreckels, Mrs. Henry T. Scott, Mrs. E. W. McKinstry, Mrs. L. L. Baker, Mrs. H. G. Kittle, Mrs. William Hinkley Taylor, Mrs. Carter Pomeroy, Mrs. James R. Tucker, Mrs. Marriner Campbell, Mrs. Egbert Stone, Mrs. William S. Tevis, Mrs. Eleanor Martin, Mrs. Horace Blanchard Chase, Mrs. Emma Shafter Howard, Mrs. William Babcock, Mrs. E. D. Cupid's Pranks.

They must reach realization before the first of May. It is rumored that many weddings will be celebrated between now and the first of May. The authority for this statement is Mr. Potosien, corner 16th and Mission streets, who states that ever so many young folks have been and are daily buying Furniture, Carpets and Draperies, and leave them at the store until the first of May when the store closes. Evidently the young folks take advantage of the low prices. They seem to know that prices will double after the first of May, when the Potosien Store will be no more.

A neat little Coffee and Lunch House has been opened at 216 Sansome street by Mr. J. J. Jerssen. The establishment is artistically finished in natural oak and well appointed in every way. The cuisine will be excellent and prepared by experienced chefs with obliging and attentive waiters.

TWO SONGS.

By Mabel Earle in Smart Set

I—Sunrise.

Thrilling of dappled dawn-clouds, far and far;
 Thrilling of birds awake in fern and heather;
 Out in the west, a fading moon and star
 Slip from the world together.

Quiver of gold across the hill-crest blue,
 Shiver of white where whispering aspens sway
 Out in the grass, a diamond world of dew
 Flashes and fades away.

Shade of the night sinks down behind the west;
 Hush of the night is drowned in songs above;
 O my heart's sunrise, hope is sweeter than rest;
 Better than peace is love!

II—Sunset.

A wide sky and a silver star;
 A mountain summit white;
 A bird's wing, black against the far Infinitudes of light.

Breaking waves on a pebbled beach;
 Long, shadowy leagues of foam;
 A lessening sail gone out to reach
 The Holy Lands of home.

Long was the weary glare of day;
 Wide was the world-waste sea;
 O my heart's rest, I turn away—
 Home to the dark and thee!

ROSEMARY AND RUE.

By Rosalie Arthur

Within the leaves of Memory's book
 I see, through blur of tears,
 Your gaze—a little withered spray,
 Brown with the stain of years,
 Yet subtly sweet as breath of spring,
 When love to youth appears.

O friend, if time and place must hold
 A bar between us two,
 If you may never see my face,
 Nor I touch hand of you,
 Beside your sprig of rosemary
 I lay my sprig of rue.

THE SPIRIT OF THE WILDERNESS PASSETH

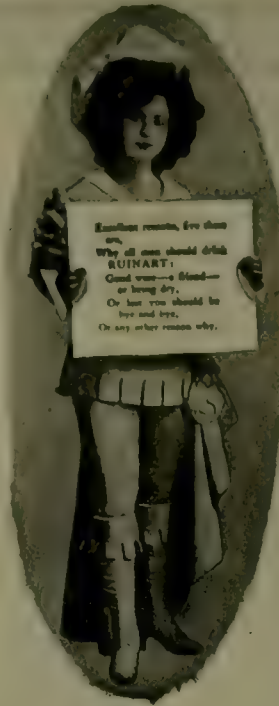

By Harold Child in Outing

With the sad sweet song of the whispering wild
 The sawmill mingles its rote,
 As with gleaming blade in primeval shade
 The woodmen feed its throat:
 When one by one the giant trees
 Are bit by its blasting breath
 The piercing shriek mid the ripping teeth
 Is the Wood-God's dirge of death.

THE GLACIER OF REGRET.

By Arthur Stringer in Everybody's Magazine

The eternal peaks of icy Wisdom scarred
 By Youth's hot sun where Law its bastion rears,
 The endless siege, the eternal heights debarred,
 And all—the slow source of Earth's endless tears!

City Engineer Grunsky and Consulting Engineer Stut met with a set-back at a recent meeting of the Fire Commissioners. They were employed to devise a plan by which the city could secure a supply of ocean water to be made use of by the Fire Department and for street sprinkling and sewer flushing. They made their report, and the Commissioners promptly rejected it, as not being a report in line with the object desired. The officials want a reservoir placed on Twin Peaks able to contain about 10,000,000 gallons of salt water, which would be ample to meet all requirements of the Fire Department in case of a conflagration without having to depend on the supply furnished by the Spring Valley Water Company.

The $500 appropriated by the Board of Supervisors to meet the expenses of the preliminary work evidently will not go to these gentlemen since the Board refused to accept the report. It would be interesting to know just what position the Fire Underwriters take on the question of salt water. It is a safe assumption, however, that all they desire is water, salt or fresh, so long as there is plenty of it.

* * *

The Chief of the New York Fire Department has expressed an opinion that Civil Service is not to his liking when applied to the New York Fire Department. He is a believer evidently in brawn rather than brains. He wants men used to physical labor, well muscled and strong. He is quoted as saying: "While it is a very easy matter for clerks, bookkeepers, etc. (who do not make the best firemen because they lack the physical qualities to successfully cope with the hardships, endurance, etc., incidental to a fireman's life), to pass the examinations, it bars out a class of persons peculiarly well equipped for just the kind of work that a fireman is called upon to do, and whose services would prove of great value." There is an idea in this worthy of consideration, coming as it does from the Chief of one of the best and largest fire departments in the world.

The Baltimore losses are going to figure out, it is said, under $30,000,000. This is bad enough, but it might be worse. February's losses alone footed up over $90,000,000.

The Mutual Life of New York has just loaned to the owners of the building at the corner of Fifth avenue and Twenty-first street, New York, $900,000 for three years at 4½ per cent per annum interest.

President McCall, of the New York Life, pays a feeling tribute to the late Charles C. Whitney, who was Secretary of the Company. Mr. Whitney died suddenly on his way from the office of the company to his residence. He was in his seventy-second year. Mr. McCall says in part: "Outside of his business, he was devoted to his family and to the pursuits of a cultured life. He was a diligent reader of the best literature, a lover and patron of art, a friend who did not easily give his confidence, but who, once having given it, was as steadfast as his own integrity. He impressed me as a man who always did his best, who considered no effort too great to get at the truth, and who had full and absolute confidence in a conclusion reached upon a full showing of the facts. The death of a faithful man, while it always brings a sense of personal loss and sorrow to his friends, has yet this stimulating and wholesome effect, it causes every true man who knew the dead to gird up his loins anew, to take a firmer grip upon duty, and to labor more diligently, with full confidence that life is worth living well."

ance scheme for the formation of a new company in that city. There is to be a capital of $200,000, and every stockholder will be entitled to such an amount of insurance as his contribution to the capital stock will pay for. Twenty per cent of the amount of premiums paid in the year by each stockholder will be given as an annual dividend beyond any other dividend earned on the stock. It reminds one of the Occident Insurance Company of California, and probably it will meet a like fate.

It is a mighty poor college or educational institution nowadays that can't arrange to give the students two or three courses of lectures on Life Insurance. Some of the life companies maintain and pay a lecturer; then the Insurance Commissioners are all experts, and they like to lecture, and it would not be hard work to gather a few officers of different life companies, who also have the platform fever. It the epidemic keeps up, it will be a case of every man his own agent, and who gets the rebate.

There is quite an exodus of insurance offices from California street to the California Canneries building, Pine and Battery. The North America, the Milwaukee Mechanics, the Phoenix of London, and another company, are to move to the new building.

The Northwestern National Life, it is said, has agreed to build an auditorium for Minneapolis, Minn., the consideration being that the citizens will take $2,000,000 of insurance.

Judge Eugene Cary, manager of the Western Department of the German-American, died suddenly this week in St. Louis. He had lived seventy years of life in a manner which stamped him as a man of sterling integrity and endeared him to the many friends he made.

This is the 8th Week of Pattosien's Great Retiring Sale.—It seems the large crowds of buyers will not stop going to PATTOSIEN'S RETIRING SALE since the great sale opened six weeks ago. A double force of salesmen were engaged, and all are yet in the store. The place continues to be crowded with buyers of Fine Furniture, Carpets, Draperies, etc. Corner 16th and Mission streets.

It has become a regular business men's exchange. The quality of the chops, steaks, oysters and game served cannot be surpassed. More than that, the wants of the guests are attended to by perfectly trained waiters.

How San Francisco Looks to Me

By Fernand Travers, Tourist

Egad, I owe San Francisco and San Franciscans a debt that I can never pay in like kind, and beggar me, I am willing, indeed I am, to go to the court of Gentlemanly Courtesy and plead my inability to repay my host of the other evening and escape my social indebtedness in this one case on the plea of lack of opportunity, and be declared bankrupt in my inability to entertain him at the opening of another hotel. I doubted at first whether I cared to accept the invitation or not. Roger said there is nothing much doing at the theatres, and so I dressed, had Roger call my auto car, and went to the initial dinner in the St. Francis Hotel. Gad, I'm glad I went. You know I am a chronic sort of first nighter at the theatres. I am not above losing a pony or two at the races if I find a nag which suits my fancy, but I never was a guest at a hotel opening before, but you know, don't you, I am willing to go again to the same sort of a function. The dear good old club chap that took me in tow seemed to know the management. I think he has some money in it, and I think we saw all of the place that was worth seeing. I went down somewhere in the bowels of the earth to see the kitchen place. I fancied that my clothes and white gloves would be soiled, but there was neither smelly things nor grease, and I was as immaculate when I got out to the ground floor as I was when I went in. Rather strange, don't you think. Dinner on for a whole lot of people and nothing but clean white tiling and no smoky smell. My host took us up in the lift to the top story, and ushered us into a corner room, and I thought that I could almost see New York. The bay, don't you know, from those windows seemed so close I fancied I could knuckle a marble into it, and the little park affair in front of the hotel has a Frenchy sort of look which you can't see from the level ground. One of the ladies in the party, a right well-gowned one, too, said it looked like a scarf-pin in the tie of the St. Francis. I thought that was rather clever. I am disappointed in the one thing that nowhere now do I know an equal to this inn. It is a sort of combination of a fellow's club, home and hotel. It is not gorgeous. It is the quiet sort of well-appointed place that takes hold of you when the porter opens the door, and it makes you feel that you are for the time in a good place where you can be comfortable. The colorings are restful; there is not a single note of the bizarre or nouveau riche in the whole place. I felt the East and West people had met at last; that here I had found a place exclusive enough and not garish, to satisfy even my critical taste. It has the repose and luxury of a good old English home with the freedom of the society of the West. I am infatuated with it. By Jove, I have wandered a bally lot in my enthusiasm over the evening. We went into the principal dining room, don't you know, for dinner. It was a stunner. I have seen a lot of dining rooms in my travels, both public and private, but nothing equal in effect to this one. The other persons there were a-plenty, and really the San Francisco men were for once in my knowledge all proper in dress. The one poor chap who had tweeds on attracted more attention than he wanted. I am not going to write anything about the beauties of the room. If the hotel will accept you, you can go and see it for your own self, but I trust that the management will make a rule, and sort of enforce it, don't you know, and not allow people to dine in that beautiful room except they are in full dress. This makes it swagger and exclusive. If a fellow looks anything at all, he looks it in his dinner clothes, and the beggar that can't or won't dress for ladies had better dine alone. I saw for the first time in my stay in San Francisco an approach to Continental customs. Some ladies were in decollete costume. They were rather worth admiring, as your well and correctly frocked San Francisco gentlewoman always is. You have the best-dressed women and worst-dressed men on earth here, don't you know.

I felt that there was that relaxation of formality which only comes from the knowledge that those who surround you are well-bred and socially are on a par with oneself. My host knew how to do things, and we three gentleman, thanks to the grace of the three ladies, were requested to order "a deux."

And when the wine card was passed to me I had a revelation. I found a few old friends of mine, quarts of whose family I had helped down before—a Chateau Margeaux Bordeaux, served just at the right temperature, and then I gloated over the "Widow" Cliquot (yellow label), iced to a degree, and I swear, by gad, I never sipped a better bottle anywhere.

The things we had to eat were perfect, but eating is not pleasant to discuss at any time. The napery was beyond any cavil, and the glass on the table was perfect. You know I admire correct service; I hate to dine out without Roger, but the waiter person who served me did it like—like—well, like Roger would. I could not find any fault. He must have been trained abroad; he was the sort of alert, silent, watchful, unobtrusive waiter that makes a dinner a success and makes money for his master. With the music, the flowers, the effect of the room, its lights and the beauteous women and their frocks, I could have fancied myself in Berlin or Paris. It was only the excellence of everything that made me recollect a fellow can't get the sort of thing I enjoyed at the St. Francis anywhere on the continent; if he can, he is a better finder than I am. The European hotels are all bad, and not to be compared to those in the States. From Sheppard's in Cairo to Claridge in London, from the Claridge to the Waldorf in New York is a far cry, and I have tried them many times, but my patron saint in the hotel way hereafter is St.

Francis. The man that caught that name for an Inn in San Francisco is, by gad, a genius. I really think, now, you have something out here that would make life pleasant all the year round, and maybe I will make up my mind to stay with you. It's not every day, you know, that a chap can domicile himself in a place where he can get just what he wants when he wants it, under one roof tree, with a library place and music and pictures and flowers and a place where he can entertain his friends sans reproche. If they will take Roger I rather think I shall figure with the urbane management. There was one feature of the evening I did not like; that is, the American manner of staring. It is very offensive. The crowd, also, was a little too much of a crush. I suppose the hotel could not help that, being the first night, but I'll wager that they know their business, and it won't come again. Also, they need a bobbie or two in front to make the common people move on. One does not like to be guyed by a costermonger when he leaves his auto. It shows to me, however, how careful we of the classes should be, because we set an example to the masses, and the beggars imitate us as closely as they can; still they must be kept in their place. Maybe in this country you won't agree with me, but that is the opinion of —Travers.

WHERE FLOCKS THE SMART SET.

Mrs. Cook's handsome millinery parlors in the Phelan building were decorated with apple blossoms on the occasion of the opening for this spring. The dainty decorations and the exquisite Paris importations called for much admiring comment. Among those present were several members of the exclusive set. Mrs. Cook has always been the recipient of the patronage of those who know, and the Spring Opening at her establishment was like a premiere at the opera.

The carpet becomes very dirty in winter, but this can easily be remedied by sending it to Spaulding's Carpet Cleaning Works, 353 Tehama street. There the carpet is cleansed from every particle of dirt without any injury to the fabric, and is returned looking as fresh and new as when first put down.

A FAR-SEEING MAN.

When he reached home he drew a roll of bills from his pocket and tossed it over to his wife.

"Better go shopping," he said. "Get some of those things that we thought we couldn't afford."

"Where did you get the money?" she asked.

"I drew it from the savings banks," he replied. "There's no use trying to save anything now."

"Why not?" she inquired.

"I've joined the union," he explained.

"Joined the union?" she cried.

"Yes; had to do it, so we don't want to get the worst of it."

"Why?" she persisted.

"Oh, I'll be on strikes of one kind or another most of the time now," he said, "and when I'm not striking I'll be paying strike benefits. The money is bound to go, and I want to be in a position to get as much out of the union as any one. If I have money in the bank there will be no strike benefits for me when I'm ordered to quit work. 'You don't need it,' they'll say, 'for you've got money. We can only afford to make payments to those who haven't any.' You see, there's a penalty put on thrift and a premium on shiftlessness. The man who saves has to pay himself for time lost at the order of the union, and the man who doesn't save gets the help. In a year from now our money will be gone anyhow, so we might as well spend it while we can get some personal advantage out of it, and then come in on even terms with the others for the strike benefits. It's the fellow who hasn't anything and never expects to have anything who gets the advantage. Take the money, Maggie, before it gets beyond our reach. You helped save it, and the union will only help us spend it if you don't do it first."—Chicago Post.

"I hear you are dissatisfied with your doctor's bill." "Yes. I don't think he's entitled to $250 for that operation." "Why not?" "Because if he was he'd claim more."

WOS Y GIL TO YI YONK IK.

Across the sad and solemn sea
I reach a friendly hand to thee,
My brother in adversity,
Yi Yonk Ik.
I, too, have seen the lamp of fame
Snuffed out, just as its rosy flame
Filled the wick.

I, too, have seen coy glory flit
Just when my name had made a hit,
And people tried pronouncing it,
Yi Yonk Ik.
The splendor that I made mine own,
Now rests beneath a chiseled stone—
"Jacet hic."

Your name, with rhythmic clink and clank,
Was one before which others shrank—
Mine with softness rose and sank,
Yi Yonk Ik.
My name was like a serenade,
Until some jealous lout or jade Threw a brick.

My name was like a gentle sigh—
A song beneath the Southern sky,
But still, we're brothers, you and I,
Yi Yonk Ik.
Although your name when spoken makes
A sound like Westinghouse's brake
Clutching quick.
But do not mourn. Rejoice with me,
For future ages still shall see
Our names a-romp through history
Yi Yonk Ik.
Yes, Yi Yonk Ik and Wos y Gil Shall through the coming epochs peal,
We can't kick.

Tribune.

A young woman who recently became a teacher in a kindergarten entered a trolley car in Brooklyn yesterday and bowed pleasantly to a man who sat across the aisle. He raised his hat in return, but it was evident that he did not recognize the young woman. "Oh, excuse me," she remarked in tones which could be heard by every one in the car. "I mistook you for some one else. I thought you were the father of two of my children." She left the car at the next corner.

Mrs. R. J. Burdette, the humor-ist's wife is a great traveler. She has in her California home a collection of beautiful bells from every quarter of the world, and she has in her memory a collection of odd incidents and sayings gathered in as many and diverse places as the bells were. Mrs. Burdette says that while touring in the Scottish Highlands one summer she was taken to a cave in which Macbeth was said to have been born. She examined the cave attentively. She listened attentively to the eloquent speech of her guide. At the end she said to the man: "Come, now, tell me truly; is this really the place where Macbeth was born?"
The guide smiled awkwardly. He shifteä about a little. "Well," he said, "it is one of the places."

Professor E. G. Dexter, of the University of Illinois, whose interesting investigations have proved football to be a harmless game, is popular on account of his geniality. After a certain football victory
Professor Dexter entertained one night a group of students at his residence. A magnificent sword hung over the fireplace of the library, and during a space of silence, Professor Dexter took down this sword and brandished it impressively. "Never will I forget," he exclaimed, "the day I drew this blade for the first time."
"Where did you draw it, sir?"
a Frenchman asked respectfully.
"At a raffle," said Professor Dexter.

Abraham Benedict tells of a school teacher in Rochester who had a great deal of difficulty with a few mischievous boys. One day when one of them had given her a great deal of annoyance, she said to him: "I wish I could be your mother for just about one week. I would rid you of your naughty disposition." "Very well, I will speak to father about it," promptly responded the lad.

The Political Situation

The success of the Hearst forces in carrying Rhode Island has materially changed their programme. They now claim that the editor will have California, Washington, Oregon, Nevada, Utah, Montana, Colorado, the two Dakotas, Iowa, Nebraska, Kansas, and Missouri, with the two Carolinas, Georgia, Kentucky and Arkansas, besides several of the territories. While that does not give him two-thirds of the voting strength of the St. Louis Convention, it is a majority, for all that Judge Parker will get are New York, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Maryland, some of the Southern States, and such of the New England States as Hearst does not bag. Since before the Civil War it has been the rule at every National Democratic Convention to pass a resolution that it shall require two-thirds to nominate, but that is not a rule that the Convention cannot of itself abrogate, because it is the supreme power in the party, and moreover it is not even a rule that exists unless the Convention shall specifically so provide by adopting it. If, then, Hearst should name a committee on order of business that would make no report on the matter, or which would report in favor of a majority nomination, it would prevail if Hearst has a majority of the delegates, and he could in that way secure his nomination without the necessity of getting a two-third vote of the delegates. That is the plan, now announced at Hearst headquarters, proposed to put in force if Hearst finds when the Convention meets that he has the requisite number of votes to nominate him on a majority rule.

It can also be announced that he will be nominated by Bryan, and that he has promised to put that statesman in his cabinet if he is elected. It is now conceded all over the East that the nominee will be either Parker or Hearst, and if Hearst is not nominated he will secure an independent nomination from a convention of labor union delegates and radical Democrats. In that movement he will have Bryan's support. This latter part of the programme is not talked openly, but on the contrary it is said that Hearst will support the nominee at St. Louis, whoever he may be. That is said so as to give the conservatives no excuse for bolting if Hearst is nominated, but nevertheless they are already talking of doing just that thing, and another Palmer and Bucker campaign is not unlikely.

The question is naturally asked, what the local Labor Union party will do if Hearst jumps the Democratic nomination, and appeals to the Unionists to help nominate him as their candidate? That a very strong contingency would stand with him is certain, but where would the Mayor, who now professes to be a Republican, or Ruef, who attended the last meeting of the Republican Central Committee get off? Would they go back on their Union party or their Republican affiliations? If after the Democrats nominated Hearst the Union Labor party should endorse him, where would His Honor and his friends find themselves? How could the Mayor refuse to support Hearst after the trip he made East to help elect him to Congress, especially if Hearst were endorsed by the labor union element? Those are all questions that are being asked in Union Labor circles, because a movement is already on foot to endorse Hearst's candidacy, and there can be no question but that if he is nominated, every union in the country will be asked to stand by him. Cornelius and the factions which Livernash owns are only waiting for the signal to call a meeting of labor unionists for the purpose of endorsing the so-called editor.

But while the politicians are calculating on the labor vote, so-called, it would be well for them not to overlook the fact that an organization has recently sprung into existence, the Citizens' Alliance, which proposes to oppose men like Hearst, who are endeavoring to raise class issues and to appeal to the prejudices and ignorance of those they can influence with their sophistries. The Alliance claims to have an immense membership all over the country, and while its real strength is probably much less than it claims, just as the union labor vote never equals a union labor parade, yet undoubtedly there are thousands who would vote with it on the issue of an open shop, and the turning over of the Government to men like Hearst and Livernash, and Richard Cornelius, and the McCarthys, and others who might be named. It is well, for instance, to remember that the farming community still believes in virtue and respectability, and has not forgotten how they suffered right here in this town when the teamsters would not allow their produce to be moved, but forced them to let it lie rotting on the wharves and at the depots. The farmers are the conservative element of the country, and they, with the laborers who want to be free, and the professional men, and the thousands who do not propose to turn this Government into a socialistic commune, will all get behind a banner that the Citizens' Alliance may raise. It is well not to forget that there are 15,000,000 voters in the United States, and that only 2,000,000 belong to unions.

It has been settled that Metcalf will not stand in the way of the Governor's ambition to go to St. Louis as delegate-at-large from this State, and unless there is a change in the present programme he will be accorded that honor. When Bulla was here attending the meeting of the State Central Committee he seemed very confident that he could defeat Judge McKimley for delegate-at-large from that part of the State. It is said that the fact that the Judge is the attorney for Griffiths, the man who attempted to kill his wife at Santa Monica, is going to hurt him politically. There is a great deal of feeling in Los Angeles against Griffiths, and the effort of his attorneys to get him out of jail, and to save him from the penitentiary is not looked upon with favor. Of course it may very correctly be said that the Judge is doing only his duty in defending his client, yet popular prejudice is a curious thing, and there is no question but that the unpopularity of his client is being worked for all it is worth against him.

The Democratic State Central Committee has met, fought, been captured by Hearst and adjourned. It was a wonderful gathering when one reflects that it is the local representative of what was once a great political party. Perhaps the most remarkable feature of the whole show was the character of the men who have sold themselves out to the Hearst. An ex-Governor, two Congressmen, were the most conspicuous, though there were others. It might be well to keep an eye on them in the future, for men who would so far debase their country and themselves as to take Hearst's money, and certainly no other excuse can be offered by a Californian for endorsing his candidacy, are not worthy of public confidence. Barry and editor Leake of the Woodland Democrat tried to prevent the indorsement of Hearst's aspirations, but after ex-Congressman Maguire had eaten his dish of crow with a relish that did him credit, the resolutions went through with a whoop. Leake even intimated that he would support Hearst if he is nominated, and Green of the Colusa Sun, and Freeman, the Glenn County editor, who thought he was running for Congress against Metcalf some months ago, are all riding on the band wagon and cheering on the procession.

* * *

But all is not yet serene. The State Convention is to meet at Santa Cruz on May 16th, and as all the delegates are to be elected at that gathering—district delegates as well as delegates at large—it would seem to be a foregone conclusion that Hearst will get the solid vote of this State at St. Louis, and probably he will; but meantime the country people who profess to be Democrats in this State are to be heard from, as they will be in November from all over the country, if he is nominated, and they are unanimously opposed to him. While they will hardly defeat the leaders who have seen Hearst's money, they can make a lot of noise at the convention, and undoubtedly they will avail themselves to the full of their opportunities in that line.

Careful people should refrain from gathering in groups where they may be observed, lest Hearst hear about it and publish them as holding mass meetings in his favor.

There may be some doubt whether or not one of the participants in the latest prize-fight was robbed. We hope he was; generally it's the fool public's pocket that is picked in these affairs.

That irrepressible President lectured a bunch of Ogallala Sioux visiting the White House on the evils of gambling, and to the credit of the red men it is recorded that they did not laugh until they were out of doors.

Colonel William J. Bryan swelled out his chest the other day before a Connecticut audience, and in the exordium of one of his hand-made lectures remarked: "It requires a brave man to stand up against error, to stand up against error in his own political party, and to maintain a righteous principle." Puzzle: Find the "brave man."

GRAFT IN THE BOARD OF HEALTH.

For months past the administration of the Department of Health has been spotted by instances of graft and evidences of gross incompetency. The main offenders have been the doctors appointed to care for those unfortunates who by reason of accident or other untoward circumstance, have been forced to submit to the mercenary desires or the negligent care of the city's physicians. We have had occasion heretofore to criticise the management of the emergency hospitals. It has been marked by incompetence so gross that it closely approaches to a disregard for human life. In one case, a sailor, stabbed in the abdomen, was sent by one of the hospital's young men on a wild ride in an ambulance to the City and County Hospital. On the way he died from loss of blood. More recently, a man suffering from a fractured skull was considered a pneumonia case. The fracture of the skull was not discovered until the autopsy. The other day, Dr. Pawlicki, of the hospital, charged an emergency patient a fee of $2.50 for services rendered in the hospital, the physician acting at the time in his official capacity, for which he receives from the city a salary of $100 a month. This petty graft was so "raw" that when the patient exposed it, Dr. Pawlicki was forced to return him the money. But now comes Dr. George F. Brackett, the Chief of all the physicians employed in the emergency hospitals, and calmly puts in a bill for $500 against the estate of an old man who was originally under the doctor's care at the hospital, and who died subsequently while Dr. Brackett was attending him. It is said that when this patient arrived at the hospital, the attending physicians found on him a bank book showing deposits amounting to $1,800. The next day they removed him to a private hospital, where Dr. Brackett attended him. In two days more the man was dead. Now Brackett, with an assurance that is astonishing, puts in his claim for $500. Of course, the dead man's relatives decline to pay the demand.

In his defense, Brackett says the old man insisted upon being removed to a private hospital. But that defense is an evasion of the main question at issue, which is: Why should the physicians of the Board of Health be permitted to use their official position simply as a means of advertising and increasing their private practice? Why should they be permitted to practically force the emergency patients to subsequently pay them fees? These men receive salaries of $100 a month. Dr. Brackett is paid $150 a month by the city. That is ample recompense for the time they give to their duties. Their practice of using the emergency hospital as an ante-room to their private offices is grafting. The practice is vicious and dishonorable. We do not apprehend that any of these physicians would be guilty of malicious malpractice, nor do we think they would lend themselves in their private capacities to dishonest acts. It seems, therefore, all the more remarkable that as soon as they enter the city's employ they eagerly resort to measures which are not only unprofessional, but bear a very unpleasant resemblance to extortion. It was found necessary some years ago to bar out Police Court pettifoggers and their cappers from the city prison. Even the criminal is protected from human vultures. The Board of Health should see to it that it should not become necessary to pass ordinances for the physical and financial protection of patients of the emergency hospitals.

AN HONEST DECISION.

At least one judge sits on the Superior Bench of San Francisco of the kind men may be proud to vote for—James M. Seawell, whose term will expire next year. This upright and unreachable minister of justice has again proved his fitness for the bench by a prompt judgment given this week against the Harbor Commissioners in the malodorous case which involves the news stand privilege at the ferry. Instead of waiting for weeks or months, as is the practice of the Superior Court, Judge Seawell took only a few days after the final submission of the case to hand down his decision permanently enjoining the Harbor Board from ousting the holders of the privilege, Foster and Orear. Of course the Board, headed by the unscrupulous Spear, the petty politician with the ravenous relatives, will seek by appeal or otherwise to get behind this expression of the law and of justice. Meanwhile Spear's brother-in-law, one Rooney, will doubtless be given a place at the waterfront trough. We shall be surprised, also, if the Commissioners do not now accept the maximum bid of Foster and Orear, who offered $1,500 a month for the concession as against the Spear-Rooney bid of $1,200, but were refused consideration on the ground that the tender was never legally made, was not in good faith, and was too late, anyway, the prize having already disappeared into the Spear-Rooney pocket.

The ground of Judge Seawell's decision was that while the Harbor Commissioners had, under the law, discretion as to the letting of this privilege, it must be a sound discretion, and not, as had been fully proved, a bald, bold attempt to discriminate against a bona fide bidder in favor of a relative of one of the Commissioners. So Spear and his fellow commissioners stand convicted of a scandalous piece of "graft." They were "caught with the goods on them"—most of them on Spear. They ought to be, if they are not, politically damned, and the indictment on which they have been found guilty as to all counts runs not only against them, but against the administration which put Spear into office and permitted the others—Mackenzie and Kirkpatrick—to stay there. It is the most convincing argument of unworth and unfitness ever leveled at a State administration. Until this scandal broke, the personal and political standing of Governor Pardee was high. He had been scored by some as perverse, as unwise or unfortunate in his choice of men, but it had not been charged that there was anything the matter with his public morals or motives. Now it is different. His silence, amounting to consent, makes equally culpable with the predacious trio which runs the waterfront. He will hear of this news stand scandal when he asks again for public preferment—and so, we trust, will Judge Seawell.

PRIZE-FIGHTS AND CRIME.

How many of the thousands who attended the Britt-Corbett prize-fight last week, and of the other thousands who read of the fight in the press, paused to consider that San Francisco is the only city in the world to-day where such a contest is possible under the law? How many of the prominent citizens who sat at the ring side, and were afterwards proud to be quoted in the daily papers as experts at the game, paused to consider whether or not, by giving their countenance to the affair, they were aiding and abetting in the maintenance of an element than which none is more dangerous to the good name of a community? One who studies conditions in this city need not exercise much thought to draw the analogy between the prosperity of the prize ring and the prevalence of crime. Even now, the Chief of Police is explaining to the Grand Jury some of the reasons for the long continued series of violent crimes, which, for more than a year past, has put terror in the hearts of the citizens. But he bears all too lightly on the recognition publicly given to prize-fights and prize-fighters. The prize-ring is a forcing ground of all that is brutal and vicious in the criminal class. To begin with, there never yet was a prize-fighter in whom the brute part of his nature was not predominant. They are differentiated only by the comparative amount of gray matter they carry in their skulls, but in all alike the animal element is the controlling influence. Now, for every Jimmy Britt who may be a quicker or a stronger brute than his opponent, and thereby force himself to the top of his particular dung-hill, there are untold scores of young men who fail in their purpose to become champions of their respective classes. These are the fellows who are forced on in the "preliminaries" to whet the appetite of the multitude for the bigger bruisers of the night. What becomes of these "failures?" Ask the police. From their ranks the great class of vicious criminals is recruited. Having appeared in the lime-light, they have a distaste for honest toil. Having failed as prize-fighters, they resort to the road, with murder in their heart and bludgeons in their hands, taking loot and lives without discrimination. For every prize-fighter who has not committed a violent crime, fifty may be found whose pictures are in the rogues' gallery. Even the successful ones give their after-lives to the saloon business, pool rooms and the propagation of evil. The trouble with this community is that the so-called "good" citizen thinks but too little, if he thinks at all, upon the effect of those things to which he gives countenance.

VICTORY FOR THE FLOWER SELLERS.

Lacking the courage to veto the flower market ordinance, so unanimously and peremptorily demanded by the people, or afraid, perhaps, of splitting up his "solid five" in the Board of Supervisors, Mayor Schmitz sullenly allowed the bill to become a law without his signature. His position was, he explained, that the measure was not in conformity with the charter, being a grant of special privileges, and so would ultimately be knocked out by the courts. The Mayor, or the person behind the screen who pulls the string and makes the mannikin skip and posture, is grievously in error about the "special privilege" objection. The ordinance represents the intelligence and experience of the Merchants' Association—which practically built the charter—and the legal wisdom of that body's attorney. If such a combination cannot draw a measure that will not conflict with the charter, no other combination can. But it does not take a lawyer to find how foolish the Mayor's objection is; any layman ought to be able to differentiate between the "special privileges" barred by the charter and the "bogey man" of the Mayor's imagining. This ordinance permits anybody to sell flowers under certain restrictions in certain public places, provided the owners of abutting property give consent. If there be any "special privileges" in this, then all the other ordinances limiting certain operations or establishments to certain districts are unconstitutional—the fire-limit building ordinance, the cow ordinance, the pole and wire ordinances and all the laws akin to these.

But Schmitz is only "straddling" again. He dared not veto the flower market measure for fear of offending too far all the respectable elements of the community, including the powerful Merchants' Association, which fathered and forwarded the ordinance, and, on the other hand, he dared not sign it because of his relations or the relations of somebody else with the Association of Retail Florists. It is more than a suspicion, and almost a certainty, that this latter body, anxious as it may have been to drive the peddlers out of business, was cunningly used in this matter for the wreaking of a petty spite on a private citizen who championed the cause of the basket men, not for his own gain or advantage, but for the city's good. As often happens in the attempting of such meanness, the result was disastrous to the spite-wreaking agency. Instead of a few violet-venders on a single corner, the Retail Florists find themselves confronted by the competition of growers and others who will sell their wares freely on a dozen corners and be cheerfully patronized by a public which understands the flower business better than it did. So much for a mean-minded Mayor.

TO BEAUTIFY SAN FRANCISCO.

It does not matter who started the Association for the Improvement and Adornment of San Francisco, or who gave it such a handicap of a name. This body was the first to see a re-opening of the city's chance to acquire that noble garden by the sea known as Sutro's Heights and to begin the task of arousing public sentiment for that praiseworthy purpose. The citizen who does not approve of this step is guilty of short-sightedness, silurianism, mossbackism and all the other forms of incivism that belong to the ante-charter period of San Francisco's development. The News Letter does not hesitate to range itself on the side of the A. F. T. I. A. A. O. S. F., and to second warmly its efforts to add Sutro Heights to the city's pleasure grounds and show places.

The situation is this: After fighting the trust sought to be established under Adolph Sutro's curious will, and after knocking it out in court, the heirs have changed their minds. They admit irregularity in the legal proceedings and are willing to sell the Heights property to the city on the terms dictated by Sutro himself—at 20 per cent less than any other bidder, the proceeds to go to certain charitable bequests. We shall never again be offered such a bargain, for the excellent reason that there is not on the peninsula anything that approaches Sutro Heights in desirability as a place to be owned and used by the public. The late Mr. Sutro was a peculiar man in some respects that may well be forgotten. He was a remarkable man in respects that ought to be remembered. One of these latter was a prevision beyond all of his contemporaries as to the future of the city, its needs and its possibilities. It was this prevision that made him acquire and lay out the gardens at the heights and build the world-famed baths below the Cliff House, planning in them a public playground unique, vast and superb.

Now it lies in San Francisco's hands to make Sutro's dream come speedily and splendidly true. It was a dream plenteously worth realization at much more than the contemplated cost. That is why the News Letter heartily endorses the organization with the nine-jointed title.

"Dancing is akin to holiness," says Dr. G. S. Hall, of Worcester, Mass. Professor Griggs will kindly step down off his pedestal and let Dr. Hall take his place as the American woman's "ideal man."

THE INSOLENCE OF SERVANTS.

If there is one vice more prevalent than another in San Francisco it is the vile manners of such a large proportion of those who are brought into contact with the public and from whom a certain amount of at least ordinary courtesy is due. Every one complains of it. The stranger within our gates is repelled by it. He comes here quite prepared to be treated on terms of democratic equality. He finds instead a coarse boorishness which hurts his feelings and arouses his anger. He feels insulted, as a matter of fact, he is insulted, and the insult is as a general rule intentional and malicious.

It is no argument to say that the stranger behaves superciliously; this is very seldom the case, for the tradition of American equality has become so universal in Europe that every educated European approaches our shores in a spirit of trepidation, almost, lest he should appear to be over-ostentatious in his insistence upon a right to live.

The Eastern American recoils in disgust and dismay from the manner of our railroad officials, the petty little jacks in office of our steamboats and wharves, the flippant and imbecile wit of our car-conductors, and the lofty, supercilious dignity of the placid policeman.

But the list does not stop here. Go into the Police Court, and you will find the same insolent, supercilious manner at the hands of the assistant clerk, into the Superior Court, and the small official will snub you for asking a simple question, and all but down you with a stare when you seek knowledge of some of the matters upon which he is paid to inform you. When you enter the Supreme Court precincts, the vestiges of the same manner are there, as of the soil, but rarified and developed by maturity. The dignified quiet of the haunts of the distinguished old gentlemen who write such unnecessarily long, ponderous opinions, and fill up such numbers of comparatively useless books, has its effect upon the mind and manner of even the Californian servitor, and a colorable imitation of good manners prevails. But in the United States offices alone, and only in those connected with the judiciary department, do good manners and quiet courtesy have sway, so that it is not altogether humiliating and shameful to do business there. How is it that the officials of the judiciary department, even in some instances of the Marshal's office, be meek-mannered and kindly-disposed, at all events superficially, while those of the Customs House be unmannerly and uncouth? Some one to whom the subject was mentioned remarked parenthetically and inconsequentially: "Colonel Irish." But the influence of the gallant Colonel surely does not extend to the Customs House; on the contrary, the presiding genius of the Customs House presents a very marked contrast to that of the distinguished naval officer in the matter of geniality.

This raises the question as to the differences in degree of courtesy and attention. For instance, why should a steward at a hotel be courteous, bland and accommodating, and the purser on a ship grow more and more discourteous in proportion to his proximity to this port? These are hard riddles, almost insoluble, in fact; they do not appear to rest on any reasonable basis. I once knew a man who collected for the gas company, then he became a car conductor. As a collector he was the blandest, most winning, I was going to say most captivating, of individuals, so that it was a real sorrow to have to explain to him that you really had not the change, but as a car conductor, he developed a fiendish temper and a demoniac passion for hurrying old ladies on and off.

The only explanation, and this is no explanation, consists in the fact that some occupations as conducted in this city, but not elsewhere, mind you, not elsewhere, have an unavoidable and incurable tendency to produce a condition of manners which can only be fairly described as vile, and which have no counterpart in any other city in the world.

FERRY FREAKS.

In some previous carma, a number of the commuters must have been bears, lions, tigers or other beasts. They must have suffered long and serious incarceration. They did not forget the habit acquired in cages while in transition, and it sticks to them still. These poor creatures, not yet freed from this hereditary taint, still affect walking to and fro every time they are forcibly detained where there is a restraining railing. The water on all sides prevents their escape, and the illusion is complete. For the time being they return to their previous condition of servitude, and when in that condition are more or less dangerous. Their spite against humanity is vented on people who prefer to sit and watch the landscape and the bay. They trample on feet and obstruct the view with no more compunction than would any other animal. They are noisome and conscienceless, but not at all responsible.

ST. LOUIS EXPOSITION.

The St. Louis Exposition promises to be the greatest the world ever produced. The extent of its area is 1240 acres, almost four times larger than the Paris Exposition, and twice as large as the World's Fair at Chicago. The buildings cover 128 acres. This is about fifty per cent more than the space occupied for the same purpose at Chicago, while the cost totalizes the stupendous amount of fifty million dollars, compared with twenty-eight million for the latter Exposition. It will be opened on the 30th of April, but from present indications, will not be completed before the latter part of June. Several contracts have been let for work, allowing until June 30th for completion.

The Exposition management hold the signed promises of most old-established hotel managers, agreeing not to change rates during the Exposition. They are also making every effort to locate rooming accommodations. Several large hotels of temporary structure have been erected near the Fair site, also one very large one within the grounds. Notwithstanding these facts, rents are very high, and in several instances have been raised one hundred per cent. Desirable rooms are scarce. General admission to the Fair grounds will be fifty cents.

How San Francisco Looks to Me

By Fernand Travers, Tourist

No. 14

In one of my communications to your valuable paper I saw fit to compliment the American boot-makers. I am really pleased to note that my judgment is confirmed in this particular by one of the most prominent ladies in the smartest set of American society, who is now in England. She sent back to this country to order her footwear. I really feel, don't you know, that Mrs. Bradley Martin compliments me by agreeing with my opinion. I don't really know if I had anything to do with the lady's actions in this matter, but I expressed myself so strongly in favor of the American boot-man that maybe I had.

You know that the custom pertains on the Continent of regarding the negro as a sort of white man—a social equal, as it were. I never could go this myself, and I never saw it in America, but the indications that it is coming is apparent. A black man has had his feet under the mahogany of the American President, and the other night at the theatre I saw from my box a big negro, coally black, accompanied by a negress of just as obscure a color, calmly walk down the aisle and seat themselves among some rather stylishly-dressed people who had white skin. These persons were, strange as it may seem, dressed in good taste. The negro man wore a dress suit and the female was in evening toilet. They were dressed for a box and should have had one. I really wonder if they tried to buy one and were refused. If they could not buy a box, why should they have a seat. It is, I think, as I said, that the negro is forcing himself into a place where he can buy anything he has the cash to pay for. You have had over here your prejudices against persons of color, but after the theatre episode, I think, don't you know, that the money of the negro is going to send your prejudices to pot. At least I am sure in my opinion that the "colored" dollar at some of the box-offices of some of your theatres here is as good as the other kind. I really don't know what I would do if I found the usher chap seating a negro and negress next to my seat. I think, by gad, I should get out, don't you know, and that demned quick. I take a box or loge anyway, so I do not worry much. I beg your pardon, but I think the personages who sell the tickets at the office might look after it so that the negroes are not seated next to people of pretensions. It is to be condemned very severely.

Yes, I had to go to the Horse Show to ensure its success, don't you know. Really a sort of creditable affair, given for charity by a society called the Doctor's Daughters. I really don't know who the Doctors were, but, by gad, the Daughters do the Doctors credit. Yes, a wholly bally lot of credit. The boxes were bewildering in the gay-colored frocks, and the beauty of the gentlewomen wearing them, and the men were so-so, but the chaps who wore the "horsey" jewelry were utterly in bad taste at a society function. This was a social affair and not a stock show at the capital of some 'shire, and some few of the guests got a bad idea of dressing appropriately. In England, we don't roach or bang our horses any more. It really spoils the effect of the animal to the eye, anyway. It suggests the Dartmoor or Pentonville hair-cut on the man. They do one thing over there, however; they shine the hoofs of the animals and they make a team keep step when driving. I enjoyed the show, I really did, and think it was quite creditable to the Daughters in question. The crowding at the entrances and the pushing showed plainly to me, don't you know, that there is still a lot of missionary work to be done before you are as perfect here in the little things of good breeding as is

A TRUSTY TIP ON THINGS THEATRICAL.

ALCAZAR—A gorgeously mounted dramatization of Parsifal—Go.
 COLUMBIA—Harriet's Honeymoon—This will stand seeing twice—Mary Mannerling.
 ORPHEUM—A fine entertainment. Vaudeville.
 TIVOLI—Mr. Pickwick—musical.
 FISCHER'S—Kismet—a remarkable and a finely constructed skit.
 GRAND—Mrs. Fiske—only fair.

The Ibsen play, "Hedda Gabler," was given at the Grand all this week by Mrs. Fiske. It may have been a very enjoyable play to some who like that sort of thing, and who sat near enough to hear what was going on. It would seem the part of wisdom to remedy the defects that mar the Fiske productions. I am not alone in my criticism of the atrocious pronunciation of the star and her support. I am in receipt of a number of Eastern newspapers that give Mrs. Fiske credit for speech that might as well be Sanskrit or ancient Hebraic as far as her audience knows. The words come too fast for intelligible utterance, and then they are shot at the audience with Gattling-gun speed.

The rest of the company have caught the infection from the star, and with the exception of an occasional moment of absolute silence in the house, it was impossible to follow the thread of the play. It is said that Mrs. Fiske is suffering from nerves. The best training for the nerves is a slow and clear enunciation. Mrs. Fiske should put herself through a course of stunts and limit herself to less than two hundred words per volley.

Mrs. Fiske is a wonderful actress, and it is a pity that such a splendid scene as that of the burning of the manuscript should have been marred by limitations of voice. Mrs. Fiske's Hedda is a fine piece of work, and the actress shows her great ability in the last scene, just before she shoots herself. She is the personification of malicious jealousy and love and hatred. The company is quite as good as the star, but if you want to enjoy Mrs. Fiske, get a seat right under the stage, where you may be able to dissect society Volapuk at your leisure.

The collaboration of Richard F. Carroll and Gustav Kerker, which resulted in "Kismet," now being produced at Fischer's Theatre, may easily take rank with a pretentious comic opera. The choruses are fine; there is a thread to the play; the specialties are all good, and the songs are full of music of a much higher order than any one would expect. "Kismet" is the most deserving thing in book and music that has been served to the public at this house since it opened its doors. It would be manifestly unfair to mention any one of the principals and omit another. They are all deserving of the highest praise. There is not a jarring line in the whole performance, and I am glad to be able to say so, because I have been finding fault with the productions at this house for these many moons. There is a feature that must take the women and children, and that is the song by Haideez (Mr. Carroll), and the little children of the Harem. There is a clever little tot in this bunch that brings encore after encore. "Kismet" should crowd Fischer's nightly.

The show at the Orpheum is a distinct improvement of the foregoing week. The swinging club work of the Mowat boys is a most clever stunt. The Hotel Repose act of the Warren, Walter and Wesson team is a comical affair, and will cause you to lay on fat. There are several other very clever features, and the holdovers are the best of the former week's performers, among them "La Belle Guerrerro."

The curtain at the Grand, the advertising curtain, is enough to give one indigestion. It is an outrage on the public to have to face such an atrocity, such a fierce piece of the worst of the fence painter's art, between the acts. Is it not about time all such catch-penny devices were relegated to the junk heap, where they belong? If the commercial spirit prompts the adoption of this means of raising the financial wind, why not employ a painter (who knows his business), to tell us that there is balm in pink pellets and soothing influence in straight front corsets. The pictorial curtain is bad enough, old enough, moldy enough, but we can stand it because we know the management needs the money, but the advertising curtain is an infliction, an injury, and an unnecessary insult.

The Alcazar folk are going back to the routine of a new play every week, and we may expect some fun in the farcical comedy "On the Quiet." The Alcazar stock is especially well-fitted for the humorous, and Augustus Thomas has given the company a great chance for fun-making that is not going to be lost sight of by the players. A young collegian makes sure of his bride by marrying her before he leaves for college, and Mr. Durkin is cast for the part. Miss Block, as the heroine of the affair, has scope for her best comic expression. It is said that the management has provided a yacht scene that will please everybody.

Richard Mansfield has asked for accommodation for dressing rooms for 106 people, and he says that he will bring an enormous amount of special scenery for the production of "Ivan the Terrible."

To-night is the final performance of the present engagement of Mary Mannerling at the Columbia. Sunday we have the Alameda Lustspiel in "Das Opferlamm," and on Monday "Mam'selle Napoleon," with Anna Held as the star, and a bevy of beautiful women as her assistants. "Mam'selle Napoleon" will be a Waterloo for the Johnnies. They will capitulate at the first change of costume of the sprightly little French woman, and by the time she has made her six changes it will be a complete rout.

Fischer's Theatre will close for two weeks following the last performance of "Kismet" on Saturday night, April 10th. Two grand stairways will lead directly to the main street, the seating capacity will be increased about three hundred seats, and many improvements added to make the house most attractive. The main entrance will be forty feet in width. Four well known playwrights are at work upon new burlesques for Fischer's Theatre, based upon strictly original lines and ideas.

On Monday evening, Mrs. Fiske will present for the first time here Sardou's sparkling comedy, "Divorcons," preceded by Mrs. Oscar Beringer's charming one-act play, "A Bit of Old Chelsea."

At the Central Theatre next Monday evening the great scenic and spectacular drama, "Around the World in 80 Days," will be produced, after weeks of preparation, in a manner that will cap the climax for splendor and elaborateness.

The third concert of the twenty-seventh season of the Loring Club is announced for Native Sons' Hall on the evening of Easter Monday, April 4th.

Hawley and Vass, who present an original sketch entitled "After the Wedding," will make their first appearance at the Chutes this coming week. Agnes Miles, the original "Annie Moore Girl," and Dutch Walton, the musical comedian, will also be new. The Sheck Brothers will continue their hand-balancing act; Clark's Comedy Dog Circus will remain in evidence and Mabel Lamson, the popular contralto, will be heard in new illustrated songs. The animatoscope will show new and amusing moving pictures, and the amateurs will appear on Thursday night.

Kolb and Dill, Barney Bernard, Winfield Blake, Maude Amber, Hope and Emerson, and the entire company, which shortly go to Australia, will play a farewell season of two weeks at the Grand Opera House, beginning Sunday matinee, April 17th. Their opening bill will be "Hoity-Toity," one of their greatest successes. Popular prices will prevail.

Blind Tom, not seen here for ten years, will be at the Orpheum next week. Blind Tom is a genius, and his memory is increasing in sharpness with added years. For over forty years he has been the wonder of musicians the world over. His ear is so keen and his memory so retentive that it is only necessary that he hears a piece of music once and he will then play it in its entirety. The Welsons, aerial artists, and Omar, the human top, and many other specialties, make up a good bill for the coming week.

"The Princess of Bong" will be given by the Mohican Club on April 9th at Steinway Hall.

The rehearsals of the new Choral Club will begin next week. The special work to be taken up for this spring is "Paradise Lost," a new composition by Du-bois, the famous Frenchman.

LIBRARY TABLE

A notable feature of the present publishing season is the sudden increased demand for books on subjects connected with the Pacific Ocean and the countries now at war. Practically all books on Japan and Russia and the Pacific Ocean published in recent years have sprung into renewed popularity. The call for Mr. Colquhoun's "The Mastery of the Pacific" exhausted the edition on hand and necessitated a new one; the same is true of Mr. Wirt Gerrare's "Greater Russia." Mrs. Fraser's "Letters from Japan" is to appear in a welcome new edition in one volume. The last named work is widely known and liked as a charming and intimate picture of Japanese life by a talented woman who lived long in the island empire. The new edition will be published at a much lower price than the two-volume edition, which has had an extensive sale, and will contain all of the large number of beautiful illustrations which were in the original edition. Another volume published by The Macmillan Company which has been revived by recent events in the East is Mr. Lafcadio Hearn's "Kotto." This includes a translation of a very remarkable diary kept by a Japanese woman of the lower classes during several years, which gives a uniquely intimate picture of the inner life and thoughts of Japanese women. Other volumes of special interest just now include: "Japan: A Record in Color," by Mortimer and Dorothy Menses; Mr. Francis H. Skrine's "The Expansion of Russia," which is a historical study of Russian growth since 1815, especially in Manchuria; Mr. Walter Del Mar's bright and entertaining book of travel, "Around the World Through Japan"; and Mr. Wirt Gerrare's "The Story of Moscow."

Prophecy of West and East.

It has often been remarked that poets are prophets—though doubtless true that though "all prophets are poets, not all poets are prophets," says the Benicia New Era. Looking over some copies of the Overland Monthly of a year back two poems arrested our attention. One entitled "Builders of California" (A Prophecy) by Morrison Pixley, runs thus:

"Builders by the Western Sea
Where the golden rivers run,
Scarcely has your work begun.
Greater still your task shall be!
Here at end of all the world
Lies the goal of Empire's course;
Here, centripetal the force
Round which nations shall be whirled."

The other entitled "The Voice of the West," by John G. Neihardt, represents the West wooing the East, and closes with this stanza:

About whose sea-kissed feet the races kneel;
The years are ripening for our marriage feast.
Our weal shall be the hungry nations' weal;
Behold the spectre of the dark Past reel
And vanish in our path! The night is done!
I feel the sunrise in my blood! I feel
The strength for brilliant battles! Ho! we run Hands clasped against the World: thus moves the sun.
"And O my destined Bride, thou queenly East, These prophecies were written years ago, and the events now going on in the Far East betoken their fulfillment. The West, as represented by the Pacific Coast of the United States, is to be married to the East, as represented by the opposite coast of the Pacific Ocean. The greatest pageant the world has ever seen will be the commercial and civil union of these great coasts, which this 20th century will witness. Like other great wedding feasts it will not be a selfish affair. The "open door" doctrine already proclaimed by this great country is an invitation of all nations to come and feast with us at the wedding of the West and the East.

The Viking's Skull.

This is a story of romance and love by John R. Carling. Although the book is not well put together, it has an ingeniously constructed plot, which tells how Idris Marville, true Earl of Ormsby, recovered a treasure hidden by one of his progenitors—a Viking of the Ninth Century—and how he cleared the memory of his father, who had been wrongfully convicted of murder. There are three scenes of more or less interest and strength—the tragedy of the prologue; the opening of the tomb containing the treasure; and a dramatic performance at Favenhall, the home of the noble house of Ormsby, where Lorelie, the heroine, denounces the spurious Earl. These and many other scenes and incidents make the story exceptionally strong, dramatic, vivid and interest compelling. It is a worthy successor to the author's remarkable and successful novel, "The Shadow of the Czar."

Little, Brown & Co., Publishers, Boston, Mass.
Price, $1.50.

The Rainbow Chasers.

"The Rainbow Chasers is one of many novels of its kind. The author, John H. Whitson, selects Western Kansas for coloring, and a stereotyped Western girl for heroine. With Dick Brewster, alias Jackson Blake, cowboy, land speculator, and lover for its hero, Mr. Whitson's new novel has many of the attractions of Mr. Wister's hero, "The Virginian." The male characters are vigorous men, with red blood in their veins; and the heroine, Elinor Spencer, is high-spirited, but lovable. There are many engrossing chapters in the book, notably the one which deals with the fight which the two comrades, Jackson Blake and Jim Prethro, wage with Stone Face and his gang of desperadoes, and that which pictures the terrors of a Western blizzard.

Easter Fashions

By Lady Algy.

Ho! This way for the rag-fair! Special Easter offerings!

Not since the days of our grandmothers have these offerings been so shirred and tucked and puffed. If a single adjective is to be selected for the season's styles, "fussy" is the word. When you see a gown elaborated according to the mode and it escapes the mussy fussiness of the usual costume, you may bank on it an artiste has created the gown. Such a dress was worn by Mrs. McMullin the other night. When she was Molly Thomas, Mrs. McMullin was always distinguished by a tailored band-box precision that she now discards save for street wear. Her evening clothes have a fluffy femininity about them that is immensely becoming. The particular gown that hit me between the eyes was a pink and blue affair that hinted of the yesteryears, yet showed all the modern improvements. The material was a blue net showered with pink roses that might have fallen on it "over the garden wall." The gown was a quaint conceit in French puffings of the sort that grandmother always used for her best black silk gown. But perish the thought that these puffings were fashioned after granny's pattern. Modernity has contrived a way of running the puffs on cords that prevents the figure from looking roly-poly.

Mrs. McMullin wears a hat in the same color effect as the gown, which is one of the season's royal commands. Your hat need not show the exact shade of the gown—it may even contrast with it—but the effect must be a color symphony without discords. This means a plump supply of hats, for each and every chapeau is especially designed for some particular gown and shrieks its unfitness when pressed into service with a robe for which it was not built. The new-style hats have a union of their own which obliges the owner to give them shorter hours, and the milliners reap more pay in consequence.

While on the subject of hats, the so-called "baby hats" are picturesquely fashionable. The hats come in mull and swiss, with wash ribbon trimming, and are then labeled "lingerie hats." When they are fashioned of lace and flowers or ribbon, they are constituted for town wear, and are the essence of girlish simplicity. Frances Murphy introduced the first baby hat that was worn here, and the scoffers cried: "Whose little girl are you?" but now almost every maiden and young matron numbers at least one baby hat among her spring outfit. Mary Mannering wears a very fetching baby hat in the first act of "Harriet's Honeymoon."

Mrs. Fred McNear has a plaid silk gown that is very striking and may be taken as a conspicuous example of the vari-colored gowns that will hold the center of the stage all spring and summer. Veilings, nets, etamines—indeed, all the light-weight materials—now come shot with color as well as in plain shades. The silk used for Mrs. McNear's gown is in red and green plaid faintly barred with yellow.

The newest models show short jackets that are a compromise between the bolero and eton. They have the boleroesque effect in front, where the jacket is usually met by a high girdle. Mrs. Will Taylor has a very chic suit in this jauntily smart style. Lace waists still retain their popularity and frequently show a touch of color to match the gown with which they are worn.

Alice Hager has a grey and white check silk that is silvery as moonlight. The skirt is made the round length, which is dear to the anti-microbe fiends. It is always a difficult problem to secure long lines in a short skirt, but clever dressmakers have an unexplainable way of suggesting length where there isn't any. Miss Hager's gown achieves this point, and many other desirable ones besides.

Lingerie sleeves are very much the thing, and many sleeves show ruffle after ruffle of lace. When the greatest width of the sleeve comes near the elbow, as is now the mode, this exaggerated fullness falls on a line with the hips when the arms are held at the sides, and frequently obscures the waist line. The stout woman must therefore take a tack in the chiffon sails on her sleeves if she wishes to retain the lines of her figure.

Apropos of plumpness, fancy Mrs. Joe Tobin, she of the former svelte sinuousness, having to make such fine discriminations. Mrs. Tobin has some gorgeous new clothes, and he who runs may read how the modiste has contrived to make Mrs. Tobin look as slender as possible. Mrs. Joe revels in the accumulation of flesh which she put on by going to bed for three months and "building up." She is no longer the sylphesque creature of former years—in fact, she is almost as big as Ethyl Hager, which is saying the last word on the subject of stoutness.

—Visitors to San Francisco never cease to wonder at the perfection of Zinkand's, where appointments, service, cooking, music and also visitors, are the very best. It has no equal.

TOWN CRIER

(Rev. George C. Adams, D. D., says "the Saints have gone to live in Oakland.")

Poor city clergy! Left with sinners here
While Oakland has monopoly of saints!
Still, all these Oakland saints are rather queer—
Not altogether what one's fancy paints.
Such little scandals in the church you hear
How Mr. E. goes on with Mrs. S.,
And nasty little bickerings, I fear,
That Oakland saints are only more or less.

The Board of Health is waking up to find that we are being poisoned. Surely this might have been easily discovered before. Many scores of coffins have been buried lately, to the benefit of the coffin trust, which might still be above ground had the highly ornamental Board of Health performed its elementary duties. Wonderful to relate, it now discovers that jams, jellies, pickles and other things of that sort are positively unfit for food, and that when one purchases a little something in the delicatessen line they are really buying a cemetery plot or a doctor's bill. One of the officers of the Board of Health says "we are preparing a campaign against bad vinegars that will startle San Francisco." The fact that a campaign is to be started in earnest is startling enough, but the fact of the bad vinegar would seem to be a very dull commonplace to those of us who are not members of the Board of Health.

It is not wonderful that the students of the University have no respect for the University authorities because the authorities do not keep their word and may always be trusted to back down on a matter of discipline. Take the last rush, for example. It was given out that any student caught participating in the rush would be expelled. Several were caught in the very act, and now the culprits are not to be expelled, but are to be put on probation. How can students be expected to pay any attention to an authority which stultifies itself like that? If Professor Cory and those who stood behind him are afraid to expel those who disobey their orders and injunctions, why on earth do they threaten? Such contemptible cowardice will soon put the University on too low a plane even to be criticised.

Highly-trained animals are, as a general rule, highly nervous. The same rule appears to apply to prize-fighters. Our pugilistic heroes are just as sensitive as young maidens or even more so. It will be noted, however, that all their sensitiveness lies about one region, that particular part which in the language of the ring is denominated the purse. Let but the purse be threatened, either by a decision or in any other way, and the ululations of the man of muscle fill the atmosphere. A frightened child is brave compared with a pugilist who dreads the loss of the purse. That is the meaning of the fuss about the decision in the Britt-Corbett fight. One had better be a nursery governess than a referee.

Thanks to ex-Mayor Phelan, the Bohemian Club is the possessor of an original manuscript of one of Sir Edwin Arnold's minor poems. We shall all be proud. Henceforth the Bohemian Club will be a genuine shrine of the literary. But it is pretty to observe how grateful our champions of the muses are for such exceedingly small mercies. A minor poem of a minor bard has raised enthusiasm higher than we should have considered possible even to a Bohemian.

It is a question whether Judge Lawlor had the power under the law to allow the two young men, charged with assault with intent to commit murder to go on future good behavior. There is a punishment provided in such cases, and some of it should unquestionably be bestowed upon those who come within the clutches of the law. A certain amount of consideration in the case of juvenile offenders is commendable, and the new Juvenile Court deserves approbation. This does not mean, however, that young hoodlums who are old enough to know better should escape punishment for their murderous acts. Leniency which is simply leniency is not justice, Judge Lawlor.

The methods of George Knight in the trial of the Botkin case do not reflect much credit upon the local bar. Of course, a lawyer has to try his case in order to win it, and in a murder case there is much latitude allowed. This is proper. But there are certain limits which a gentleman cannot transgress, and there is no reason why a man should not be a gentleman even in the trial of a murder case. What is the use of a trained bar if the members have no better manners or self-control than a grievance committee of the Brewery Workmen's Union? Besides, is it really good pleading to make a public display of the desperate condition of your case?

There are crooked people cursed

In each way that you can mention,
And they're every one for Hearst,
And will back him in Convention.
For the yellow man has taken
Everything that he has laid for,
If you may believe his papers,
And they know what they have paid for.

The Mayor has been beaten in his contest with the street flower-sellers. All the corruption fund and all the graft at the City Hall has failed to defeat a few poor men who had the popular sympathy behind them. If the public could be trained to act regularly as they act spasmodically, things would be different, and the Mayor, at all events, would not be in possession of those powers for mischief which his position gives him. Meanwhile his Honor sulks and is a bad loser. However, he will in all probability have much more practice in losing, and it is to be hoped he will learn how to do it with better grace.

We have a pretty set of officials. In spite of all the money expended on the public schools, they are now discovered, many of them, to be so unsanitary as not to be fit for occupation. There is one other thing to remember, that however unsanitary they may be as regards the plumbing, their moral condition is not a whit better.

The state into which local charities had managed to get themselves is apparent from a resolution of the Charities Endorsement Committee of Oakland to the effect that no collector for a charity shall receive a commission of more than fifteen per cent. Charity-collecting has been good graft, one of the recognized methods of getting something for nothing, and it is well that some sort of a limit should be placed upon the rapacity of collectors.

The privacy which has attended the movements of the President of Michigan University would lead us to believe that for once, at least, we have entertained an Angell unawares.

SOCIETY

Dear Bessie: Wedding bells are to ring out right joyously from now on, and all the coming brides have enjoyed the Lenten season as giving them time for the necessary preparations. And what a lot of them are close at hand! Here is a nice list of brides in the near future: Mae Burdge, Frances Harris, Ethel Kent, Florence Callaghan, Edna Barry, Hattie Currier, Kate Selfridge, Ella Goodall, Bee Hooper, Genevieve Huntsman, Ethyl Findley, Olive Hamilton, Ethel Low, Anna Wooster, Eleanor Warner, Rose Hecht, Grace, Martin, Ruth McNutt, and a lot of others talked of. "They say" that Belle Harmes will be one of the next to say "I am engaged," but rumors in the matrimonial line are not always to be depended upon.

Another story afloat is that Mabel Mason is going to bestow herself upon that rather good-looking apostle of ritualism, the Reverend Wilson, who has his habitat over in Sausalito while in charge of Christ Church. You know the Masons live in Sausalito, and the young people were much together before his departure East, and I understand there is a belief that he will remain there, so if the story be true it will be another California maiden lost to her native State.

All the girls are just longing to get a peep at the wonderful lace dress Frances Harris is to wear at her wedding, but as the ceremony is to take place at her aunt's (Mrs. Chris. Reis) only a limited few will be gratified. Frances has selected Fanny Arques from San Jose to be her sole attendant, and Mr. Stent will have Ferd Reis for his best man.

Ethel Kent's wedding will be a very pretty one, as button weddings usually are. In the first place, Lieutenant Allen is to bring a whole raft of his brother officers with him from the North to officiate; Captain Helms from Vancouver will be best man, and Captain Enoch, Captain Bradford and Lieutenant Wetherell will act as ushers, with Lieutenant Shinkle from the Presidio, who will all appear in the glory of full dress uniform. The bridesmaids, Florence Cole, Louise Hall, Jane Willshire and Mattie Milton, will all be gowned in blue, while Kathleen Kent as maid of honor and Mrs. Malcolm Graham as matron of honor will wear white. The wedding of Eleanor Eckart and Charles Hume will be a home ceremonial, with Mrs. Ben Thomas, Jr., as matron of honor, and Mabel Donaldson and Georgie Spieker the bridesmaids.

I cannot begin to tell you of all the pretty sights at the Horse Show last week, which was a most perfect success in spite of the weather; but I think the prettiest sight was the crowd of beautiful children at the circus on Saturday, and how they did enjoy it all! Almost everybody was there on Friday night in their best bibs and tuckers, those in boxes being especially fine. Edna Taylor, Georgie McNear, Virginia Jolliffe and Ethel Dean wore blue, which, with white, seemed to be the favorite colors for gowns; Jennie Blair was in black jet, and she was very happy over the success of the affair. Helen Taylor and Mrs. Peter Martin were among those who wore pink, but only fancy—what do you think is the last dread rumor? That it is all nonsense about the Peter Martins staying here—"not much; they are going back to dear Newport, probably this month," and then to let us down easy the prospect is held out of their coming back again next winter.

As I told you last week, Easter week is filling up rapidly. The officers of the 10th Infantry give a hop at the Presidio on Monday evening, for one thing; then there are all the weddings, two dances, and a fancy dress party at Mrs. Albert Scott's on Wednesday night, where there will be singing and recitations and instrumental music; Grace Jones and Cherry Bender are to be the monologists of the occasion. Mrs. Morgan has been the first to announce a large card party which comes off on Tuesday, and there are to be several others; and I must not forget the reception at Century Hall on Tuesday night which the Grace Church people are to give for their new rector, at which all the pretty girls of the parish will assist.

In the way of recent luncheons, Gertrude Van Wycke had a dainty little one on Friday of last week for Frances Harris, and the same day Mrs. Horace Hill gave one—quite a large affair—for Mrs. Postley, who went East on Tuesday last. Grace tells me Mae Burdge's pink luncheon for her bridesmaids was a regular "dear," and Mrs. Eleanor Martin was a luncheon hostess last Tuesday. Laura Farnsworth and Mattie Whittier Weir both have card parties to-day.

You never heard any one so enthusiastic as is Charlotte Ellinwood over the delights of her recent visit South. I do believe she is not a bit glad to be home again. She gives a card party next Wednesday for the benefit of the Nursery Guild, but you have to be regularly invited before you can purchase an admission ticket, so it will be confined to those who know each other, and no outsiders are to be let in. Leontine Blakeman is also home; she arrived last Friday from New York, where she had a perfectly sumptuous time all winter with Ethel Tomlinson.

Lucy Gwin Coleman will be a San Mateo girl this summer. Mr. and Mrs. Coleman have taken a cottage in that attractive suburb for the summer months, and just think of what a gathering of swells there will be thereabouts—all the Parrotts to head the list, which includes the De Guigne girls and the Donohoes; the Haynes, Howards, Beylards, Hobarts, and the Burlingame set, etc. The Borels leave town next week.

There is general satisfaction felt at Menlo Park that the Feltons will be back there this summer, and Katie—Mrs. Elkins, you know—is to arrive from the East about the middle of April. Louise Lamontagne—now Mrs. C. E. Maud—and Mr. Maud are coming to California to live at Rutherford while the Darlings are abroad, which is likely to be for a couple of years, at least so I hear.

on Gough street, where Mr. and Mrs. Leonard—Jessie Hobart as was—from Nevada, are visiting them, and where they had a charming little dinner last week. Quita Collier, now Mrs. Roy McDonald, has gone over to Oakland to live, and Bernice gave her a pretty little tea there last Thursday; Gertrude and Laura Bates have already departed to Belvedere, where the family are to spend the summer; Tom Driscoll is down at Santa Barbara, where he and his mother have taken a cottage for the month of April to recuperate after his mishaps in the polo tournament. The Fred Moodys have come to town to live; they got tired of Burlingame and sold their house there and have taken up their residence on Pacific avenue. I hear Bertha Dolbeer has named the 16th of April for her departure Eastward, expecting to sail for Europe from New York the first week in May; and also that Sallie Winslow is about to become a European pilgrim, and will probably be away the greater part of the summer; and we are to lose Jennie Blair again, but not quite yet; Mrs. Blair is going abroad in April for her health, and Jennie will follow her later. And yet others who talk of spending the summer in European travel are the Rudolph Spreckels, and Mr. Jim Phelan is going abroad again for several months; Baron and Baroness Von Horst, who have departed for England, gave a Tivoli party and supper at the St. Francis on Monday evening as a good-bye frolic.

The delayed travelers, including Georgie Spieker and Doctor Genthe, who were to have been here last week in time for the Horse Show, did not arrive till Monday last, so they missed a good time here.

THE ITCHING PALM.

(A despatch from New York to San Francisco says: "The itching palm is epidemic on the upper West Side. It afflicts messenger boys, policemen, bar-tenders, professional men, society women, school-children, servants, persons in all walks of life. The name of what causes it is acarus scabiei.")

We have had it, we have seen it,
And it isn't in New York;
We know the little creature—
We can trace its little work.
They can give it all the Latin names
They have a mind to give,
But an itching palm's an itching palm,
You'd better just believe.

To look inside his Honor's palm,
I managed to contrive,
And his Honor had the acarus
As sure as I'm alive.
The clergy said they had it not—
I merely answered "Fudge!"
And I found it without looking
On the white hands of a judge.

For the policeman, and the postman,
And the labor leader, too,
They had it in most dreadful form—,
It's awful, but it's true.
And professional philanthropists
Could hardly keep them calm,
When I showed beyond all question
That they had an itching palm.

I ventured the suggestion a couple of weeks ago that the Botkin trial would end in a verdict of not guilty or a disagreement. And that suggestion was not based upon the thought that the prosecution is not making a good case. It arose, rather, from the idea that for some reason, unknown to deponent, influences are at work to obtain an acquittal in this case, without much regard to the means whereby the end may be effected. I recalled the fact that, when Mrs. Botkin was in prison, three years ago, after her first trial, Judge Cook stated that he had seen in a street car a woman who, in appearance, was her counterpart. He permitted himself to be interviewed on the occurrence, and in the interview commented on the remarkable resemblance between Mrs. Botkin and the woman in the car. The Sheriff showed, afterwards, that Mrs. Botkin had not left the jail, and could not have been the woman the Judge saw in the car. It was a case of mistaken identity.

* * *

On Monday last the Examiner published a sensational story to the effect that Mrs. Botkin's double had been seen again. It was stated that a woman, heavily veiled, and accompanied by an escort, had attended services at Grace Church on Palm Sunday. Some one noticed that in general appearance she greatly resembled Mrs. Botkin. After the services she hurried away. The purpose of this "exclusive story," (no other paper published it), was evidently to establish a public belief that Mrs. Botkin has a "double," for whose crime the life of Dunning's mistress is in jeopardy. The Examiner's Sherlock Holmes did not explain how he or his informant saw the features of the woman who was heavily veiled, nor did he admit that after service it was raining heavily, so that it was natural under the circumstances that the woman should hurry away; nor did he explain why the members of Grace Church should raise their eyes from their books and suddenly discover that a heavily veiled woman looked like Mrs. Botkin. Surely, the people of Grace Church are not among those that disgrace themselves by crowding into Cook's court room to listen to the nasty details of this trial. The Examiner's story is a fake on its face. Yet it may serve what appears to be its purpose—rendering aid to the Botkin attorneys in their apparent attempt to manufacture an alibi, or to raise in the minds of the jurors a reasonable doubt as to the identity of the woman who bought the candy. "Mistaken identity" is the keystone of the defense.

A good story is told on Robert Ferral, now Assistant District Attorney. Years ago, when the Irish Land League was flourishing like a green bay tree, Bob Ferral, as he is familiarly known among old-timers, used to raise the rafters in Irish-American Hall the while he reviewed the many iniquities of the British Government, as practiced upon the Irish people. No man has shouted longer or louder for the freedom of Ireland than has Bob Ferral. In those days, so excited did he get that the veins stood out like whipcords on his neck and forehead, and his friends often feared that before he had damned England to his full satisfaction he would explode in an apoplectic fit. Upon one occasion he was assuring his hearers that he would stay with the fight until the sound of the last trump.

"Gentlemen," he yelled, "let us all enlist in this holy cause. Ireland shall yet be free. To this cause I here devote my every energy, my every endeavor. My voice shall be ever heard raised in the cause of liberty. And if I should fail you—let the day never come—but, if I should fail, then, gentlemen, may this right arm"—and he extended it dramatically—"may this right arm—may this right arm cleave to the roof of my mouth."

Dissension has thrust its head through the portals of the Mechanics' Institute; discontent is rampant among the members; disgust has filled the breasts of many of them, and dismay is commencing to assail the directors, who fear that existing conditions may result in what may approach closely to a public scandal. Since the first of the year many old members, dissatisfied with the management of the library, have resigned, and there are numerous rumors of other resignations yet to come. The trouble seems to be around the desk of the librarian. Many tales are told of favoritism in the distribution of books, and of unfair treatment. It is not my purpose to enter into the merits or demerits of these accusations, for that would require an examination of witnesses and a somewhat extended investigation. The fact remains that a spirit of discontent is abroad among the readers of the books. It is said that the librarian has been in the habit of reserving new books until they have been read by a favored few. Women predominate among these few. Originally the circle of the elect was comparatively small, but now, it is alleged, it has grown until it includes a couple of score of favorites. Until these people have read the new books, it is said no one outside the clique is permitted to have access to them. Cases are cited wherein members of the library not in the ring have applied for books and been informed that they were out, whereas the books were not only in, but within half an hour were issued to favorites, who then showed the books and boasted of their pull with the librarian. Many of the members complain bitterly. The condition of affairs may be exaggerated, but it is certainly worthy of investigation by the directors.

Like politics, the practice of the law "makes strange bedfellows." Here are Garrett McEnerney and Charley Wheeler side by side in the defense of Hyde and Dimond in the timber land cases in the Federal Court. Not so long ago they had a very spirited encounter in the Superior Court, during the trial of a case in which they appeared upon opposite sides. McEnerney resented Wheeler's familiarity upon this occasion, and indignantly refused an invitation to dine with his fellow-Regent upon the Oakland boat. For some time subsequent, each man held his head very high when the other passed by. Now, perforce, they have to sit down, cheek by jowl, and exchange views as to the best methods to pursue to keep their clients out of jail.

The timber land cases have brought Francis J. Heney into prominence again. He appears as special counsel for the Government. Heney is a coming man at the local bar. In fact, I believe Heney "has come." He was counsel for the Government in the prosecution of the Nome cases, which created much scandal, and resulted in the discomfiture of a Federal Judge who took Alaska for his exclusive bailiwick. Heney was formerly Attorney-General of Arizona. He is a Democrat, and was a member of the Committee of One Hundred, which, some six years ago, tried to harmonize things in the local Democracy. Heney found no harmony could be maintained unless it bore McNab's personal stamp. So he resigned from the committee, quit local politics, and like a sensible man devoted himself to his profession.

Henry Ach was examining a witness in the District Court. He was trying to show that the witness had broken the law and injured his client by manufacturing a patented face powder, which belonged exclusively to Ach's end of the case. The witness testified that he and another druggist had mixed together some chalk and violet powder, and had sold it for the patented article. Then he began laughing.

"Well, what are you laughing about?" Ach yelled. "Oh, only this," said the witness. "While we were mixing the powder a couple of hairs fell into it some way, and we had an argument as to whether we would sell the stuff for a face powder or pour in a little water, make it a paste, and issue it as a hair-restorer. We flipped a coin—heads for powder, tails for hair-restorer. It came heads, and so we sent the stuff forth to the world as a face powder."

The assembled drawers of salary in the Department of Health, who have been placed at the public crib by Ruef, or kept there by him, have presented Abraham with a beautifully engrossed set of resolutions, setting forth at great length the gratitude they feel for his devotion to the public service, as exemplified by protecting their jobs. Ruef is a humorist. I have said that before, but this episode proves it beyond all doubt. He gets lots of fun out of his little manikins.

Ottinger's $1,000 bond is reported missing from the County Clerk's office. Not, of course, that it is in point, or has anything to do with the disappearance of that bond—but how many Crimmins men are employed by the County Clerk?

Dr. Pawlicki, one of the Board of Health's surgeons in the Emergency Hospital, exacted a fee of $2.50 from a patient at the Hospital. The man complained; the matter became public, and Pawlicki had to return the money. The circumstances connected with this incident surprise me; first, that the patient was forced to give up only $2.50; second, that he ever got the money back. Pawlicki need not despair. There will be other chances.

a doubt about the virtue of this ordinance, the resolutions should remove it. The Iroquoisquaws and all their long-haired kin can be suppressed only by rigorous measures.

Now, why don't Smith, Smoot & Co. move down to Sulu? It's part of the United States, you know, just as Utah is, and Smoot might become Senator from Sulu without objection being raised.

Miner for Once is Recognized.

Mr. Aubury, State Mineralogist, leaves in a few days for the East to supervise the installation of the California mineral exhibit at the World's Fair in St. Louis. It is said that the miners have stood in well, and it is pleasant to be assured of the fact. If the statement is true, then the mining men of California must have recovered from the feeling of distrust and wrath engendered by the way they were treated in Paris the last time they were persuaded to make themselves agreeable by drawing upon their treasure in the way of rare specimens, running the risk of losing something the value of which could not be replaced by money. California ought to have a good display of minerals at the Fair. The State is rich enough to make one, and doubtless there will be all the money required at command were it not that the ordinary politician who controls all outlays of the kind, has a faculty of overlooking the mining industry upon all occasions to the pecuniary advantage of the fruit grower or butter maker. Mining made California, and goes a long way to-day, even if its light is hidden to a large extent under a bushel, to keep up the reputation of the State, but this is apt to be forgotten by the new people who have arrived here of late years in Pullmans.

Good Water Goes to Waste.

There will be oceans of water in the mining district this year for industrial purposes, and the torrent that has drowned out the garden patches along the banks of the swollen Sacramento could well be utilized in tearing down the great gravel deposits which perforce lie idle owing to the malicious interference of the valley men, who have never yet lost an opportunity to knife the neighbor from the hills good and hard. What millions of gold would be available for disposition were these great mines at work again! The much condemned slickens could be flumed down the valleys to build substantial levies and raise the elevation to a degree which would ensure them from ever again being drowned out by a winter's rainfall. It is said that fruit trees flourish in this slickens-made soil, and it certainly would end the malaria which poisons the air in so many naturally fine locations, when through means of this material the damp conditions could be removed. The people of the valley have been led away by the ever-present mischief makers who manage to eke a livelihood by constantly fomenting strife. They have followed false gods, and now in their trouble, which excites the sympathy of all Californians, and from none more so, if the truth were known, than the despised men of flume and giant, they may look to the hills, from which alone can come their aid.

Money in a Name.

A New York paper of that class which devotes its columns to the aid of promotion schemes now carries in bold type a statement that Tonopah is "the richest gold field in the world, accredited to John Hays Hammond, the well-known mining engineer." While quite ready to believe in the great value of Tonopah as a mining camp, we do not for one moment credit that Mr. Hammond ever made such a statement, even if he held that opinion of the camp. He has never been in the habit of gushing over the prospects of mines or a mining camp, and it seems unreasonable to think that he is beginning at this time in his career to take the dear public into his confidence. The only reason to ascribe for his name being used in this connection is that he is not likely to see the paper which is taking the very questionable liberty of keeping it standing in the advertisement which it bolsters up.

An Expensive Investment.

The gross earnings of the North Shore R. R. for February, 1904, show a decrease of $2,962.14, a large net decrease as compared with the previous year. The road showed a deficit for the month of $30,643.46 after paying all expenses and fixed charges. For the two months to February 29th, the deficit amounted to $54,842.11, or $32,623.64 more than last year. This is not surprising with the constant outlay for repairs and improvements.

Pine-St. Market.

Business on the Comstock Market has held up remarkably well during the past week, taking the elementary disturbances which have been going on at both ends of the line into due consideration. Prices have shown a disposition to harden, under a very moderate demand, which in turn developed the fact that the goods are not quite as plentiful as might be supposed. From all appearances, if the occasion arose to fill anything like a decent order for one of the leading stocks, it would either have to be limited to a certain figure, with the chance of not procuring a share, or the market rate at a sharp advance would have to be met. Work at all points along the lode is progressing in a most satisfactory manner, and before long things will be so changed in and around the mines in operation that the old boys who have crossed the divide would not recognize the place could they break out for a while from "under hatches." These improvements are bound to be reflected in the local market before long.

A lady who invested $1,300 in stock of the Gray Gander and Columbia Oil Companies has just recovered a judgment for $1855 and interest against another lady who certainly was not the "Gray Goose" in the transaction. A judgment is one thing and coin is another, and a peculiarity of these promoters, who make a practice of wheedling coin out of that enterprising portion of the public which takes financial bait as a trout does a fly, is that they do not pan out well when one wants to get money out of them by stress of law, or any other leverage, for that matter.

The gross earnings of the California and North-western Railway Company for February, 1904, amounted to $74,972, as compared with $74,341 for February, 1903, an increase of $631. There was a deficit after charges last month of $37,054. The gross earnings for the eight months ended February 29, 1904, were $931,263, as compared with $877,065 for the same period last year, an increase of $54,198. The net earnings for the eight months ended February 29, 1904, were $210,628, a decrease of $48,134, as compared with the corresponding period ending February 29, 1903. SAUSALITO RESIDENCE LOTS.

Mr. Henry Stern, of David Stern & Sons, the real estate broker and auctioneer, will offer the public an unusual chance to procure cheaply some fine residence lots in the beautiful suburb of Sausalito. He will sell on the ground at 2:15 p. m. 22 choice residence lots facing on Buckley avenue, Excelsior avenue, Read Lane, and El Monte Lane. The sale will occur on the arrival of the 1:45 p. m. boat from San Francisco. These lots are so well placed and in such a favorable locality that there is sure to be some lively bidding at the sale. There is a fine view of the bay of San Francisco and the surrounding country. There are no fogs and the climate is milder than either Alameda or Oakland, and it is not nearly as warm in summer as it is further inland. It is the ideal suburban residence location, conveniently near San Francisco. For particulars and catalogues apply to Henry Stern, at his office, No. 11 Montgomery street.

INSURANCE

The Contemporary Review publishes an article by Mr. T. P. Whittaker, Member of Parliament, which is a sort of body blow to abstainers and refutes the hypothesis that total abstinence is conducive to longevity. It has been boasted for years by temperance people that the good drinkers died early. Mr. Whittaker, by his analysis of the facts and figures, proves beyond a question of a doubt the contrary. To quote from a published article:

"Mr. Whittaker attacks the problem empirically, and draws the data of what he claims is a demonstration from the experience of an English insurance company to whose actuarial records he has had access. This company was founded in 1840, and at first issued policies and continued them in force only to those who were and remained total abstainers. A few years later non-abstainers of a selected class were admitted. On the books of the company the two classes have been kept separate, and it is possible to compare their respective death rates—the two classes being about the same in number, recruited to the company under the same rules of examination and the same in all qualities except that the members of one were total abstainers and the members of the other were occasional or moderate users.

"Tables prepared by the actuary of the company, as quoted by Mr. Whittaker, show 31,776 life non-abstainers' policies aggregating 466,943 years of exposure with deaths to a number of 8,947, against 29,094 whole life abstainers' policies, aggregating 398,010 years of exposure and 5,124 deaths. The death rate among the non-abstainers has thus been 36 per cent higher than among the abstainers. Another table shows that the company's experience with its abstaining class indicates that of 100,000 living at the age of thirty, 55,382 would survive to the age of seventy, while among the non-abstaining class experience shows the number of survivors at the age of seventy would be only 44,424. As to the point which will be obviously raised in rebuttal—that the non-abstainers were not in general respects as good risks as the abstainers—Mr. Whittaker asserts that it is without validity; that, if anything, greater care was exercised in excluding bad risks from the non-abstaining class than from the other; that in no case did the company write policies on men who drank to excess."

The other side of the question the moderate drinking element seem to have overlooked this later apostle of St. Paul and a little for your stomach's sake, but the American life insurance companies' tables and experience would, beyond question, if they were examined, reveal the fact that Mr. Whittaker's deductions apply to the United States as well as to Great Britain.

To take the negative of this, it is fair to suppose that the life companies of the United States, if they found the abstainers were more profitable risks, would seek to insure them by granting a more favorable policy or a lower rate. This is not done. The moderate user of alcoholic stimulants is accepted by the most careful and conservative life insurance company at the same rate and on the same plan as the non-user, and the man who dispenses liquor from behind a bar can get a policy of life insurance in these days at so small an advance of cost that it is not worth consideration. The total abstinence theory in life insurance falls.

Life insurance companies are careful in the method of their selection of subjects, and while they discard the heavy habitual drinker, they take the moderate one and are glad to get him, and up to the present there is not known any reputable old line or legal reserve life insurance company which has offered any special rate to the applicant because he was eligible to become a Good Templar.

The News Letter, amongst its various exchanges, has one called the Insurance Press, which in a recent edition heads its editorial columns with the following paragraph: "A friend of The Insurance Press sends us, as a souvenir of the Rochester conflagration, a copy of The Insurance Press of February 3d, taken from an insurance office in the Granite building, where so he says, 'all combustible matter was destroyed.' This reminds us that we frequently speak of The Insurance Press as T. I. P., which, it now appears, means The Imperishable Paper." Now, my merrie masters, I have found that The Insurance Press could not burn; I have tried to light fires with it and it would not ignite, and so it must be imperishable. To me it seems as if The Insurance Press was designed solely to burn others and not be burned itself. Our local insurance papers are of this class and character, and like The Insurance Press they are so poor in point of paper and contents that fire won't char them, and as for water they take it all the time. The T. I. P. might just as well stand for The Impotent Parasite as for what The Press imagines the letters to signify.

There is a valued policy bill in suspense before the Iowa Legislature. A gentleman named West made some sensible remarks before the Insurance Committee, in which he said: "Insurance is an indemnity. If an officer is bonded for $100,000 and absconds with $40,000, the authorities seek to recover $40,000 from the company bonding the officer. That is what the company has sold the authorities, an indemnity up to the face of the policy, and has not sold the guarantee to pay the whole $100,000 if the officer embezzles half of it. So with insurance. The company guarantees the owner of property against loss up to the face of his policy. Now honest people do not want to burn their property and will not. The valued policy law is of no value to them, because they do not misrepresent to the company in the first place to get more insurance than their property is worth; the dishonest man, therefore, gains the benefit of the law at the cost of the honest insured." These remarks are worth remembering, and whether the utterer may be an insurance man or not, he has the bump of common sense remarkably well developed.

The Paul N. Nippert Company is the latest agency corporation. It has absorbed the Powning Company, and will have the agency of the Aetna Indemnity Company, in addition to the British-America and the city exclusive agency of the Delaware.

Here is a story credited in the Review to Manager Shallcross of the Royal. It is the story of a claim for loss filed with his company: "The claimant (a woman, of course) had her household goods insured against fire, and claimed $5 for the loss of a set of false teeth and $2.50 for the loss of a canary-bird. When called upon for details, she explained that the house across the street caught fire, and she rushed to the window and leaned out to watch the proceedings. Her teeth fell out and were broken; and while she was at the window the cat caught the canary and ate it. Asked as to how she classified the teeth and the bird in order to justify her claim under the policy she said that the teeth were "dining room furniture," and that the bird was a "musical instrument."

The Minister of Foreign Affairs

Admiral Makaroff, the new commander of the Port Arthur squadron, refuses to be bottled up in the harbor, and has the daring to go out in the open and offer battle to Admiral Togo, although his fleet is outclassed in guns and craft. The Japanese Admiral, in declining a test of strength just now, however, should not be charged with hesitating on account of fear of defeat, for it may be that he is maneuvering his squadron to cover troop transports carrying the remainder of the first mobilization to Korean ports. But, anyway, the new commander of the Russian fleet is enthusing his countrymen in, as well as out of the war establishment, with confidence in the final overthrow of the enemy by his bold and daring, yet cautious, effort to engage the Japanese ships. And one good result to his cause that is already distinctly observable is a degree of confidence in the Port Arthur garrison that did not before exist.

The massing of troops in North Korea is a change in the Russian's strategy, but that may be more of a feint than a reality to keep the home country in a state of enthusiastic expectancy until something else is thought of to satisfy public sentiment while waiting for Japan to cross the Yalu and assume the offensive. Meanwhile Japan has not been idle. The landing of more than 100,000 men on a foreign shore at various points, and the subsequent massing of them at admitted strong strategic points without losing a man or a transport at the hands of the enemy is conceded to be a most masterful exhibition of military skill. But that is not all. This great army is as well equipped with modern implements of war and officered by as capable and as fearless men as are the best military establishments of Europe, and what is still more to the point is that this horde of brown men are at this moment moving toward the Yalu.

The secrecy surrounding Japan's plans, and the deliberate and almost mathematic precision of the forward movement ever since the first transports sailed away to Korean shores makes it clear that there is a confident and determined national and individual moral and patriotic force behind it all that will be hard to overcome. But the first real trial of generalship and strength is near at hand. After that event there will be less occasion to mystify movements. That the fighting will be terrific there is no doubt, for both sides, from highest officer to the humblest private, are more or less fanatical in patriotism. The Japanese reasons: "I must die sometime, and it is glorious to have death come while fighting for the integrity of home and country." Besides, there is a broad and deep-rooted streak of fatalism running through the two religious systems of Japan. The inspiration of the Russian is that it is his religious duty to give his life in defense of the "White Father"—the Czar—and meanwhile to kill as many "heathens" and "pagans" as ever he can. From such soldiers fierce and destructive encounters may be counted upon with certainty.

It is an off-day when the Peking Government does not give a volunteer pledge that China will be true to her attitude of neutrality, but between pledges, preparations go forward to strike Russia hard and fast when the right moment comes. There is no reason to doubt that there is a perfect understanding between Japan and China. That fact is further confirmed every time Russia charges China with playing false. Though a great victory by Japan's land forces would postpone an actual aggressive movement by China, and a serious defeat hasten such a movement, it is as certain as anything could be that the Peking authorities are determined that Russia shall not always hold Manchuria as a Russian province. And it is the concealed enmity of China and her haste to put her army upon a war footing, notwithstanding her protests to the contrary, that is bothering Russia. She knows what to expect of Japan, now that their armies are in the field, but China's double-dealing is a cause for apprehension all the time.

Our Own Troubles. Litigation in France to prevent the transfer of the Panama Canal franchise to the United States was not enough to tangle the deal in a cobweb of cloudy complications. An application has been filed in the Supreme Court at Washington for an order restraining the Government from further proceedings in the matter. It is claimed that the whole affair has been engineered on lines that are unlawful and unconstitutional, but whether the petition is founded on fact or a mere scheme to hang the business up in the Supreme Court for an indefinite number of months matters not, for the fact remains that the more the public understands the true inwardness of the transaction the more pronounced becomes public sentiment against the project, or rather against the disreputable and high-handed methods that were employed by the canal ring through the aiding and abetting of the Washington Government. It may be true, as is hinted, that the Republic of Colombia is behind the move to hang the project up in the Supreme Court, but that only shows how deeply wronged that Republic feels over our treacherous treatment of her.

A Serious Charge. The Aborigine Protection Society of London has sent out to all the civilized world a circular letter in which the grave charge is made that King Leopold of Belgium, as protector, and the several signatory powers to the agreement to not only put down the African slave trade in the Congo Free State, but destroy it, have been so remiss in their duties that the business of stealing and selling human beings is going on with little or no interference. In view of this, an appeal is made to all peoples to use their influence to right the great wrong. On the other hand, King Leopold claims that he has caused an investigation to be made, and that the tales of woe have little or no foundation in fact, but he has ordered a still more careful investigation. The United States are morally one of the signatory powers, but the Government at Washington is in a very awkward position to act. This country not only permits human slavery in its Asiatic possessions, but makes no very determined effort to either abolish the system or put a stop to slave trading, and it would not look well for us to make much of a fuss over slave trading in Africa, when we permit it in the Philippines. The Aborigine Protection Society is and has been doing a noble work for many years, and the United States should be in a position to give it our strongest moral help, but we have a beam of that kind in our own eye.

BY THE AUTOCRANK

The average automobile club run is most uninteresting to say the least. It is a case of joining a procession, taking the dust, in many cases, of the machines ahead, with the occasional dash of some one who crowds by in an uncomfortable way.

What the auto owner really wants is club officials that will think out something new for each outing. A thing that would be a diversion would be an automobile paper chase around the bay or down the road, and then back to some unknown point. It could be so managed that the course could be laid down towards San Jose, passing through Burlingame to San Mateo and other places. There could be several checks and blind trails, and at some unknown points officials could be located who could register all those who properly went over the course, the first to arrive at a special place to be the winner of the trophy. Paper could be used as in the case of the regular chases over the hills. This would not only attract a great many owners, but would be interesting to many who would follow to see the fun.

This aggressive company has automobile passenger offices in the court of the Palace, lobby of the St. Francis, lobby of the Occidental, and has also traffic relations with the leading cafes, as well as with all the leading family hotels in the city. about the 7th or 8th of April. The Pioneer people are booked far into the season for these machines, and orders are now coming in faster than ever.

The Sunset Automobile Company reports the arrival of a carload of 1904 Orient Motor buckboards. These popular machines show many improvements over the last year model, the principal ones being a two speed gear, wider seat, with spring back, higher bed and full elliptic springs, making it very easy riding. Mr. Wheelock, the sales manager for the company, is authority for the statement that one-half this carload was sold in advance of its arrival, and he predicts a lively year for the Buckboards.

We only request that visitors advise us in advance of their coming, so that we can make arrangements to take care of them properly, and avoid mutual inconvenience.

The White Sewing Machine Company reports, up to the 25th of March, twenty-one sales of White touring cars for the month. They are receiving machines at the rate of two carloads per week, and are still unable to make deliveries as fast as the orders are filled.

The American Darracq Automobile Company is about to place an agency in this city. The Darracq car is reliable, durable, comfortable and luxurious, easy to operate, speedy, silent, noiseless, strong, hill climber, and built for long roads. It holds the five-mile world's record, 4-01 2-5; six out of eight world's records in Europe. Over one hundred awards last year.

The following letters are printed in justice to the American Darracq Automobile Company, a reputable concern of New York City:

"American Darracq Automobile Co., New York, N. Y.—Gentlemen: I am in possession of your favor of the 16th ult., and beg to reply that I have no connection at all with the man "de Feher" about whom you inquire. The fellow, who seems to be a swindler or commercial adventurer, has written several letters to me to the purpose of entering into business with my firm, but I have answered him plainly that I will have nothing to do with him. The last letter of the man, dated February 15th, I replied to, as shown by the enclosed copy. Besides, I have never made any offers of Darracq wagons to America, a statement you may safely trust in. I authorize you to publish the above communication everywhere, and hope the dark negro-existence of de Feher will not bother you nor me any more. In the expectation of having served you after your desire, I remain, gentlemen, Yours truly, (Signed) ADAM OPEL.

"Mr. S. De Feher, Belmont Auto Station, 1517-9 Belmont avenue, Philadelphia, Pa.—Your letter of the 15th ult. has been received. After what I wrote to you previously, I did not think to have any more news from you. By the present, I repeat to you plainly that I do not care to enter into business with you, and I request you to bestow your favors on some other auto firm. The Deutsche-Automil-Industrie Herring and Reinhard have told me your communication about having paid 5,000 marks on my account in advance for business to do was not true. I forbid you strictly to boast with your being in business with me, as this is an absolute untruth.

The strongest possible racing board has been appointed by Harlan W. Whipple, president of the American Automobile Association. A. R. Pardington, the popular chairman of last year, was again chosen to fill that important position. William K. Vanderbilt, the most eminent of American sportsmen, was selected as a member, and others chosen were Osborne W. Bright, S. M. Butler, secretary of the A. C. A.; William Wallace of Boston, standing in his community as solidly in popularity as Mr. Vanderbilt in New York; George L. Weiss of Cleveland, and F. C. Donald of Cleveland, a sporting man of wide repute, cyclist, automobilist and autoboat enthusiast.

Twenty-two thousand miles in a 12-horsepower car is a phenomenal touring record accomplished in France by Geoffrey G. Gilling, a record performance of its kind. Mr. Gilling carried four people with him, touring France, Switzerland, Italy, Austria and Germany. He started from Paris, going through Lyons, Monte Carlo, Geneva, Turin, making a circuit of the Italian lakes, and then on again through Riva, Innsbruck, Munich, Carlsbad, Muremburg, Stuttgart, Nancy, Bar-le-duc, Chartres, Alencon, Dinard, Dieppe and finally concluding his tour by driving from Carlsbad to Dinard, a distance of 1,400 miles in five days.

Mr. and Mrs. D. H. McEwen, Misses Elsie and Josephine and Master Charles McEwen made a trip around the bay last Sunday in their new 1904 Winton touring car, recently purchased from the Pioneer Automobile Company.

The following is a list of purchasers of Locomobile gasoline touring cars: S. K. Martin, Jr., Chicago, Ill.; N. W. Bishop, Bridgeport, Conn.; Walter B. Smith, Philadelphia, Pa.; Frederick Wallace, Fitchburg, Mass.; J. J. Mandery, Rochester, N. Y.; W. R. Wiley, Chicago, Ill.; Anna P. Lowe, Fitchburg, Mass.; W. Worth Bean, St. Joseph, Mich.; W. R. Condict, Evanston, Ill.; Richard T. Robinson, Racine, Wis.; S. T. Murdoch, Lafayette, Ind.; Michael Ehret, Philadelphia, Pa.; John C. Spring, Boston, Mass.; J. Henry Linneau, New York, N. Y.; G. A. Trowbridge, Leetes Island, Conn.; Arthur L. Peck, Providence, R. I.; W. C. Weston, Newark, N. J.; George H. Davis, Kansas City, Mo.; A. L. Chamberlain, New Haven, Conn.; Joy Morton, Chicago, Ill.; George H. Pettee, Providence, R. I.; Charles Crompton, Worcester, Mass.; Franklin Farrell, Jr., Ansonia, Conn.; J. F. Dorr, Worcester, Mass.; P. W. Whittemore, Boston, Mass.; Frederick Taber, New Bedford, Mass.; C. M. Talbot, Boston, Mass.

The Mobile Carriage Company, through its Los Angeles branch, has just sold to Mr. George Austin of New York and Los Angeles a four-cylinder Great Arrow. He will use this car in New York for a time, then take it with him to the St. Louis Exposition, and then back again to Los Angeles and Santa Barbara.

W. S. Arnold, W. F. Brong and Mr. Bert Dingley have formed a combination and purchased four White touring cars, which they have put in the rent service, with headquarters at the White garage at Franklin and Market streets.

A letter has been received by the Pioneer Automobile Company from Mr. Jesse Poundstone of Colusa County, which reads as follows: "Owing to a break in the river, I have not been home for two weeks. Expect to have break close this week. Have been using Stevens-Duryea all through the high water of the river, and it has given good satisfaction." This news will be welcomed by people living along the Sacramento River, as there has been a doubt in the minds of a great many as to whether or not automobiles were suitable for using on the levees, soft dirt and through mud.

Fred W. Gregory, of Fresno, who is the largest dealer in automobiles in the State of California, outside of San Francisco, who has a record sale of sixty cars in sixty days, has sold out his automobile business to G. S. and E. B. Waterman. They have the best-equipped garage between San Francisco and Los Angeles, and have the agency for the White, the Oldsmobile and the Pierce.

The people at the big Locomobile garage in New York have advised the local agents that business is picking up very rapidly with the advent of better weather. The big six-story building at Broadway and 76th street is open days, nights, Sundays and holidays, and the first floor has been remodeled, giving the entire space, 75x80 feet, over to the storage of touring cars. One hundred and thirty machines are being taken care of in the building at present.

CREATED BY FORCE OF CIRCUMSTANCE—THE CITIZENS' ALLIANCE.

The individual will suffer long and silently the aggressions of his neighbors or the inflictions of associations. The public will suffer longer than the individual, but once its anger is aroused it will take drastic measures. An angered population will establish institutions to protect its interests, and in a free country woe betide the individual or the association that has aroused the anger of a community.

As a natural consequence of the Labor Union we now have a new association known as the Citizens' Alliance, brought about by the tyrannical actions of the foreign leaders of the Labor Union. It is the natural outgrowth of conditions. It has arisen to serve the purpose of a protector of the community in general and the free laborer in particular.

It is the embodiment of the immortal principle laid down by Cardinal Gibbons when he said:

"The right of a non-union laborer to make his own contract freely and perform it without hindrance, is so essential to civil liberty that it must be defended by the whole power of this Government."

This great voice, in stating the rights of man and the essentials of civil liberty, has uttered the platform of the Citizens' Alliance. It welcomes immigration, but denies to the immigrant the right to outlaw our native youth. It makes no objection to labor unions, but demands that the equal right of all men to labor be respected, and that the laws which protect it be enforced impartially. It will not tolerate restrictions on the employer to prevent his employment of union labor, but his right to employ non-union labor is of equal dignity and must not be restrained.

The birth of the Citizens' Alliance means the freedom from industrial slavery. It means that the young American is to have a chance to learn a trade, and that no organization may say to the youth of this country: "You are barred from an apprenticeship in any shop. There are too many of you. We (the Labor Unions) mean to reserve the places in the shops for the foreign-born. They came over here with a trade already acquired, and the American-born boy will have to stand aside while we feed the foreigner; for in him and in his anarchism is our strength. In his turbulence, his hatred of all Government restraint, we find a friend on whom we can depend in any emergency, for murder or votes."

It is astonishing that the American laborer has not had the sense to see the trend of Unionism. It is astonishing that the American mechanic does not cast off the yoke of its foreign element, which controls in Labor councils. Unionism finds its perfection in China. Here everything from the vegetable picker to the china-painter is unionized, and the immediate effect of this thorough unionizing has been the utter obliteration of the national feeling and the effacement of individuality. The only class that does not suffer from the evil effects of the principles of Unionism is the scholastic class. From among these are gathered the diplomatists and the legislators.

It behooves every business man in this community to go to the offices of the Citizens' Alliance in the Crossley Block and place his name on the register as an application for membership. It must be understood that the Alliance does in no way intend to act as a persecutor of labor or of those that believe in the principles of Unionism. It does, however, act as a protector to the public and will cause the agitator to hesitate. It means the end of strikes and the firm establishment of the principle of compulsory arbitration.

OBITUARY.

There is no citizen in San Francisco who is better known than Mr. F. W. Dohrmann, and the sympathy of the entire community will go to him in his affliction in the loss of his son, Dr. W. F. Dohrmann, who died on Saturday night at Santa Barbara. Mr. Dohrmann was the victim of acute pneumonia. Dr. Dohrmann was a most lovable man, and his friends were legion. He had been on a visit to Santa Barbara in company with his wife when he contracted the fatal disease. His short stay in the Southern city had made him a vast number of friends, and there is a general gloom in Santa Barbara.

O. V. Walker, former caller and chairman of the San Francisco Stock and Bond Exchange Board, passed away last Saturday at his residence, 2500 Broadway, this city. He was one of the founders of the Exchange, and was an estimable and well-liked citizen. He was sixty-one years old at his demise. He was a native of the State of Maine, and during his life in San Francisco he was always a prominent figure in business and social circles.

In the death of Professor A. B. Arnold, the world has lost a great scholar. Professor Arnold ranked with the highest of the translators of the ancient Hebrew classics and the Arabic Epistles. Dr. Arnold was a native of Eppinghausen, Bavaria. He was a thorough American in all his tendencies, however, as he came to the United States at the age of fourteen years. After a successful career at Jefferson and other Eastern colleges, Dr. Arnold came to San Francisco in 1898. He was eighty-five years of age at the time of passing away. His book on nervous diseases has run through many editions, and is generally used in the United States as a text-book. He was twice president of the Maryland Medical and Chirurgal Society. He was the author of a metrical translation of Lessing's "Nathan der Weise," and a frequent contributor to leading medical and literary periodicals. At the time of his death he was engaged on a translation into English of the Hebrew-Aramaic writings. He leaves three sons and one daughter, Mrs. M. H. Hecht, Jr., Dr. J. Dennis Arnold and Harry Arnold of San Francisco, and William E. Arnold of New York.

JAPANESE TEA GARDEN.

The Japanese Tea Garden and its quaint tea houses is the thing of beauty it was once, no longer. It will soon be an eyesore. It takes a Jap to keep the peculiar characteristics in plant life going, but it is also true that it takes some one who understands him to keep the Jap's peculiar characteristics going. Some one who understands the Jap must see that he does his duty.

People are beginning to wonder why the place is so ragged and unkempt. A recent visit to the once pretty and attractive spot caused a pang of regret at the only too apparent neglect which is fast deteriorating this most beautiful feature of Golden Gate Park. The universal comment of Eastern visitors is that "the garden is not nearly so pretty as it was some years ago when I visited it!" One of the most palpable pieces of neglect is the dirty, ragged condition of the paper covering of the "shoji" (doors.) An outlay of a few cents would remedy this defect. If Mr. Hagiwari could be prevailed upon to spend a little of his precious time, which he now utilizes in his own garden, just outside the Park, in opposition to the Park Garden, upon such little attentions to the Tea Garden the decay and neglect would not be so apparent.

All the pretty dwarf and quaint potted plants have been removed, and the storks likewise have flown. The fence is broken and in sad need of repairs. Rotten stumps are not replaced by others or by stones, as they should be. The rear of the house is most unsightly as well as unsanitary. Piles of useless bamboo and filth offend the nose and the eye. Tea is served, not by a neat Japanese maid, but by an untidy, coatless, dirty boy.

The fact of the matter is the gentleman in charge is developing into a Pierrepont Morgan, and he is telling his friends that it hurts him to work in Golden Gate Park, while he shows no disposition to shrink when it comes to laboring in his own tea garden just outside.

Surely the Park Commissioners see a necessity for a change when the general public needs no guide to point out the bad management. This Japanese is simply using some very strong pull to keep his position in the Park, and at the same time advertise his own garden just outside the limits of the people's playground.

The University Farce

At last we have the truth, even from the university. A professor, who is a man, who has had the courage, even for a few moments, to really express himself, and to do it in terse language, which reads as if it were meant, is so unusual a phenomenon that we must pause for a moment to raise our hats to Professor Charles Mills Gayley, head of the English Department. He is one of the wonders of his age. He has cast aside all the stupid chivalrous traditions from King Arthur down, and actually dared to do a bigger thing than dragon-killing, to tell the woman, nay, several women, and those women university students, the truth about themselves: Said Professor Gayley, as reported by the shuddering co-eds., who repeated his utterances: "If God Almighty or the Angel Gabriel had written this poem, it would not interest you. You are a lot of giggling girls. Half of you should be made to pay for your education. Class dismissed."

The truth of all of this is absolutely beyond question. The girls have no interest in this subject because they have not the requisite amount of brains. In the present case, there can be no question where the blame lies. Professor Gayley is a man of international reputation, for whose work leading publishers compete, and who is one of the most delightful readers and engaging speakers to be found anywhere. Yet his class could not pay attention. The reason is clear: they have not the intellectual force which enables them to keep their attention; they are undeveloped children, not fitted for a university training.

"You are a lot of giggling girls," said the Professor, and so saying he told the truth about the manners, not only of the class to which he spoke, but of the vast mass of the university students. Unrestrained vulgarity and defectiveness of training show themselves in the giggling, and worse, of the girls and the noisy hoodlum behavior of the boys. It is to be questioned if two thousand young people of respectable appearance could anywhere be got together whose behavior is on the whole so unsatisfactory and whose manners so deplorable. They have not the slightest notion of their responsibility, and they have reached the very depths of vulgarity when a class of nearly one hundred young women can sit back and giggle during recitation period in the face of a man whose reputation for scholarship is world-wide, and who has occupied a responsible position in their own university for close upon a score of years.

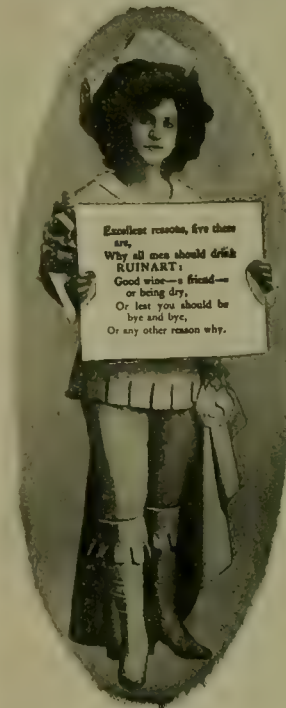

"Half of you should be made to pay for your education," said Professor Gayley, and his remark was exceedingly conservative. Not half of these boys and girls are fitted to be university students. They do not possess the intellectual qualities which repay the State for educating them. There is plenty of good manual work to be done, which would employ both boys and girls to the great advantage of the State and their own individual happiness. They are wasted where they are, and they are wasting the money of the State. The girls grow up to despise domestic duties, to shirk the bearing of children and the natural life, to shrink from matrimony, even, as imposing personal duties and responsibilities. They grow up into nervous old maids, disturbing the community with continual petty agitation, and endeavoring to satisfy their hungry souls with the pursuit of that will-o'-the-wisp which they call culture.

Free education! Yes, free as air to those who can profit by it and who have the intellectual capacity and stability of disposition to enable them to climb the rocky path of scholarship and intellectual attainment. But why should the State pay for the higher education (save the mark!) of those who have no intellect to grasp its significance, and who repay the munificence of the State by laughing in the face of its professors.

—The carpet becomes very dirty in winter, but this can easily be remedied by sending it to Spaulding's Carpet Cleaning Works, 353 Tehama street. There the carpet is cleansed from every particle of dirt without any injury to the fabric, and is returned looking as fresh and new as when first put down.

—The appetizing things that come from the broiler at Moraghan's Grill, in the California Market, are responsible for the crowd that goes there for luncheon. It has become a regular business men's exchange. The quality of the chops, steaks, oysters and game served cannot be surpassed. More than that, the wants of the guests are attended to by perfectly trained waiters.

GOOD MORNING.

By Frederick A. Wright in 'The Critic'

Good morning, my little boy blue,
 The flush of the dawn 's in the sky,
 The grass of the meadow is wet with the dew
 And the robin is singing on high.

The sun of ambition not yet
 Has come with its pitiless rays,
 To bring you the panting, the pain, and the sweat
 Of the noontide of passion ablaze.

No sign of the cloud-rack appears,
 No hint of the wild afternoon,
 Its lightning of loss and its tempest of tears
 And the darkness that falleth too soon.

Then follows the bow of that peace
 Which paints the departing of light,
 When pleasures and labors and sorrows must cease
 In the infinite calm of the night.

Good morning, then, little boy blue,
 The flush of the dawn 's in the sky,
 The grass of the meadow is wet with the dew
 And the robin is singing on high.

GOD'S HOUR.

By Julia C. R. Dorr in Scribner's

O restless soul, canst thou not wait God's hour?
 "Let there be light!" He said, and lo! the day
 Gilded the mountain-tops, and far away
 The dimpled valleys thrilled beneath its power,
 Claiming the glorious sunlight as their dower.
 A myth, a fable, that the wise gainsay—
 An idle tale for children at their play.

Yet fable is fair truth's consummate flower!
 Earth waited long till Day, unheralded,
 Unsung, unprophesied, in splendor swept
 A radiant presence through the Orient gates
 Not unto us shall the last word be said;
 Yet one sure secret have the ages kept—
 Light breaks at last on every soul that waits!

Club Notes

There is a funny chapter still untold about the recent fracas in the Papyrus Club, the one that resulted in the formation of the new club, "Cap and Bells." All the investigations which sought to explain why the tempest tossed so terribly in the Papyrus tea-pot accentuated the first report, that with true American spirit the members were opposed to a third term, even for so popular an executive as Mrs. C. Mason Kinne. All this may be true, but a few of the most active opponents had a further cause for grievance. This is the "low-down" story that is going the rounds:

Some time ago, there was talk of Decoration Day, and one of the members who is a loyal Southerner, a member of the Daughters of the Confederacy, contended that a point should be made of decorating the graves of Confederate soldiers as well as those who fought under the Stars and Stripes. At this suggestion, Mrs. Kinne is reported as objecting and saying, among other things, that did not partake of the "Blue and Gray" sentiment:

"A Southerner is a traitor, dead or alive."

The spunky Southern woman remembered this when the time came for the nomination of candidates, and although she did not succeed in defeating Mrs. Kinne, she managed to make the fur fly.

The Press Club is making elaborate preparations for an art exhibition, which will be held in its room on Ellis street from April 16th to April 23d, for the benefit of the Children's Hospital. All the prominent artists have promised to exhibit, and it is expected that the affair will be an artistic, financial and social success. It will be a "sketch" exhibition, inasmuch as there is a size limit to be placed on the pictures shown, and it is also understood that some limit will be placed on price. The exhibition is to open with a jinks for members of the club and exhibitors. During the week the club will be opened to the public except Monday, Wednesday and Saturday afternoons and Monday and Wednesday evenings, when admission will be by card. On Wednesday afternoon there will be a ladies' reception and tea, and on each of the special days entertainment and refreshments will be provided. The committee in charge of the exhibition follows: Howard E. Morton, chairman; A. Dixon, L. Maynard Dixon, H. C. Best and Dr. Philip Mills Jones.

McCloskey, contralto; Messrs. A. Mesmer and T. G. Elliott, tenors; Messrs. J. J. Rosborough and C. B. Stone, basses. Violin, Mr. John Marquardt; violoncello, Mr. A. A WIDE OPEN PHONOGRAPH POLICY.

Quite in line with the policy of a wide open town, the city authorities are winking at the establishment of such places as the "Auditorium," a new "penny-in-the-slot" institution, for the exhibition of phonographs and kinoscope pictures. This institution is located at 769 Market street. The idea of a phonograph parlor is copied from a respectable place of amusement, the "Edison Phonograph Company."

The new institution has copied the idea of "popular price" as well as several other features from the older company, but in order to make the place more attractive, they are exhibiting nude pictures on the pretense that they are high "art," and the place is crowded by men and boys, their minds are corrupted, and it is high time this place was suppressed. Once before similar institutions were in vogue, but in a more retired section of the city, and it was weeks before the police could eradicate the evil. Little girls and boys were given an opportunity and a license to feast their young minds on prurient pictures.

Among the recent notable renovations in buildings in San Francisco is that of the Boyd Estate property at the northwest corner of Pine and Battery streets, which was formerly a large, shell-like affair, but is now a modern, up-to-date office building. This evolution was effected by Mr. S. H. Kent, who is the President of the Builders' Exchange, and one of the best-known contractors and builders in the West. The furnishing of the place is in keeping with the other buildings of greater San Francisco, and through the competency and thoroughness of Mr. Kent is a credit to the owners as well as the tenants, which have already filled all offices and stores. Mr. Kent is himself satisfied that his former reputation will not suffer by an inspection of his work.

The Political Situation

A new force has been interjected into the campaign against Hearst, or, rather, it would be more correct to say that a new element is about to join the opposition. The women of the country are being aroused by the danger of his nomination and the disgrace it would be to the nation, and just as they have opposed the seating of Roberts, the Mormon Congressman from Utah, just as they fought seducer Breckenridge of Kentucky, just as they are now fighting Senator Smoot and polygamy in Utah (and although they have no votes they have won all those contests) so they propose to take up the contest for home and purity in the White House and battle against the nomination of the Sausalito debaucher. The Hearst men sneer at the women, and allude sarcastically to the W. C. T. U., etc., but if they were wiser in their generation they would know that if the women fight Hearst he will lose thousands of votes, and that his chances will be much slimmer than they are already. As one of the Vice-Presidents of a California woman's club said to me the other day, when speaking of what the women proposed to do: "Why should not the women take up this fight? Are they not interested in the purity of the home, in the decency of the occupant of the White House? How would it be possible to point to the Presidency with pride, to encourage our sons in the ambition that every American boy is supposed to have, to become President, if the Presidency is to be bought by men whom no decent woman would allow to enter her house? If you men have not more respect for the Presidency than to even talk of putting such a man in control of the Government, it is time that we women should act, and we will."

Figures are dry, I know, but I have been asked so often the last few days if Hearst would not be easily elected if he were nominated, on the supposition that the Union Labor vote would be solidly for him, that I shall venture to do a little figuring on the next Presidential vote. According to the last census there were 21,329,818 persons in the United States entitled to vote, and of course there are several million more now, but not to exceed two-thirds of those who are entitled to vote do so. At the last election the entire popular vote was 13,959,653, and this year it will not reach 15,000,000. The entire Labor Unionists number 2,100,000, so it is clear they are in an immense minority. When we consider the population from the standpoint of occupations, we find that out of the 23,956,115 male inhabitants of this country, over ten years of age, engaged in work of some kind, the farmers number 9,458,194, the professional men 833,584; the domestics 3,592,581; those engaged in trade and commerce, 4,274,659, and those in mechanics and manufacturing (the two branches in which unionism is almost exclusively found), 5,797,097. It is evident, then, that even in those branches where unionism is the strongest, it does not represent fifty per cent of the voters, and yet it is that vote which must elect Hearst if he is to be elected. But it is certain that he will by no means get the united Union Labor vote. The vast majority of the members of the unions are men of family, men with an interest in the community, men who own their homes and have money in the bank, and none of that class will support a man whose personal character is like that of Hearst, and whose election would bring on the country the worse panic it has ever known. Hearst's influence—or, rather, his lack of influence—in this State even, where he has been carrying on his anarchical propaganda the longest, and where unionism is strong, has been strikingly illustrated by the fact that not one of his candidates has won a place of any importance since the mind of man runneth not to the contrary. Lane's experience is fresh enough to be easily recalled. With Hearst in opposition, he gets ten thousand majority for Governor in this town; with Hearst supporting him for Mayor, he carries only the Alms House precinct. Why should any one suppose that Hearst can do for himself what he has never been able to do for any one else?

Assemblyman Dunlap of Stockton is a candidate for the State Senate from that county, to succeed Senator Meunter. Dunlap has been three times in the Lower House, is now expert of the Board of Examiners, and has a gubernatorial bee in his bonnet. W. T. Leeke, of Ontario, San Bernardino County, and Colonel J. L. Paul, of North Ontario, are both candidates for the unexpired term of Senator Hubbell, who died since the last session of the Legislature. Leeke is President of the San Antonio Water Company, and Paul was chairman of the Republican County Central Committee of San Bernardino County.

Smith of Bakersfield does not come out for the place. Smith, however, will probably be a candidate for the reason that he wants to go to Congress, and the times seem to be propitious to his candidacy. He was a candidate two years ago, and after a long dead-lock was defeated by Daniels, of Riverside, under the management of Hays, cashier of the Orange Growers' Bank, now charged with embezzlement. While Hays says that Daniels knew nothing of his shortage, Newberry, a former Director of the bank, who lives in Los Angeles, has given out a very damaging interview which places Daniels in a bad light in the matter, and it is a fact that all the shortage occurred while the Daniels' campaign was in progress, and the fight was strenuous. Of course, that fact may be only a coincidence; but in politics a man's opponents are prone to take advantage of such coincidences, and it is evident that Daniels cannot even get the support of his own county for a renomination; that, of course, there was the field open to other candidates and of those, Smith, who has twice been State Senator, is the most promising, although Senator Ward of San Diego also wants to go to Washington, and there are others, including Assemblyman Barnes, Victor E. Shaw, and D. C. Collier, Jr., besides former Congressman Bowers, who is now Collector of the Port of San Diego, but who would gladly give up that place if his fellow-citizens will send him East to represent them in the halls of Congress. General Frank C. Prescott is also mentioned as a candidate from San Bernardino County, and Senator Greenwall, who distinguished himself by never opening his mouth nor introducing a bill when he was State Senator from Santa Barbara and Ventura, thinks he wants to do the silent act on the other side of the continent on a larger political stage, and Judge Ballard of Orange would be willing to spend a couple of winters East, and editor McPhee of the Santa Ana Blade is willing to add M. C. to his name.

In the Fifth District the only two names mentioned for Congress are Frank McGowan, who was once a Senator from Humboldt, and Dr. A. E. Osborne.

A Republican Club has been organized in San Jose to gather under one wing all the various factions of the past, and to unite them for one ticket. It will not interfere, I am told, with municipal matters. The city elections in Santa Clara County this spring are to be conducted with the aid of voting machines, so as to prepare the people to use them at the general elections in the fall.

W. S. Lyons, a brother-in-law of the Hayes brothers, is a candidate for Senatorship to succeed Oneal, and will probably get the nomination. He is a pleasant gentleman, who, however, has his spurs to win in politics. Black will be renominated again for Assemblyman from the Palo Alto District.

Up in Napa County they are very bitter against Congressman Livernash for his recent attack on Congressman Bell for endeavoring to have one of the new naval vessels built at Vallejo. Livernash suggests that Bell was a cheap politician who was trying to stand in with the labor element. Coming from Livernash, most people will find the remark decidedly amusing, but nevertheless it has undoubtedly strengthened Bell in his district.

THE CARMEN'S THREATENED STRIKE.

If the signs of these times portend war between the United Railroads and the Carmen's Union—and we hope they do not—it is pretty certain that public sympathy will not be with the men in case of a strike nor even in the event of a lock-out forced upon the employing interest. The company has gone to large expense in preparing for a protracted struggle with its employees, and has done so, publicly, upon specific information of what the carmen have been planning. The clause in the latest demand which was most significant of trouble was that calling for a further increase of wages, but the one which sought to commit the company unequivocally to the "closed" shop policy, graciously allowing it sixty days in which to get rid of all its men not unionized by that time. When this demand was made the leaders of the carmen knew for a certainty that the answer would be a flat refusal. Obviously, then, the raising of this point anew was a deliberate attempt to provoke hostilities. Close on the heels of this menacing demand came an ultimatum to the employers giving them a half-day to agree to "break in" no more new men beyond those actually needed on pain of a refusal to educate any more "students" whether needed or not. Behind this truculent manifesto was the statement that the carmen had positive proof of the company's bad faith in hiring here and elsewhere men not in sympathy with the principles of unionism, in "strike-breakers" in other cities and preparing its barns for a state of siege. To cap these iniquitous acts was alleged the General Manager's frank statement that he had been "preparing for possible trouble." Now, as against a corporation grinding the faces of its employees, cutting their wages to the point of subsistence, harrying them with schedules exacting a maximum of work for a minimum of pay, the public would be from first to last on the side of the men. But the United Railroads has shown a spirit of calmness and justice in dealing with its employees, has been patient with their hot-headed leaders, has kept the pledges and observed the conditions imposed under arbitration, has had nothing to say when the chiefs of the union threatened and blustered, and all the time has striven to provide for the comfort and convenience of its many thousands of patrons. So far as the present management has been concerned, all the trouble-making has been done from the side of the employees. They wanted arbitration and they got it. Because it yielded them less than they demanded, they cursed the arbitrators and swore that they would settle no more disputes in that peaceful way. Now, apparently, they are about to carry out the threat, and it is a sinister one. This time they will not have with them the great body of public opinion which won the strike provoked by the tactlessness and brutality of a company manager who is gone but not regretted. This time the burden of proof will lie upon them.

It is true of the Carmen's Union, as of most other bodies of its kind, that it is dominated by its radical members, honest men all, we dare say, but utterly mistaken in their creed, "the union, right or wrong." There are hoodlums at the grips and controllers, and on the rear platforms, but take them as a rule, the great majority of our carmen are civil-spoken to those who speak to them fair, are industrious, faithful and honest. There are in this union men of bad principle and of no principle at all, but the great majority of carmen is made up of careful, conservative, peace-loving citizens. Unhappily, the radical minority controls the conservative majority, and it is this minority which has pushed the unions forward in a movement which may turn quickly into a grave industrial struggle. If trouble shall come, good citizens will applaud the company's firmness even as they have approved its fairness.

DOCTORS IN THE SCHOOLS.

The Board of Health now proposes to send a lot of doctors into the public schools to look after the physical welfare of the pupils. Theoretically, this proposition is good enough in its way. Children should be taught how to sit at their desks, how to hold their books, how to stand and how to walk properly, and many other things; teachers should know how to arrange the light effects in the school rooms so that the pupils' eyes should not suffer; they should devise schemes whereby all the hats would not be piled together by monitors, and then distributed, thereby propagating scalp and skin diseases; greater care should be taken to prevent the spread of infectious diseases, and so on ad infinitum. But judging from the kind of work done in the hospitals, the much-vaunted volunteer corps of physicians appointed to visit the schools will soon find ways to the pockets of the parents of the children—and this is said with due regard to the fact that, according to their lights, they may all be honest men. The trouble of the whole thing is that some men do not seem to know when they are stepping from the straight and narrow path. Volunteer services by professional men, extending throughout the year, as is proposed in this instance, will never amount to much in this town. A few capable doctors may be willing, as an experiment, to give something of their time to the city, but it will be found at the end that the most exacting of the visitors to the schools are physicians of but small practice, who see in this opportunity a chance to widen their acquaintance, experiment to their hearts' desire, and incidentally to increase their incomes.

THE POSTAL FRAUDS.

Upon the floor of the United States Senate, a member of that "greatest deliberative assembly upon earth," has stated during the debate on the Postoffice bill that "wherever graft was looked for, there graft was found; wherever crime was looked for, there crime was found; wherever swindling and corruption were looked for, there swindling and corruption were found." His references were to the exposures of corruption in many administrative departments of the Government for many years past, but particularly since the outbreak of the Spanish war. The accusing Senator is a Democrat, and one who will play a part in the coming Presidential campaign; it might be presumed, therefore, that his charges were greatly exaggerated for partisan purposes; that he was indulging his imagination in mere figures of speech. Unfortunately for the peace of mind of those Utopian dreamers who will not open their eyes to existing conditions, and who delude themselves with the fond belief that in this Republic those in high places are not, like so many Orientals, filled with mercenary desires, the assertions of wide-spread corruption in Government offices are absolutely true. Whether the Republicans or the Democrats are responsible is beside the question. Democratic Missouri is to-day as fully honeycombed with corruption as is any department at Washington, officered by Republican appointees. Corruption is not a matter of politics; it is, rather, one of opportunity. When war was declared against Spain, the opportunity was presented. Then came the tales of fraud in Government contracts. And they were true. England had the same trouble in the Boer war, and Russia is now suffering from a like cause. Corruption, therefore, is not a matter of geography either, for there are just as many men in this country eager for a dishonest dollar as may be found in Europe. The million dollar frauds in building contracts in the Carolinas, which caused the imprisonment of a Captain of Engineers; the land timber frauds, now under hearing in the Federal courts; the frauds in the U. S. Senate, which recently resulted in the conviction of U. S. Senator Burton on a penal charge; the great and far-reaching postal frauds—all these and many others which have not gained the notoriety of national scandals, give proof to the charge that wherever "graft was looked for, graft was found."

In the postal cases Bristow's report resulted in thirteen indictments. Only two of these cases have been tried. Powerful political influences have succeeded in keeping the other accused men out of court. Of their guilt there is no doubt, even in Washington. Why, then, should they be protected? Because Barstow went too far. He exposed scores of Congressmen who had used their positions to fraudulently aid their political proteges. These Congressmen have combined to smother Bristow and his report, and as to the accused office-holders caught in their guilt the combination at Washington says to the public: "Forget it." Now, if civic reform associations want something to "resolve" upon, here is a case at hand. But if the civic reformers want to accomplish anything, let them first examine their back-bones before taking up the battle.

VERTICAL HANDWRITING.

It is to be hoped that San Francisco's Board of Education will take notice of the prompt action of Sacramento's School Trustees in throwing out the "Vertical Writing" abomination and putting in a standard which insures character, individuality and rapidity of production. The gentlemen who direct our own common schools have secured from business men and others vitally interested an abundance of testimony as to the unworth of the "vertical" system and should be at no loss to know what to do with this unfortunate error in education. They and their predecessors have utterly ruined the writing of some thousands of the younger generation. This harm is beyond undoing, but the School Board can and ought to wipe out the cause at once. Every day of delay adds to the injury.

The "vertical" method is as foolish in theory as it has proved pernicious in practice. For the dubious benefit of uniformity and legibility—a benefit so rarely achieved as to make the system a flat failure—it contemplated the sacrifice of all the other elements of use and value that pertain to the written expression of human thought. It would have been quite as desirable and almost as practicable, to attempt a course of physical culture designed to make all school children alike in size and appearance, or a course of elocution that would make one voice indistinguishable from another. As we are informed, the inventor of this "vertical" system was an estimable enough lady, who devised it chiefly because she needed the money. It chanced that she had a certain influence with a body of men who could not have been fitted for their responsibilities. They were ready to oblige the lady with the fool-theory in order to let her make a little easy money. They had not the intelligence to see the falsity and futility of the scheme, nor the capacity to estimate its incurable bad effects, so it went through a-whooping.

We are not surprised to hear that the business community has jumped at the chance offered it by the School Directors for a free expression of opinion concerning the "vertical" system. Nor to learn that this opinion is strongly against this acme of foolish faddism. It is a fact not to be denied that the average Englishman writes a far better "fist" than the average American educated as to penmanship on the old model, and it is also a fact that the average victim of "verticalism" writes unspeakably worse than the average American. The English schoolmasters have clung tightly to the accepted standards of writing, and have drilled their charges with severe thoroughness, producing a script so typical that one accustomed to reading handwriting matter knows at a glance when he encounters the output of an Englishman. We will be doing well if we return to the fashion of our fathers in writing and strive to live up to it. "Verticalism" means merely the substitution for writing of a set of sprawling turkey tracks.

SENATOR BURTON'S CONVICTION.

The conviction in the U. S. District Court at St. Louis of U. S. Senator Burton, of Kansas, on a charge of having illegally used his high official position to advance the interests of the Rialto Grain and Securities Company, of St. Louis, is a sign of the times. It means that the efforts of "that man Folk," the fearless Circuit Attorney, of St. Louis, have not been in vain. It means that the people have awakened to the necessity of compelling those in high places to respect the laws of the land. It means that the efforts that for five years past have been made by many honest men in various great cities of the country to effect municipal reformation in municipal Government are certain of beneficial results. We know nothing of the merits of the Burton case, but the fact of his conviction in a Federal Court gives us probable cause to believe not only that he was guilty as charged, but that the evidences of his guilt were made so apparent that not even all the corrupt political influences of Missouri and of Kansas—States where political corruption is practiced as a business—were sufficient to save him. It is a lamentable commentary on the condition of morality in this country for a public journal to find cause for congratulation on the possibility of the conviction of a man of great political influence upon a criminal charge. When one considers the personnel of most of the political leaders in the great municipalities of the United States, and further considers the reasons that usually animate many of them in selecting candidates for the U. S. Senate, the wonder is not so great that occasionally a Senator falls from grace. Observation of the ways of his political sponsors, and of their apparent immunity from punishment, may well cause a weak and grasping man, as Burton must be, to forget the dignity of his high office, and, in search of ill-gotten wealth, reach out like a ward politician for everything in sight. But that, upon detection, he should be arraigned, tried and convicted like any common malefactor—that is indeed a sign that the people have sickened of the iniquitous practices of their office-holders, and intend to punish them.

THE LAZY JUDGE AND THE ROTTEN JURY.

Now perhaps our Judges will wake to some realization of their duties, and try and get a decent jury to pass on issues of fact. The neglect of duty brings trouble even on a Judge, and the disgraceful exhibition in the Botkin case should send a wholesome shock of alarm down the vertebrae of our negligent or political holders of the scales of justice.

Who are the most competent members of the community to serve as jurors in cases which involve life and death, and the maintenance of law and order in the community? According to present practice, they are loafers and men with no fixed occupation who enjoy the title "professional" jurymen for lack of having any other profession. Venders of lottery tickets, hangers-on of saloons, worn-out political hacks who have outlived their usefulness for even the coarsest and dirtiest work of municipal politics, constitute the personnel of the jury, and pose before the community as vessels of probity and integrity. From such dirty vessels only muddy water can be drawn, and the waters of justice are filthy enough in all conscience in this town.

The fault rests with the Judges. They have the selection of panels, and they should take care that no names find their way into the jury box whose possessors are not men of the strictest integrity and the most undoubted honesty. This is talking mere commonplace, so commonplace, in fact, that it is known to every child, but ignored by our Judges, who go the scriptural injunction one better and are simpler than little children. And when the jury is selected and the trial begun, it would seem that a close supervising eye should be kept upon the actions of those upon whose decision so much depends. But no. They are allowed free scope to roam about the city, to meet and consort with whom they will, to follow their inclinations, which may, and in fact do, lead them to saloons and other places, where life is freer and evil tendencies do more abound. To continue a case for three days and let your jury roam untrammelled is a peculiarly satisfactory way of ditching justice, and justice does manage to get ditched. When shall we have a judiciary all the members of which will take ordinary precautions in the selection of a jury and ordinary care in watching it after it is selected? It seems little enough to expect, but Heaven knows it may be too much.

CHINESE EXCLUSION.

From Washington is foreshadowed an effort toward letting down the bars of Chinese exclusion when Congress assembles again this winter. It takes no long-range prophet to foretell it that California will present no unbroken front of opposition to such a movement. Rather will large and patent influences throughout the State be found exerting themselves openly for a relaxation of the restrictions on immigration from the Orient.

The Chinese exclusion movement was born on the sandlots from the loins of Kearneyism, but the workingman of that day was not the workingman of today. He asked only a chance to sell his labor for what it was worth. There was no union club in his hand. When he raised the cry of the "yellow peril" it was taken up by the State, by the Pacific Coast, and by the nation. The opposition to exclusion came from those States where the gospel abolition had its earliest preaching. It was not a commercial or industrial consideration that moved the New England States to resist the barring of the Golden Gate, but a sentiment belonging to the broader platform of the brotherhood of all mankind, white, black and yellow. How little the opposition availed is evidenced by the law as it stands.

Things are different now. The manufacturers of California, the producers, the employers of labor of all kinds have seen a steady advance in wages and a steady reduction not only in hours but in the productive capacity of the individual workingman, for these be the fruits of unionism. They have seen the exclusion of the Chinese followed by unequivocal attempts to exclude all kinds of labor. Less than a year ago, when in response to the cry for help from the fields and groves and orchards of California, an effort was made to encourage the immigration and settlement here of working people from the East, the central labor bodies denounced it as a blow at unionism. They back-fired this movement for a greater California with false tales of hunger in this land of plenty, swearing that there was no work for thousands of those already here, when, in fact, ranchers were watching their crops rot for lack of hands to harvest them.

Every acre of new land brought under cultivation intensifies the labor problem in California. It is a problem that will be solved by a reasonable lowering of the Chinese exclusion bars. When the question goes before Congress again, there will be a loud outcry from the labor unions through those newspapers that dare not tell the truth about industrial conditions, but the gentlemen who represent this State at Washington will not be left in doubt of the fact that there is a great and insistent demand here for labor, white, black or yellow, that will do California's work for a living wage and will not devote its time to scheming how to throttle enterprise and frighten capital back to its hiding places—a demand for labor not bidden by a crew of walking delegates.

HIS ROYAL NIBS.

It has been decided to have an auction of the box and orchestra seats on the night of April 14th. Mr. William Greer Harrison is to be auctioneer, and the genial gentleman and his assistants will be sure to realize handsome prices for the seats. The proceeds are to go to the California Woman's Hospital. After April 14th the seats will be on sale at the Sherman & Clay and Kohler & Chase music stores.

How San Francisco Looks to Me

By Fernand Travers, Tourist

No. 13

Are you ever compelled to ride on a tram? If so, by Gad, I pity you. It is on a tram, you know, that the San Francisco male pig rises to the fullest height. They squat hidden behind a paper, which I doubt from their manners if they can read, and allow tired women to hang on to the leather straps, and also, you know, they throw their big, muddy feet across the tram, and sit and grunt like all the rest of the porcine creation. I have been made truly glad to see on more than one occasion, a tired, illy-clad laboring man take his lunch-box in his hand and give his seat to a female, while the other man whose clothes indicated a little better breeding, sat still. You know our discomfort should not count among gentlemen when there is one of the sweeter sex in question. Gentlemen and men of San Francisco, place aux dames, if you remember your mothers or sisters, or if you expect to marry. If I were a woman, I would watch my fiance in the tram cars before I married him. Egad I would.

I have expressed my severe disapproval to your good people here on several occasions on the question of your behavior at the table, and you now know how I regard your actions when riding in a tram. I mean in this case your physical actions. They only offend a fellow's feet or those of a tired female, but your constant mastication of something which you (I have to use the vulgar word) chew, is a desecration of the commonest kind of decency. I note in the trams that a really nice-appearing girl will exhume a sweetie from a sticky box and commence to masticate it, and I have seen men even keep on using their jaws on something that they held between their teeth. It is vile. Hostler chaps in England "chew" tobacco, but how any one, even if he does have to work for a living, can masticate in public is beyond comprehension. I am told you call it the gum-chewing habit. It is awfully bad form. It goes on in the theatre, in the home, and I saw it even at the Easter morning service in one of your swell churches. It is unpardonably ill-bred, and should be stopped. It may be possible downstairs amongst the servant people, and of course, if you want to be understood as being that sort of person, why, keep on using your gum and gums. Another peculiarity you have over here is the use in public of that most unspeakable thing, a toothpick. I have seen chaps that are fairly good fellows leave the club and walk down stairs and out on the street with one of these implements of torture in active use. I have been pained to see at a proper function a dainty lady hide her pretty face behind a napkin while she used a toothpick on her ivories, and by masking her action called more particular attention to her breach of good manners.

I never saw in all my experience anywhere on the globe, and I have traveled a bit, don't you know, toothpicks served as a part of the menu, except here in America. The man that will use this toilet article at table should dine alone, and be served with a toothbrush as well as fork, knife and spoon. I really hate to criticise your gentlewomen here; they are so fresh, so healthful and so well gowned. They are almost English girls in their love of fresh air and golf and yachting. They are athletic, and at the same time feminine to a degree, but they lack the repose of the really. I don't hardly know how to say delicately what I want to, but it is poor form to stand with the hands on the hips, and look like a wash-woman, and it is worse to sit with one ankle across the knee. I am sure I shan't note these things again in my set. For the gentlewomen have been kind to me and thanked me for pointing out to them the little things that were not really proper. There may be a few other minor things, but I am sure, don't you know, I really feel the ideas I give will be taken in the spirit I give them. The distinction between the correct person of either sex is in the manners and bearing of the individual. The stenographer clerk or the shipping clerk man may have good clothes, but they wear out. It is well-bred manners that last, and that makes one's presence acceptable to those who are correct in deportment. Your servants here are not servants; they are your masters, and I have had to call Roger to heel. The chap who said in your valuable paper recently: "The only explanation, and this is no explanation, consists in the fact that some occupations as conducted in this city, but not elsewhere, mind you, not elsewhere, have an unavoidable and incurable tendency to produce a condition of manners which can only be fairly described as vile, and which have no counterpart in any other city in the world." Must have been referring to your servants. Let me assure you that the well-bred mistress of the house has only well-trained servants, and the well-bred gentleman a correct man, but if the mistress and the master don't know how things should be done, the servants are a lot of unpardonable and disgusting bunglers. Like master like man, you know. Let's be correct; it adds so much to the pleasure of living.

PLEASURE'S WAND

A TRUSTY TIP ON THINGS THEATRICAL.

ORPHEUM—Vaudeville. An enjoyable performance.

COLUMBIA—Anna Held—Mam'selle Napoleon—A production that would be hard to beat.

GRAND—Mrs. Fiske—"Divorcons," and a curtain raiser. Fair show.

ALCAZAR—"On the Quiet," very funny.

CENTRAL—"Around the World in Eighty Days," a good performance.

FISCHER'S—"Kismet"—Best musical performance this house has seen

TIVOLI—Mr. Pickwick.

CRUTES—Clark's Comedy Dog Circus. Good show.

ALHAMBRA—Madame Schumann-Heink—The world's greatest contralto

MECHANICS' PAVILION—Norris and Rowe Circus. Very fine.

"Divorcons" was the most successful play so far of the Fiske productions at the Grand Opera House. The little lady still suffered from limitations in enunciation, and there were many remarks, as people left the theatre, such as: "Wasn't it a pity—I didn't hear a thing!" and so on. Well, we'll forgive her. She is ill. It is a most fortunate thing that the select audiences at the Grand have a very comprehensive knowledge of Sardou and Ibsen, or the howl would have been longer and louder. "A Bit of Old Chelsea," a very well written curtain raiser, met with the approbation of the public and served as a fine prelude to the Sardou masterpiece.

The best piece of spectacular work that we have seen this season is on at the Columbia, and Anna Held has scored a triumph. The little actress has improved in all directions. She displays an amount of dramatic ability that few would have dreamt she possessed. Her characterization of Mademoiselle Marz is a splendid piece of work, and her singing has improved to such an extent since her last visit to San Francisco that there is absolutely no comparison. Her duet with Frank Rushworth (Noel Gilot) was a most pleasing and effective bit of vocalization. By the way, Rushworth is a mighty good-looking fellow with a most sympathetic voice. "Mam'selle Napoleon" is a costume show, a musical extravaganza, a triumph in scene painting, the acme of light effects, and singularly enough, and contrary to the daily newspaper critic, it hath a plot. The characters are historical, and many of them are presented merely as gorgeous fashion plates. There is with this company the best Napoleon that I have ever seen. Arthur Lawrence's character sketch is a wonderful creation. He has given this careful study. He has all the little shades of the great Emperor's nature at his fingers' ends. The scene at the kiosk in the grounds of the Chateau of Compiegne is a more than usually good piece of work for the trio (Gilot, Mademoiselle Marz and the Emperor), and raises Lawrence and Anna Held to the rank of stars. The first part of this scene is devoted to a weird dance of Satyr and Wood Nymphs. This is a wonderful dance, and the mechanical effects are splendidly handled. The sign for the week should be "standing room only."

At the Alcazar, the very capable company has easily dropped down from the heights of religious hysteria in "Parsifal" to the rollicking fun of "On the Quiet." Mr. Durkin gives us an appreciation of the character of Young Ridgeway that is quite as good as the original of Willie Collier. There is not much chance for any one to shine exceptionally in this play, and it would be an injustice to mention any of the participants except Mr. Butler and this because, we have seen so little of him lately, it is a deserved tribute. His McGeechy is splendid. It is to laugh and to laugh long and heartily.

* * *

Next week is the last of the Fiske engagement at the Grand. She will give us a continuation of the pretty little story of the London flower girl, "A Bit of Old Chelsea," by Mrs. Oscar Beringer, and this curtain raiser will be followed by the Ibsen "A Doll's House." Mrs. Fiske is said to have achieved her best work in the Ibsen play, and there is sure to be an increased attendance.

* * *

Minnie Maddern Fiske, I am told, will probably temporarily retire from the stage after the end of the engagement at the Grand. She is suffering severely from nervous prostration. She is under the constant care of a nurse, and what with massage treatments and quiet is enabled to fill her dates, but this is only setting off the time for relinquishing her life on the stage. The nurse sits at her bedside and reads her the lightest sort of child's literature. The room is darkened somewhat, and the absolute quiet is disturbed only by the sweet and droning voice of the attendant. People who have been angered by her atrocious enunciation will more easily forgive Mrs. Fiske, knowing the terrible conditions under which she has kept her engagements with the public. It is now in order for the special writer for the jaundiced dailies to give this item a whole page, with pictures of the nurse, Mrs. Fiske, the doctor and the medicine bottles.

* * *

La Belle Guererro and Blind Tom still hold the boards at the Orpheum. In addition there is a fine vaudeville company, and the house is crowded nightly.

* * *

The Central is giving a splendid performance of that standard melodrama, "Around the World in Eighty Days." Here, too, the appreciation of the public is shown in crowded houses.

* * *

At Fischer's, "Kismet" is holding large audiences through the medium of Kerker's splendid music and the delightful lyrics of Mr. Richard Carrol.

At the Tivoli, there is another holdover, "Mr. Pickwick."

Chutes for the coming week, all of the acts announced being of a high order of merit. Dan and Bessie Kelly, who give a good, old-fashioned Irish sketch, abounding in fun, appear here for the first time, as will also Leando and Pooley, comedy acrobats. The Robinsons, colored singers and dancers, will liven things up, and Agnes Miles, the original "Annie Moore Girl," will change her songs and stories. Hawley and Vass, the clever talkers, will vary their specialty; Mabel Lamson, the popular contralto, will be heard in new illustrated songs, and the animatoscope, showing new and amusing moving pictures, will conclude the programme. The amateurs will appear, as usual, on Thursday night. Novel features are constantly being added on the grounds at the Chutes, the latest a miniature electric railroad, running around the lake, proving a great attraction for both young and old.

Madame Schumann-Heink has been the delight of all music lovers at the Alhambra, and the matinee this afternoon should be the signal for a turn out of all those who love good singing. Madame Schumann-Heink has given herself assurance of a rousing reception on her return to this city, and I hope that it will be soon.

Following Anna Held, the Columbia Theatre attraction will be the celebrated farceurs, the Four Cohans, surrounded by a company of sixty people, in George M. Cohan's "Running for Office." The stars are well known here, and bring a splendid chorus.

The very efficient company at the Alcazar will give us a new bill for the coming week in the shape of "Aristocracy." Mr. Durkin and Miss Block have the roles created by Wilton Lackaye and Viola Allen, and the full acting resources of the excellent company will be employed. To follow, April 18th, will come the first stock representation in any theatre of "The Frisky Mrs. Johnson," the vivacious comedy written by Clyde Fitch for Amelia Bingham.

* * *

With the coming week, a new bill at the Orpheum, Sam, Kittie, Clara and Paul Morton, the fun-makers, are on the bill. Edmund Day, playwright and author, will appear, with the support of a competent company, in "Shipmates." Special scenery is carried, and it is said to be a great comedy success. There is a lot of new vaudeville and a lot of new faces. Blind Tom, with a lot of new selections, holds over.

LIBRARY TABLE

Paul Elder & Company, San Francisco, have published "Fairy Tales Up to Now," by Wallace Irwin.

Like the "Love Sonnets of a Hoodlum," "Fairy Tales up to Now" is issued in a 25-cent edition. The scareline typography of the "yellow" newspapers and up-to-date journals have been borrowed from and adapted into a novel, but very correct piece of bookmaking. The Matrix Edition is a bold departure, each copy being bound in genuine matrix boards that have first served their purpose in the issue of a great daily. Obviously no two copies are alike, and the edition presents many very amusing combinations.

The introductory verse of the volume is unique, and will give the book-reader an idea of the contents of the book:

Of yore the foolish Fairy made
His fame in childish story;
But now he wisely plies his trade
And never thinks of glory.

The Ogre at his modern meal
Boasts loud of stocks and margin,
Breakfasts on Standard Oil and Steel
And keeps right on enlargin'.

The Woodland Babes your childhood met
May still enjoy their capers;
But when they're lost they only get
A write-up in the papers.

Where is the Wizard dark of fate,
Whose word brought sloth and ruin?
Behold the Walking Delegate
Who murmurs, "Nothin' doin'!"

And if the stage attracts our fays,
None will forbid, that's certain.
But hush! the play is on—so raise
The advertising curtain.

The "Expansion of the Republic Series" receives a valuable addition in this work by Reuben G. Thwaites. This author, whose works on Daniel Boone and Father Marquette have earned for him a wide reputation, writes this book with especial reference to the expedition of Lewis and Clarke. In this year, when especial interest is being shown in the Louisiana Purchase, this book should possess particular interest. The history is simply told, with no effort at literary style. There is a short chapter on the Conquest of California which is interesting reading, as the story is simply and vividly told, and is free from the prolixity and superabundance of detail into which this subject has usually been encumbered.

Medical Union Number Six.

This is rather a clever skit on the excesses of labor unions, by William Harvey King. It is a satire of things as they would be if carried by modern trades unionism to their fullest extent. The medical profession has formed a union. Union doctors work only six hours a day, and the various ailments are catalogued and divided off, one man being only permitted to prescribe for a certain ailment. Patients are obliged to take such doctors as union headquarters prescribe. No doctors are allowed to work more than the prescribed number of hours. Union undertakers and clergymen refuse their services to those who die in the hands of a non-union doctor. A tragedy ends the story. Because Doctor Schneider lets a patient die rather than transcend a union rule there is a popular uprising against the Medical Union. The physicians go on a strike, but the people hold out, and finally the union, in order to bring the public to its senses, causes an outbreak of the bubonic plague, which devastates the country. Then the people humbly sue for relief, and the strike is declared off after millions of men, women and children have died, and towns and cities have been wiped out. "Of course," the story says in conclusion, "there was nothing left for the doctors, but the principles of the union were maintained."

The Monograph Press. New York.

This, the last volume in the series entitled "Appleton's Business Series," is from the pen of Amos K. Fiske, Associate Editor of the Journal of Commerce and Commercial Bulletin. It contains a description of the functions and methods of modern banking, together with a history of banking institutions. It is a clear and concise description of the matters with which it undertakes to deal, and should prove of great service to students of commercial methods. The various European banking institutions are touched upon as explanatory of the various American systems. There are numerous tables and forms illustrating various steps in banking operations, and the method of clearing house is put more plainly than is usually the case.

Why the Baroness Von Hutten should have written "Araby" is a problem not easy to solve on terms satisfactory or complimentary to the lady. She has shown a power of doing strong work with some meaning in a recent piece of fiction which she called "Violette," and now she satisfies herself by writing a short novelette which possesses no qualities to recommend it except the skill in construction which marks her as a master in her craft. The book is poor, tawdry, unsatisfactory, flashy and untrue. The construction of this riff-raff material is unusually clever and the best possible use is made of bad matter. "Araby" is not deserving of this much notice from a literary standpoint, but as an example of ability gone astray, it may serve to point a moral.

A Few Puffs at the University

The recent report anent the University of California co-eds. and the cigarette habit has stirred up a pretty howdy-do in Berkeley's classic halls. The girls indignantly deny that La Cigarette was among those present at the "kindergarten" show given the other day by the Sophomores to the Senior girls. Some dreamer mounted a night-mare and carried a thrilling account of the "doings" to a weekly paper which announced that the floor of Hearst Hall was literally covered with cigarette stubs after the entertainment. The girls are on the trail of the reckless man who gave out this false story, and when they hunt him down, the chances are he will have to take to the tall timber for breathing room.

Now, for the truths about co-eds. and cigarettes. Every girl in college is ready to "cross her heart and hope to die" that there wasn't so much as a single puff taken at the kindergarten entertainment. The affair was a novel imitation of a kindergarten, about thirty Sophomores doing the stunts of the Froebellettes, while the rest of the girls split the ceiling with peals of laughter over the antics of the kindergarten "kids." Mere man was not allowed within half a mile of the place, for some of the girls were "just too cute" in knickerbockers, and they looked so much the real thing that a cigarette wasn't necessary to complete the boyish effect.

But ssh! whist! while I tell you something! The other day, the Senior girls called a meeting to arrange for the jinks which is held in the girls' gymnasium during commencement week. The affair is in the nature of a parting jolly-up, and usually takes a prankish turn, the girls indulging in all sorts of ludicrous costumes. Everything was running on ball-bearings at the meeting until a young lady arose and suggested that it be plainly understood beforehand that no smoking would be allowed at the jinks!

This smacks very much like a confession; not from the young lady who made the motion, but that such a rule was necessary hints strongly of some one having indulged in the weed somewhere. The truth of the matter is that at the jinks given by the girls several months ago to raise money for a boat, a few co-eds. were so carried away by the spirit of the affair that the cigarettes lit in jest were smoked in earnest. Several girls who came dressed as boys were provided with the weed as an accessory to their costume, and in a moment of bravado they indulged in the pernicious pastime. One prominent girl, who is a member of a sorority whose motto was supposed to be "Dignity," blew smoke wreathes with a dexterity that told of long chumming with the cigarette. No one appeared very shocked that night over the cigarette stunts, but the next day in sober afterthought, the majority of co-eds. regretted that they had countenanced such a thing. The girls kept close counsel with themselves, and decided that the affair must be hushed, and only the frailest rumors of it ever stalked the campus. Nothing of the sort was indulged in at the "kindergarten" affair, and now that the Seniors have gone on record against the cigarette appearing at their "Gym Jinks," the smoke of the co-eds.' battle with the cigarette may be said to have cleared away.

That a sprinkling of girls out of such a large number as the University of California enrolls have predilections for things not down in the college curriculum, should not be a matter of great surprise, after all. Given several hundred girls anywhere under the shining sun, in college or out, and it won't take radium to discover that they are not all clear water diamonds. But the co-eds. have never yet blotted the escutcheon of the University of California. No broad-minded person can condemn them altogether on account of that smoking episode. It must be a matter of regret that cigarette smoking was indulged in, if only by a few girls, at the boat-club jinks, for that serves as a peg to hang all sorts of charges on. And it puts all the girls in a hazy light, while only those who "smoked up" deserve censure. If those same girls choose to smoke cigarettes in private, it's up to their families, but when they indulge at a college function, it's an insult to the alma mater which the girls agree must not be repeated.

The matter of smoking for women has been threshed out a number of times, but it is still debatable. There may be pros and cons on the subject of mature women indulging for one reason or another, but on the question of college girls cigaretting there can be but one opinion—"don't." Dr. Jordan took a stand on the subject several years ago when it leaked out that the habit had taken up quarters at Roble Hall. He rooted it out vigorously, and it has never dared to come out of cover since that time. Stolen puffs may not be sweetest, but at least they do not bring odium undeservedly upon the entire college.

TOWN CRIER

A resident of Richmond,
Stared out into the night.
His wife had left the linen out,
All in the pale moonlight,
And as the brave of Baker's Beach
Was wondering what to do,
He saw a sight that settled him,
And pretty quickly, too.

For a policeman came into the yard,
And gathered up the clothes;
He stole the socks and petticoats,
And queerer things than those.
The man had his suspicions,
But of course he couldn't breathe 'em,
So he shivers in his breeches,
For he's nothing underneath 'em.

I do not suppose that there has ever been a more unblushing example of corruption than that shown in the Kryzyanowski matter. The estate, which was valued at some eleven thousand dollars, got into the hands of as unscrupulous and malodorous a crowd of shysters as any that hangs about the edges of court. Perry and the Nagles practically divided the entire estate between themselves. Who is to blame for these buzzards? Surely not the creatures themselves, for they merely act according to their kind, and no other conduct should be expected of them. The real culprits are the Supreme Court, which makes admission to the practice so easy; the Judges who do not watch the actions of the men whom they must feel to be corrupt, and first and chiefly the Bar Association, which does not know enough to protect the honor of the profession it pretends to watch over.

"The habits of Boyen are exemplary, as he neither drinks, smokes nor gambles." So says the daily paper of a young man in San Rafael, who is accused of systematically robbing his employer. How is this? According to all the tenets of the Y. M. C. A. and the addresses of the successful, this young man should now be sitting in the seats of the successful and pointing the way to a doubting world by which it might hope to reach a corresponding eminence. If one neither drinks, smokes or gambles, he is in the eye of the professional moralist irreproachable and should climb the heights of fame. Occasionally, however, it appears beyond dispute that these three gentlemen who are so puritanical in their tastes are merely weak in their character, and that their non-indulgence in manly vices is only an evidence of their effeminate disposition.

What with the Santa Clara Blossom Show and the various other festivals of a flowery nature in which our people are beginning to indulge it looks very much as if we shall have in a short time quite a reputation among the peoples for innocent merriment. More or less innocent merriment would perhaps be nearer the mark. These carnivals and other similar things are perhaps on the whole a little too artificial to be altogether admirable, and the esthetic sense is by no means always gratified by the artistic efforts of the participants, but it is a poor soul which can never find anything to praise, and if these open-air festivals do nothing else they increase the receipts of the transportation companies and encourage flirtation.

If Tobin, the Burlingame coachman, was trained in England, as he must have been, for no self-respecting Burlingameite would have any other, he should be impressed with the valor of old Kentucky. To run against a Kentucky girl who compelled him to marry her, true it was only by contract, and enforced her wishes with the explanation that she had buried one man in Kentucky and fixed another in Arizona, is an experience enjoyed by few British coachmen. As a matter of fact, it is not on record that Tobin enjoyed it. But the crowning achievement of the Kentuckian consisted in buncoing Tobin out of a thousand dollars, and then making a bargain with her successor in his affections to take all the rest he had. And there are some who say that the Southerners have no enterprise.

The hard-hearted municipality of Alameda has imposed a tax of ten dollars a quarter upon clairvoyants and seers. This is an unwarrantable interference with the freedom of the individual. Such people are frauds, you say, but that is no reason for imposing a tax upon them. If we begin taxing quacks and humbugs where are we to stop? Should a tax on humbugs go on, the streets, nay the very roofs will be crowded with physicians, attorneys, clergymen and professional philanthropists scrambling out of the way of the tax collector. It is for the gaiety of nations that humbugs should be allowed to exist, otherwise what opportunities should we have of ridiculing human gullibility, and there is nothing quite so delightfully entertaining as the fact that some one else has been made a fool of.

It is to be doubted if any society, for its numbers, has anything like the fun which the French Mutual Benefit Society appears to get out of life. Every year their little quarrels fill columns of the papers, and such high-sounding names as Bearnais and Camac-Marquis become objects of interest to the ignoble vulgar. The duel is dead, but witty repartee and keen invective still belong peculiarly to the Gallic race, and whatever may be the sanitary value of the French Hospital, there can be no doubt about the gaiety promoted by the struggles for the control of it.

Here is a question for citizens and Police Commissioners: Is it better to have a good clean-up, show all the rascality, take the necessary punishment and have as a result a solid, decent force, or to palter and be afraid, trying to make terms with the municipal conscience as easily as possible? On the answer to this question depends the future good government of this city.

So the tax against automobiles is to be enforced, and one hundred and seventy-five thousand dollars added to the city treasury. Henceforward let no one say that the rich are not public benefactors. Think of the poor City Hall official and the odd sums which this windfall will enable him to spend in the French restaurants.

Oakland is suffering from an overplus of garbage. The scavengers who are being proceeded against for not incinerating it claim that the crematory is not large enough to grapple with the quantities of waste material. I have inside information that a large quantity of the surplus rubbish consists of manuscripts of Lenten sermons.

SOCIETY

Dear Bessie: Well, the long agony of anticipation is over and done with, and the engagement of Susie Blanding and Knox Maddox has at last been formally announced. Everybody knew it was to come sooner or later, but it is a satisfaction to have it ex cathedra, so to speak, isn't it? Then another engagement just announced is that of Margaret Simpson to the Reverend William Cuthbert of Japan; she met her futur last year while visiting her sister Agnes Partridge in Kobe, and after her marriage in the autumn is going there to live.

What a week this Easter has been! Nearly all the good gained by society folk in the six weeks' comparative quiet of Lent will soon be exhausted if there are many more like the one just past, for it has been crammed full of doings in the swim of one kind or another. There have been weddings, dances, receptions, and dinners, to say nothing of circus parties, theatre parties for Anna Held, concert parties for Schumann-Heink, card parties and luncheons. It is a pity they all come so close together, for it is hard to make a choice when one wants to do everything and finds it a physical impossibility. For instance, on Monday night there was the hop of the 10th Infantry officers at the Presidio; Anna Held's first night; the Loring Club's concert; Mae Burdge's wedding in Oakland; and Eleanor Eckart's in-town; and on Wednesday the Bachelors' dance at the Palace and Ethel Kent's wedding; besides Frances Harris' in the afternoon.

There were three home weddings this week, one of them a rather quiet affair. That of Eleanor Eckart and Ed. Hume came off on Monday night at the Eckart home on Clay street, which was all dressed with spring blossoms and filled with guests to see the ceremony performed by Dr. Clamptt.

On Tuesday evening the quiet wedding was that of Miss Katherine Hamlet and William Boole, at the home of the groom's sister, Mrs. Wellington, on Baker street, the Reverend Kirk Guthrie officiating. Then on Wednesday afternoon came the most elaborate of these home ceremonies, which was at Mrs. Chris. Reis's, on California street, where Dr. Clamptt united Frances Harris and Ernest Stent in marriage. Frances looked very handsome in that wonderful lace gown which has provoked so much curiosity and chatter among her girl friends; Fanny Arques was her only attendant. Ethel Kent's wedding on Wednesday evening was, as I told you it would be, a very pretty one.

Grace Church, which lends itself so well to make a pretty setting for an evening wedding, never looked more attractive than with its brilliant lights and lovely blossoms, and the bridal party was "hard to beat." You see, all the men were in full dress uniform, and the gowns of the bridesmaids were dainty and effective, though I think pale blue looks better in the day-time than at night, and that was the color of the gowns worn by Florence Cole, Mattie Milton, Jane Willshire and Louise Hall, and Kathleen Kent, who was maid of honor, wore white. I hear that Mae Burdge's wedding, which took place at Arbor Villa, on Monday night, was the most elaborate that Oakland has ever seen, and that the prettiest sight was when the bridal party came down the stairs into the large hall, where the bridal ceremony was performed. I was so sorry not to have been there. All the details for Edna Barry's wedding have been completed, and it will be a very pretty one, I am sure. The ceremony is to take place on Saturday afternoon, April 30th, at St. John's Church in Oakland, amid a profuse setting of pink blossoms and green foliage; Jane Barry Will be her sister's maid of honor, Marian Goodfellow, Lettie Barry, Madeline Clay and May Coogan the bridesmaids, who will all wear pink gowns. I have not yet heard who is to be Philip Clay's best man. All the guests are invited to the church, as the house reception is to be quite a small one. They are coming to live in San Francisco.

The card parties this week have all been large ones. Those at Charlotte Ellinwood's on Wednesday and at Native Sons' Hall on Thursday night, were both charitable affairs; those that were otherwise were Mrs. Morgan's on Tuesday of sixty guests, and Mrs. Tim Hopkins's yesterday, where bridge was played. Another big bridge party to come off next week is the one Mrs. Mayo Newhall is to give on Tuesday, and it is to be on a very elaborate scale, I believe.

Among other affairs this week were Mrs. George Wheaton's tea in Oakland on Wednesday afternoon, and in the evening Mrs. Scott's fancy dress reception for the Polyglot Club; Mrs. McAneny gave a luncheon at the Palace on Monday. She will spend some time at Del Monte. The Shiels had a tea on Thursday at their home on Page street, and Elsie Sperry was one of the assistants; to-night the dance that I told you was to come off in Sausalito will be given by the Lantern Club. You never saw such enthusiastic workers as there have been for the garden party in the Phelan grounds to-day, and now it remains to be seen what the clerk of the weather will give as his contribution. Mrs. Bowie-Detrick, who has charge of the grab-bag, has a collection of pretty trifles—and some big ones, too—and among them a lot of daintily dressed, wee dollies; pretty little Mrs. Covode has the candy booth under her charge; Ada Sullivan looks after the needs of the inner man; Mrs. Walter Dean is chief boss of the tea table, and Helen de Young dispenses ice-cream. How hard every one connected with the affair is working to make "A Dream of Fair Women" a success! It is to be given at Lyric Hall next Monday for the benefit of the Good Samaritan Mission.

Well, I suppose we ought to be happy at the official announcement that the Martin colony will be such a large one at San Mateo this spring, for the Peter Martins are to be here until June at least, they having taken the Kruttschnitt cottage there, and the Walter Martins have re-considered their intended trip abroad, and will occupy the Jo. Tobin villa at Burlingame. The Downey Harveys are to have a local habitation near by. The visit of the Whitelaw Reids to California this year has been earlier and briefer than usual, and every one is sorry not to have seen more of the charming Jean; but you know they always stop down at Millbrae. The Menlo Park folks are glad to hear the Flood place will be inhabited this summer, as Mrs. James Flood will, 'tis said, move down there very soon, and with the assistance of Miss Jennie, do a lot of entertaining.

The De Guignes have named June for their trip abroad, and will spend the summer in Florence chiefly; meanwhile they will be at San Mateo, where all the Parrotts will be found the first of May. The Tom Magees are to spend the summer at Burlingame or San Mateo—it is pretty much the same thing—if they can get a place to suit them; the George Shreves left last week for their cottage in that lovely suburb. There are to be a lot of people at Del Monte ere long. The Louis Parrotts, including Marie Louise and Mrs. Low and Flora, have gone already for the entire summer, as usual; the Joe Tobins go to Calistoga. Jennie Blair is not going away after all, but will stay in California this summer; Mrs. Blair is going to Paris to join friends there. We are to have Eleanor Morrow Roosevelt here next week, as she and Captain Roosevelt are coming home on the Sheridan en route to Washington. They are to be here some little time, I believe, and you may be sure will receive an ovation from their friends.

SCHOOL CHILDREN'S EXHIBIT.

Specimens of the work of San Francisco school children in the departments of drawing and wood-carving have been forwarded to St. Louis for exhibition in the Louisiana Purchase Exhibition, and no doubt they will command favorable attention. The specimens were not selected with the view of exaggerating the proficiency of the young artists, nor to show a standard of work higher than is maintained all the time. The methods employed by the Department of Education in Manual Training are simply such as are best calculated to encourage and facilitate the development of the artistic on lines of usefulness and personal advantage in the avenues of employment; the idea being to equip each pupil, as far as may be, with a thorough practical knowledge of the rules of carving and drawing by actual experience. The exhibit now on its way to St. Louis will, therefore, be a just presentation of the product of those of San Francisco's school children who are in training in that department of the Public School system. When the several specimens are properly displayed in the building to which they are assigned, there is not a doubt that they will not only compare most favorably with similar exhibits from other sections of the country, but will show merit and talent of which San Francisco may well be proud. Many of the specimens, both of wood carving and drawing, indicate originality of design and painstaking in execution that bespeak a career of remunerative usefulness in the field of art, culture and demonstration for their designers' skillful hands.

Our women are still progressing in vigor and picturesqueness of language. One of them the other day called her husband a "dog-faced man" and threatened to brain him with the frying pan. Two institutions combine to add to the effectiveness of the militant female, one being the woman's club, which, by its literary research, adds to the strength and copiousness of the vocabulary; the other, physical culture, which improves the muscle, and renders them better able to contend against the office-stale complement of the dominant sex. Let us keep up our courage. We shall soon produce a female who will combine in her own person the physical vulgarity of the Spartan woman with the linguistic ability of a Billingsgate fish-wife.

THE LOOKER-ON

We have paid our little due to Miss Convention,
 And we've found it just as much as we could wish,
 Now our pleasures shall receive our glad attention
 That we put our little offering in the dish.
 For a dollar to the poor
 And a passport to the revel,
 Means a conscience that's secure,
 When we traffic with the Devil.

The forced abstention sent us all revolting,
 But there comes a limit even to our pain,
 And society, the wanton, is assaulting
 The battlements of folly once again.
 Put a dollar in the plate—
 Then you feel you've done your duty,
 And accelerate your gait
 To the shrines of wine and beauty.

It is charged that three policemen, tired of inactivity on their beats, have resorted to burglary in an endeavor to create excitement. I am not prepared to believe that the policemen committed the crimes charged against them; not because I consider them guiltless of such desires, but rather because the paper that makes the charge has for years made the police department the object of many unwarranted attacks. While it may be true that policemen are guilty of many offenses, it does not seem probable that the three accused men risked San Quentin for the paltry amount stolen from the saloon on their beat. There is proof, however, that they were certainly very negligent of their duty, and for this reason they should be severely punished. I made some reference recently to the practice in the Police Courts of licensing Chinese gamblers by levying nominal fines. That is one instance of mal-administration of police affairs. It is also notorious that "bunco" men are numerous in the city because policemen will not arrest them without specific orders from headquarters. That is another instance of mal-administration. One of the officers, now accused of robbing the saloon, arrested several notorious confidence operators several years ago, but was required to release them, by order from the "upper office." If he is now trying to reap a harvest on his beat, much of the fault would seem to be with those directors of police affairs, who seem to be eternally winking with one eye, the while they are very vigilant with the other.

Being filled with modesty, I will not lay claim to powers of divination in relation to the Botkin case, but I may say that readers of this column are, of course, not surprised with the scandalous developments in the course of that notorious trial. I pointed out that it was apparent that nothing would be left undone to save the defendant from the gallows or life imprisonment. It is not necessary to repeat my suggestions regarding the very remarkable story of Mrs. Botkin's "double," discovered first by the trial Judge, and quite recently elaborated upon by the Examiner. Listen to what Mrs. Botkin herself said during her direct examination the other day:

Knight—Were you in a street car on Sunday, April 22, 1900?

Mrs. Botkin—No, sir.

The date mentioned is the day on which Judge Cook says he saw in a street car a woman who, he says, he thought was Mrs. Botkin. During her examination Mrs. Botkin also denied that she had been at other places, and added to her denial, "it must have been my double." So the "double" has entered into the case. Now, prepare for a real, sure-enough double, manufactured for this occasion only. Then, for the argument on mistaken identity. After that, in the event of a conviction, an appeal, reversal and new trial based on the prejudice aroused in the minds of the jurors by the incident of the alleged bribery, and the motion to dismiss the jury. Then would come a new trial with its attendant expense and the difficulty of again getting the witnesses from Delaware. Mrs. Botkin is fighting for her life, and no card in the deck will be left unturned to her disadvantage. Meanwhile, who is paying her expenses? She is not a woman of wealth; her former husband is not a millionaire, and for years he has not overburdened her with coin. Yet she appears in jewels and fine raiment, and it is charged that some one offered a juror a bribe for his vote in her favor. Strange, isn't it?

The editorial in last week's News Letter on the graft in the Board of Health has not been without its effect. The Board of Health has adopted rules for the guidance of the physicians in the Emergency Hospitals. These rules prohibit the physicians from charging fees against the persons of those emergency patients who may escape with their lives, or putting in bills against the estates of those who may die, as more than a few have while in charge of the "accident doctors." To a layman, it seems more than passing strange that it should be necessary to adopt rules for the guidance of a job lot of physicians along the path of honesty. It is certainly cause for not a little wonderment that professional men have such insufficient personal sense of the eternal fitness of things—such disregard for the proprieties of the occasion in which they may find themselves—that it has become necessary to fetter them by rules devised for the sole purpose of keeping them honest. No man was ever made honest by reason of a rule or a law. If his brand of honor is of the kind that requires penal attachments to keep it in place, it is beneath consideration. It is strange that the members of the Board of Health do not see that point. Why, take this latest case in which Chief Surgeon Brackett is implicated. He attended a butcher named Buttgenbach, who was taken to the hospital after being shot by unknown assassins. Of course the butcher died, but now along comes Brackett with a bill of $250 for medical services rendered the butcher, who came to him as an emergency patient. The doctor says he will not push the claim, because he is now aware that its presentation was contrary to the rules of the Board of Health. Is that an admission that the claim was not a just one, to begin with? If it were proper, how can a rule make it improper? Let me see. Brackett gets $150 a month salary; last month, in addition, he presented bills amounting to $750 to patients whom he met in his capacity as emergency surgeon. That makes a total of $900 for the month—if he gets it all. Can you beat him?

Mrs. P. A. Finigan is reported as earning fame and dollars in London as a demonstrator of all that may be graceful in the female form divine. She should succeed easily along that line, for she was known here for years not only as one of the most beautiful and graceful women in society, but also as one of the most charming. She has resumed her maiden name—Boysen—and judging from the reports in the English papers, has gained a large clientele among the women of the British metropolis. The general idea is to teach English girls to be as graceful as Parisiennes or Americans. There is no gainsaying the fact that while there may not be found on earth a more charming companion than a highly cultured Englishwoman, the fact remains that as a class they do not seem to possess so much innate grace as their more fortunate sisters of the two Republics. Mrs. Finigan, or Boysen, has therefore discovered a mission. If she wins out, the Colonel may no longer be troubled by reported endeavors to conceal hoarded wealth so that his wife may not reach for it for purposes of alimony.

One of the very last names on the list, if you wrote down the names of domesticated public men, would be Ferris Hartman. Now, wouldn't it? When you see him gyrating around the Tivoli stage, it is hard to imagine him closely hugging the gas grate and lulling the baby to sleep by singing: "He Never Cares to Wander from His Own Fireside." But Hartman is it with a big I. What do you think he was doing last Sunday? Why, pushing a baby carriage around the music stand at the Park before the eyes of admiring thousands. The curtains of the carriage were closely drawn, but it is said that within, calmly sleeping, was Hartman's latest production. Next Monday night, pictures of the baby will be distributed at the door of the Tivoli, and on each will be this autographic inscription: "With the compliments of the author.—Ferris Hartman." By the way, has any one ever noticed how much Hartman's every-day face looks like General de Young's? This with regrets and apologies to both of them.

The Merchants' Association thinks Assessor Dodge has been making too much money. It wants to know by what authority of law he drew about $3,000 extra last year, when the amendment doubling his salary did not become operative until January last. Dodge says he drew the increased amount because the people voted it, the Legislature ratified it, he needs it, he thinks he is entitled to it, and it is the money of the people, anyhow. Yet the Merchants' Association is not satisfied. It may be that the statements of the directors of the Association will bear revision before the assessment roll is made up.

The investigation made by Judge Kerrigan into the spoilation of the Kryzyanowski estate shows the need of a vigorous and watchful Bar Association in this city. There are too many Nagles and Perrys and Solomons pirating at the local bar. Out of an allowance of $10,000, the lawyers got away with $8,000, and now they not only decline to tell where their woman client is, but they "do not remember" whether she got a cent of the ten thousand. One of the Nagles thought the remaining $2,000 went for "expenses."

Jack London's forte is certainly not correspondence from the field of battle. In a long story he states this very important discovery: "Ever since war began and man domesticated the fowl, chickens and eggs have been considered lawful loot, and so long as man shall be irrational enough to fight wars, that long will the stomach and the ethics of the soldier remain unchanged." And Hearst pays $1,000 a month—or is it a week—for that sort of stuff. Another evidence of the fact that he is not fit to be President.

George Whittle has been at it again. If old Nick Luning ever thought his hard-earned dollars would be burned along the roads of Alameda County, at the rate of forty miles an hour—but why pursue a painful subject. George has caused his father more trouble than all his money. If the unfortunate young women from Natoma street ever get out of the hospital, the only romantic thing young Whittle can do, of course, is to marry her. This automobile business is just as dangerous for the heart, it is said, as it is occasionally for the limbs.

Richard McVey, the Delaware detective, now enjoying the hospitality of San Francisco, is a "bad actor." When he left here, after the first Botkin trial, he forgot to settle a choice collection of bills. Among them was one due to Patrick Sullivan. The latter stood up McVey the other day and demanded his coin. There was a glitter in the Sullivan eye, and harsh was the Sullivan tones. McVey immediately drew an order for the money, and the creditor went his way rejoicing. It is not well to owe money to large, rude men bearing the honored and ancient name of Sullivan.

Peerless Oil Wells.

Report No. 53 of the Peerless Oil Company, says in regard to betterments on the Kern River ground since last report on January 1, 1904, that wells Nos. 31, 32 and 33 have been completed, but No. 32 is being re-drilled because of the upper casing. A pump house is being constructed over our pipe line pump. The production during the three months ended March 31 aggregated 479,160 barrels; the deliveries during the same time aggregated 582,217. Seven million two hundred thousand barrels are yet to be delivered on contract with Pacific Coast Oil Company. There is nothing to show that any difficulty will be experienced in producing this amount of oil during the time limit of the contract. The production of well No. 1 on the Coalinga property of the company has increased steadily, until on March 29 it was 266 barrels per day. The gravity of this oil is 21 degrees Beaume, and it finds a ready sale at 20 cents per barrel. As soon as oil was struck, two 1200 barrel tanks were put up, and the Pacific Coast Oil Company has extended a line to these tanks. Our regular deliveries began March 5th. The pump plant station has been completed. A strike of oil is expected at any time in well No. 2 at the Fulton. The experienced oil men who have examined this property concur in the opinion that its value is at least as great as that of our property at Kern River wells. Well No. 5 has been finished, but the flow of sand, gas and oil from No. 2 has prevented its completion. The gas pressure has, however, relaxed in all our six wells, and some of them are now being pumped."

The Coming Gas Election.

Not much publicity has been given to the unsigned circular which shareholders of the S. F. Gas and Electric Company received with their dividend checks recently. This inspired document warns shareholders that a proxy given to any one outside of those endorsed by ten members of the present Board of Directors will augment a faction of discord in the directory and can only result in hampering the management and interfering with its efficiency. Following is this bid for support, an appeal to pockets already, in the majority of cases, badly depleted by a shrinkage in values: "Before the present management assumed control, stock was sold under $35 per share. Before the date of Mr. C. O. G. Miller's first circular letter it was over $70 per share. After the date of Mr. C. O. G. Miller's first circular letter it was under $55 per share. Shareholders supporting the regular ticket will assist the management in upbuilding the property and increasing the value of their holdings."

There is one thing to be said about the Miller circular—it was unsigned; this anonymous screed is fathered by nobody, possibly because nobody had the colossal gall to put his name to it. In the first place, it admits that a faction of discord does exist in the directory by the fear expressed that it may be augmented. Again the insinuation that the break in the stock has been quite a recent affair and due entirely to the action of Mr. Miller, who, by the way, comes in for a nice little stab in the back from some unknown hand, overlooking the fact that the movement up to $70 mentioned was simply due to manipulation, and that the real break in the stock, and the one that caused the most serious injury, took place long before the company changed its complexion, with practically no change in the main management. Who was in control at that period, pray, when the scheme for the present combination was being hatched out. If this circular, anonymous, by the way, exercises any effect upon the shareholders who received it, there is only one way it can sway the mind of an old-time shareholder, and that is to desire and work for a clean sweep of the present board outside of the existing faction of discord.

The only safety for the shareholders of this company lies in discord and plenty of it. The resignation of Manager Lawless points to him as a man who recognized the difficulties of a situation where a man's best efforts and good will were handicapped in every direction to his own disadvantage and disgust. The consumers of the doubly execrated product of this unpopular concern will be quite ready now to relieve Mr. Lawless of the responsibility for the treatment of which so many complaints have been made of late to pose him in the position of martyr. It is a relief also to be informed that Mr. Miller is about to enter the board, but only in a measure. It would have served the public better had he stuck to the good fight he was making, and went in as President and in control of the corporation. However, it is useless to expect everything in this quarter of the globe. It remains to be seen how the cat will jump at the approaching election. There is one thing that shareholders should remember, that a continuance of the present powers in control will be a piece of insanity upon their part which they will regret in the future.

Pine-St. Market.

Business continues good in the local market for Comstock shares. Prices have shown considerable strength throughout, with fluctuation, active enough to permit traders making handsome profit provided they chose to take them. Some radical changes are likely to take place in Comstock affairs before long, in conformity with the plans already outlined by the management of the mines. All is working, however, to improve the situation, and furnish strong and material backing to the market. This should result in much higher prices, which means money-making for all who have the nerve to get into the market and hold on. People who bought Ophir months ago at and below $1 per share, had no cause to regret their venture, and there are stocks in the list now, and some of them very low-priced at that, which are to do just as Ophir has done, before long.

Local Stocks and Bonds.

There is no vital reason why local stocks should be so quiet as they are just now. Money is plentiful in town, and there are good opportunities offering for investment on the Board outside of Gas and Electric, which gave the old-time investors such a disagreeable bump. There are any number of other stocks which are available for the investment of idle funds to good advantage. Considerable more trading has been done in the bond market of late, but the movement is small, even then, compared with what it ought to be. The Pacific Lighting Co. paid its regular monthly dividend of 35 cents per share on April 5th, and on the same date the Onomea Sugar Company paid a dividend of 20 cents per share.

A sale of the old Sierra Buttes mine, near Sierra City, has been sold, it is said, through Richard Phelan to San Jose parties. A consideration is named, but the figures given are not official, and cannot be relied upon.

The Mining Reporter of Denver states it has reason for believing that the directors of Stratton's Independence mine, at Cripple Creek, Colorado, are considering the closing of the property. The assigned reasons for this are that developments in the lower levels are unsatisfactory, although it is believed that there are bodies of pay ore in some of the upper levels.

James K. Wilson, president of the San Francisco National Bank, who was elected a member of the Executive Council at the Convention of the American Bankers' Association, held here last year, is about to leave shortly for New York to attend the meeting of the Council to meet in that city on April 27th and 28th.

The Mining Journal of London, of March 5, 1904, contains a supplement in which is printed a tabular arrangement of the distinguished characteristics and localities of precious stones, compiled by Mr. Leopold Claremont, of London, the eminent authority on precious stones. Thirty-six varieties of gems are listed, among them being several gem stones found in California.

OBITUARY.

Dr. Louis A. Kengla is dead, and was buried on March 28th. He was, at the time of his death, editor of the Pacific Medical Journal. Dr. Kengla was a splendid man, and an ornament to his profession, and his taking-off is bemoaned by many. He had a large charity list, and there are many poor families in this city, and, indeed, in Oakland and Alameda, that will now have to look elsewhere for a physician, and much suffering will ensue, as many of these are not able to pay for medical services and much suffering is sure to follow. The community could well have spared many another man.

Great Britain in Thibet.

A battle between the British army of observation in Thibet and the troop of the Llama was not expected, but the unexpected has happened. Of course, the Thibetans were routed with considerable loss to themselves and little loss to the British column. The British were attacked most treacherously, which was a mistake on the part of the natives, as they are likely to discover later on, for whatever Great Britain's original purpose was in sending a small column into Thibet, it may now be assumed that British garrisons will hereafter be permanent fixtures in that land of Shamanism. But already the diplomatists and military experts of Europe are at it, trying to fathom the bearing and influence on international politics the event is likely to have. Had the column of observation entered Thibet before Russia and Japan crossed swords, there is no doubt that the London Government would have been met at the boundary line by Russian threats and Chinese protests. For many years the Russian Government has coveted Thibet, and was waiting for some sort of an excuse to throw an army of occupation into the Llama's territory, but the Czar has been too busy for a dozen years in his venture in Manchuria to court a war with England by seizing Thibet. However, only a month or so ago the threat came from St. Petersburg that if England attempted to do so much as send a corps of observation into Thibet, a column of Russians would invade the territory and march on to England's possessions in India, but it turned out to be a diplomatic bluff. It did, though, awaken Great Britain to the fact that with Thibet under Russian control, and with the Himalayas as a base of hostile activities, India would be placed at a dangerous disadvantage, and consequently the British column was sent ahead not only to observe, but now to occupy. It was understood that before the British corps entered Thibet that the consort of the Emperor of China, whose suzerainty over Thibet was recognized by all nations, had been obtained, and presumably in exchange for valuable support in the event of Russian success over Japan and an attempt at the invasion of China. And what is bothering diplomatists now is the reason of Russia's seeming acquiescence in British occupation of Thibet—the kind of occupation that always means a permanent stay with Great Britain. It is given out from St. Petersburg, but no doubt greatly exaggerated, that an entente has been agreed upon between England and Russia which provides for Russia's right to hold as much of Manchuria as she may want, and great Britain's right to dominate in Thibet, with more or less of a cold shoulder turned toward Japan. Anyway, a change in the general programme, as between Russia and England, seems to have been made, but what it all means, even diplomatists are puzzled over.

England and Russia.

The report of a probable entente between Great Britain and Russia is undoubtedly a St. Petersburg "campaign lie." Russia has been for a century, is now and ever will be Great Britain's political and commercial enemy. They are rivals in Asia for commercial and political supremacy. For a century Russia has been grunting over England's hold upon India, and the grunting has been more pronounced since the London Government secured a larger slice of China's territory and harbors. Naturally Great Britain would not be content to have restrictions placed upon her ambition to acquire still greater advantages in Eastern Asia. Russia wants exactly what Great Britain proposes to have, nor is it possible to agree upon a division of anything. Hence there is not room for both as a dominating influence, and the reason why the commercial world stands for Great Britain as against Russia is that England's policy is open doors to the commerce of the world, herself being willing to take her chances in the whirl of competition, while Russian domination would mean commercial advantages for Russia and disadvantages for other nations. That is the real secret of the pro-British sentiment in America's official and unofficial going and coming, and now that Japan has adopted England's trade policy, it is easy to see why the two Anglo-Saxon nations should give their moral support to Japan, and why an entente between London and St. Petersburg would be an unnatural alliance. In fact, the point has been reached in the concerns of Eastern Asia where the one question is, shall Russia by arbitrary obstructions monopolize the commerce and industries of 500,000,000 people, or shall all the world be placed upon a common footing, letting competition do the rest? The Anglo-Saxon and the Japanese are for open doors and commercial rivalry.

Word comes from Chili that Sensational in Japan has secured a treaty from the Extreme. that nation which provides that in the future Japan will stand as a sort of heavy-weight friend of Chile in any international complications, even to the extent of substantial aid should war ensue. In return for all this, Chile is to cause Ecuador to cede the Gallapagos Archipelago to Japan for a naval station. The Archipelago is mortgaged to Chile for all it is worth, which makes Chile's voice a thing of convincing power with Ecuador; besides, the compact includes the safeguarding of all the South American States in the event of foreign complications. To the public it is called a "commercial treaty," but in any event it is a severe slap right in the Kaiser's face, for Germany has been intriguing for years to secure the Archipelago, and would have succeeded long ago, but for the fact that the United States would not permit the transfer. The Archipelago, if well fortified, would about command the Pacific approaches to the Panama Canal, but the Washington Government is too closely tied up in treaties with Japan to enter a protest against Japanese ownership of the Archipelago, even if it does command the Panama Canal's Pacific end. Japan is not forgetting the diplomatic end of her national life because of war with Russia. In this connection it may be said that every day St. Petersburg is more convinced that China is playing false, and that before the war is over Chinese and Japanese soldiers will join hands and make Russian defeat a common cause.

The Emperor of Germany continues The Kaiser's to miss no opportunity to let the Predicament. world know that "me and Providence and Germany are standing right at the side of Russia." And for some days his "by the grace of God" imperial greatness has been running after the "yellow and brown peril" ignis fatuus, and crying in a loud voice that "Russian defeat would mean the yellow and the brown men's civilization for Europe." Of course he is not taken seriously in any quarter of the globe, but his "notion" is turning his friendship for the Czar into a sort of holy zeal for Russian success and the complete putting under the foot of Christianity the entire race of browns and yellows, and there is no telling what day he may override all opposition of his ministers and openly espouse the cause of his friend, the Czar. Of course, such an act would at once involve Europe and America in the Russo-Japanese muddle. France is rapidly losing her pro-Russian sentiment. The suspicion is gaining ground that Germany is slowly but surely supplanting France in the affections of Russia, and that should an emergency arise in which Russia's friendship would come handy, the Paris Government would have only the cold shoulder of the Czar, while the Kaiser would have his ear.

INSURANCE

The American Mutual Fire Insurance Company, of Iowa, is safely in the hands of a receiver. Its business amounts to about $3,500,000, and it has 7,500 policyholders. It began business in 1897. It is dollars to doughnuts that the receiver will get the little there is to grab, and the innocent, poor fool of a policyholder, who was beguiled into paying for a cheap insurance, has to settle with a receiver.

The insurance companies interested in the Bass loss at Indianapolis, Ind., have entered suit in the Federal Court at Indianapolis against the Fort Wayne Gas Company to recover the amount paid by them to Mrs. Bass, who is the insured whose residence was destroyed by fire in February, 1902, with a loss to insurance companies of $63,000 on building and $47,000 on household and personal goods. The house was heated by gas and was set afire by an overheated furnace, which is said to have been caused by an unusually high gas pressure, the gas pumping station at Fort Wayne having been out of order on that night. The case is peculiar, inasmuch as the companies involved are evidently using their subrogation rights. Here in San Francisco, the insurance companies might possibly sue for damages on account of failure to provide the pressure, but they would not dare to enter our courts and plead that the pressure was too strong or excessive.

The Milwaukee Diocesan Council of the Episcopal Church recommends that a church insurance company be inaugurated. In the meantime it requests that present policies of insurance on the property within its demesne be renewed. It seems that the Council has recognized the fact that Lent is over and has gone in to enjoy itself. When it is remembered that the Capitol of Wisconsin, the abode of the un-Godly and irreverent, burned last month without practically any insurance, it is amazing to see and note the trust that the Episcopalian Council reposes in the Lord. Trust in Providence is a great factor, but after a fire the body that payed for its insurance and trusted to a good company to reimburse it for burned property, is usually more smiling than the fellows who pray, but don't pay.

The fact that insurance companies can be made to pay is exemplified in the recently decided case of McMahon vs. the United States Life Insurance Company. To quote from an exchange: "The United States Circuit Court of Appeals at New Orleans rendered a decision giving a verdict of $10,000 against the United States Life, in favor of the widow of Rudolph McMahon. McMahon was in Mexico when one of his premiums became due, and had written the company, asking if it had any accredited agents in that country. The company replied that it had not, and asked that the premium be remitted direct to the home office, specifying that a check or draft would be sufficient. McMahon bought, for gold, a draft on the Leon Rasst Bank of New York and sent it to the company, which acknowledged it by returning a receipt for the premium. Within a few days the Rasst Bank failed, and shortly after Mr. McMahon died. The widow made a demand for the insurance, but was refused on the ground that the premium had not been paid, and a tender of the premium in cash was refused. The Texas Circuit Court rendered a verdict in favor of the insurance company, on trial, but the Court of Appeals overrules this decision on the ground that the insured had paid the premium in good faith, and that when the company accepted the draft and sent a receipt the consequent loss, by failure of the bank upon which the draft was drawn, should not fall upon the insured."

The evidence of good faith was shown which is all that is or should be needed in an equity case. The company involved is not reckoned amongst those of the recommendable kind, and its actions in trying to defeat the McMahon claim is in keeping with the usual methods of those companies which are counted amongst the smaller ones.

On the other hand, there are life insurance companies operating under the non-forfeitable law which continually incur a large expense in trying to make a settlement of claims with the beneficiaries of deceased policyholders who in innumerable cases has not any knowledge whatsoever that there is anything to be collected or due from the insurance company. Here in California, one company paid a detective agency to locate the descendants of a policyholder who had not paid the company his premium for years, and when the legatees were finally located, they objected to paying one-half the expense of their exhumation, but the life insurance company was honest, and voluntarily paid the amount due the heirs of a policyholder who failed to pay his premium.

The officers of the Crocker-Wheeler Company, manufacturers of electric generators and motors, of Ampere, N. J., whose branch office in this city is at Fremont and Howard streets, are working up a plan of life insurance for the men in their employ. The company will assume the entire expense of the insurance and make the families of the insured the sole beneficiaries. As Crocker-Wheeler Company employs in its works at Ampere from 500 to 700 machinists alone, the item of insurance will involve a very considerable annual outlay, the only return from which will be the good-will of the employees.

The Ammonia Tank

A Story of April 2, 1904.

They do not speak as they pass by.
They were the best of friends,
And in the wherefore and the why,
A tragic story blends:

For she asked him if the Poodle Dog he knew,
And he acted in a manner very queer,
And when she still persisted,
And he fretted and insisted,
She answered him: "I saw you there, my dear."

"You were coming down a fire-escape, my pet.
You had little on of value to be seen,
And the breezes that were blowing
Made a very curious showing.
And your countenance resembled Paris green;
There were lots of other people just the same:
They were coming down the fire-escape in shoals.
They were in a pretty fix—
It was only half-past six,
And they'd little but their bodies and their souls."

He took his hat and went away,
His soul was full of care.
He does not know, even to-day,
Just how she saw him there.

TO THE WELL-DRESSED MAN.

Mr. C. H. Rehstrom, formerly Sanders & Johnson, and Mr. E. W. Hagbom, late cutter for J. W. Bell Sons & Co., of New York City, have formed an association in the tailoring business. This is surely a boon to the man who believes in the omnipotence of neat dressing. The gentlemen are well known, and to wear clothes made in the new establishment will be to wear a cachet of good taste. The new firm is located in the Phelan Building, and they are just now offering for inspection some exquisite spring and summer patterns in carefully selected suitings.

VACATION.

The California and Northwestern Railway has just issued a new edition of the annual booklet called "Vacation." For years hundreds of people have availed themselves of the information found within the pages of this little volume. The information is for those who intend to go into the country for their vacation, and all the information is reliable and to the point. The book gives a complete list of the mineral spring resorts, country homes and farms, where summer boarders are taken, and the select camping spots. The illustrations in the "Vacation 1904" are good, and the publication is a credit to the railroad and its passenger department.

Rambler Automobile Agency. 1331 MARKET STREET Corner 10th.

BY THE AUTOCRANK

The automobile outlook locally is most promising. The race committee is hard at work formulating plans for a most successful race meet to be held some time during next month. The experience of last year has taught the officials many things which an occasion like last year could only bring forth.

This event, with the annual run to Del Monte, will be the features of the spring season. Also there will undoubtedly be a paper chase by automobiles, as suggested by the News Letter.

One of the club officials, in speaking of the paper chase said "that is what we want—something that will bring the owners together in an event that will be out of the ordinary. Then, again, it may be made to serve as an endurance test, inasmuch as the course could be so laid out that it would try both the ability of the handler and the machine. With a Runs Committee located at unknown points it would ensure perfect fairness. There are roads near at hand which would give all the tests needed."

It has been also suggested that a captain of the gallery be appointed, whose duty it would be to lead those who wish to follow and see the fun and finish, along the route to the finishing point in time to see the winners come in.

This event should be called the week after the race meet, when there will be a number of visiting automobilists in the city. One also could be held during the Del Monte meet.

Another thing advocated by the News Letter that has caused some discussion is the Woman's Automobile Club. It will be one of the greatest helps to the local club in its work towards good roads. Some of the enthusiasts who have discussed the proposition have said "that there are not enough women handling automobiles to form such an organization." This is wrong, as can easily be proven by the records at the headquarters of the Park Commissioners. If the list of permits to the South drive is looked over it will be found that a club could be formed that would make a very strong adjunct to the local State body. What should be done is for the officials of the Automobile Club of California to appoint a committee to organize a woman's annex. This would give the necessary support that such a club would need at the start. The women could elect their own officers, and in all respects practically be a separate body from the parent club. The presiding officials of the "auto" club might be a director of the woman's club, and the President of the latter body a director of the State body, and this way both would be held together by bonds that would make them stronger in every respect.

A meeting of the Automobile Club will shortly be held, when the season's programme will be made out.

to San Jose on Friday of last week in his White touring car, and reports a very interesting trip.

Mr. John Bremer's new Winton touring car was delivered to him Sunday morning, and Sunday afternoon he was seen driving through Golden Gate Park in same.

Ed. McKinney of Yreka, Cal., who purchased a White Stanhope some months ago for use in Siskiyou County, has found it just the thing for that mountainous section, and has purchased three more Stanhopes for use in the same county.

The Sunset Automobile Company reports sales of the Buckboard to the following people during the past week: J. S. Meyers, Salinas; S. M. Rice, Dixon; F. P. McCray, San Francisco; J. A. Lamb, Coquille, Ore.; H. Muzzy, Rio Vista; and E. R. Stewart, Denverton, Cal.

The Scott & Blakeslee Company, of the Pioneer Automobile Renting Agency, have just added two Winton touring cars to their list, making seven in all. These people are doing a good business, as will be noted by the number of cars they have recently purchased.

Dr. F. K. Ainsworth has sold his White Stanhope and purchased a White touring car. The machine is painted White and it makes a striking showing. Dr. Ainsworth is frequently seen in it, and is enjoying the new car immensely.

Last week, Mr. Meyers, of Salinas, purchased one of the new 1904 Buckboards, and together with a friend, started in the rain to drive it to Salinas by way of San Juan Hill. The next day the Sunset Automobile Company received the following message on a postal card:

Salinas, Mar. 29, 1904.—Sunset Automobile Co., San Francisco. Gentlemen: Made San Juan Hill in a blinding rain storm without any aid.

MEYERS & BUTLER.

Those who drove expensive touring cars on the recent run to Del Monte, over the San Juan Hill, will appreciate what this performance of the Buckboard means.

Mr. W. T. Robertson, of Alameda, is enjoying the splendid spring weather in his Winton touring car. On Thursday, March 31st, he took a party of friends from Oakland to San Jose, by way of Niles, making the trip in one hour and forty-five minutes. The return trip, over the regular route, was made in the record time of one hour and thirty-five minutes. Mr. Robertson reports the roads dry, but rather rough in some places.

Mr. C. O. Widholm is the latest to engage in the renting business in San Francisco, with a White touring car. This quiet, easy riding car is becoming very popular in this business. White cars are now being run in rent service by C. O. Widholm, Ed. Calif, Bert Dingley, W. F. Brong, W. S. Arnold, George Corey and others. The White Sewing Machine Company is also renting out a limited number of its demonstration machines.

Another of the late converts to the gasoline automobile is Dr. Cunningham of Oakland, who has recently purchased a Stevens-Duryea machine from the Pioneer Automobile Company. The doctor is highly pleased with his Stevens-Duryea, and says that his out-of-the-city calls or night work are now a pleasure.

On Friday of last week a White touring car gave a series of interesting hill-climbing demonstrations in Oakland. The steepest hills in East Oakland and Linda Vista were climbed as if the machine were merely working on the level. The steep Fish Ranch grade was then ascended at a speed of twenty miles an hour.

The White Sewing Machine Company reports a flattering number of recent sales. Touring cars have been sold to Mrs. Russell Cool, San Francisco; Mrs. Robert Louis Stevenson, San Francisco; George S. Schafer, San Francisco; C. S. Watterman, Fresno, Cal.; E. B. Watterman, Fresno, Cal.; F. A. Wiggins, Salem, Oregon; R. S. Moore, San Francisco; F. W. Wolfson, Merced, Cal.; Dr. F. K. Ainsworth, San Francisco; Mr. Schute, Portland, Oregon; A. E. Poole, Los Angeles, Cal.; C. E. Runyon, Portland, Oregon; A. E. Todd, Victoria, B. C.

The new Packard four-cylinder car will arrive in the city on Monday evening by express.

The Pacific Motor Car Co. have sold a St. Louis car to Arthur Sutton.

The Association of Licensed Automobile Manufacturers claim that they are pioneers in this industry and have commercialized the gasoline vehicle by many years of development and at great cost. They are the owners of upwards of four hundred United States patents, covering many of the most important improvements and details of manufacture. Both the basic Selden patent and all other patents owned as aforesaid will be enforced against all infringers.

The American Darracq Motor Car Company is looking for a live person as a representative on the Pacific Coast. Their high grade French imported vehicles are famous throughout the world, and it will be but a short while before they will be on our highways.

Last December the Mobile Carriage Company sold a Northern runabout to James Waters of Watsonville. Mr. Christenson, the company's representative at that point, ran the car from Watsonville to San Francisco on Saturday, the cyclometer showing a distance of 156 miles. The average rate of speed was 24 miles an hour.

NABOTH'S VINEYARD.

By Robertson Trowbridge in Scribner's

My neighbor hath a little field,
 Small store of wine its presses yield,
 And truly but a slender hoard
 Its harvest brings for barn or board.
 Yet though a hundred fields are mine,
 Fertile with olive, corn and vine;
 Though Autumn piles my garners high,
 Still for that little field I sigh,
 For ah! methinks no otherwhere
 Is any field so good and fair.
 Small though it be, 'tis better far
 Than all my fruitful vineyards are,
 Amid whose plenty sad I pine—
 "Ah, would that little field were mine!"

Large knowledge void of peace and rest,
 And wealth with pining care possess—
 These by my fertile lands are meant.
 That little field is called Content.

THE CROWNING TOUCH.

By Eugene C. Dolson in New England Magazine

In girlhood's unconsidered ways,
 She walked from care apart;
 I guessed not, in those bygone days,
 The sweetness of her heart.

But while to-night, in woman wise,
 She bends her child above,
 I read in those deep, soulful eyes,
 Her depth of mother love.

THE MIDDLE GROUND.

By Katharine Warren in Century

They stood and sang of grief that comes
 In all men's hearts to dwell—
 The young, that knew not what it meant,
 The old, that knew too well.

And I, that am not young nor old,
 Sat still when they had sung,
 And shrank from growing old, and yet
 Would not again be young.

RESIGNATION.

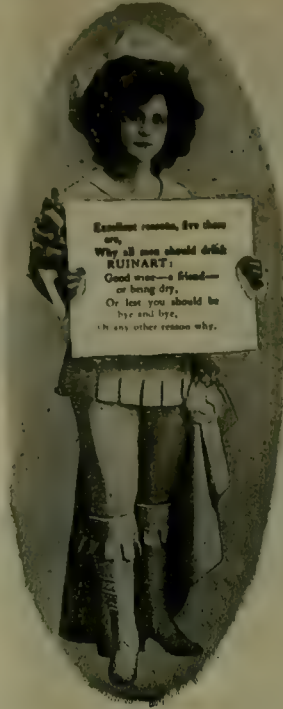

By Carrie Blake Morgan in Lippincott's

The sad-faced sister of Content is she.
 When thou hast courted sweet Content in vain,
 Hast turned thy back to Joy, thy face to Pain,
 Pale Resignation will join hands with thee.

A HERO.

By Clarence H. Urner in New England Magazine

I see a picture on the canvas of the Past—
 A lad with wondering eyes, but not afraid of Life;
 I see an image by the faithful Present cast—
 A youth elate and strong, equipped for any strife:
 The Future shows a man o'erspent, at Life dismayed,
 Who looks on Death with calm, clear vision unafraid.

The Citizens' Alliance and Labor Unions

By Herbert George

Written for the News Letter

We may have serious labor difficulties to contend with between now and the middle of May, but present indications do not favor such a conclusion. The fact is, San Francisco Labor Unions have about all the weight they can stagger under, meeting assessments levied by the "walking bosses" to augment the "strike benefit" fund. With the constant drain on the labor treasuries to meet the call for help from Los Angeles, Sacramento, Stockton, Oakland, Palo Alto and Fort Bragg (with a dozen or more bonfires in sight), Messrs. McCarthy and Cornelius will enjoy rare luck if they are able to keep their slaves in line while they pick their pockets. The truth is, the rank and file of decent Unionism already show unmistakable signs of weariness, and it is not unreasonable to suppose that the leaders are beginning to realize they have been putting up too stiff a game even for the case-hardened unionist, who is willing to give up all his earnings, but draws the line on going without food or clothing in order to meet the assessments made "to keep de b'ys a-goin, while dey fights against de open shop." There may be some trouble with the Cornelius gang of socialists during the month of May, but it won't last long. Decent Unionism is growing very weary of standing all the blame for the bad breaks of so-called socialists, who are really anarchists. Even educated, enlightened socialists are showing unmistakable signs of disgust. If the street-car strike materializes, the more conservative element of Unionism is likely to let Cornelius paddle his own canoe if all signs do not fail. There is no denying that skilled trades are tired of carrying unskilled hoodlums who get up teamsters' strikes, waiters' strikes and ash-haulers' strikes, and strikes of that class galore. Had it not been for the arbitrary methods of the ignorant leaders of that class of unions, a six-dollar man would not be working for $4 per day, nor a $2 man be on the pay-roll for $4 per day. In the good old days when unions considered themselves subject to the natural laws of supply and demand, and honest, well-meaning union men worked in "open shops" side by side with non-union men, giving a fair day's work for a fair day's pay, the constitution of the Labor Union was not regarded as an instrument superior to the constitution of the United States. In those days Union men enjoyed the sympathy and support of "public sentiment," and public sentiment backed them up "to a finish," when greedy employees sought to force unfair conditions upon those who earn their bread by the sweat of their brows. All this is changed now. Public sentiment no longer supports the man with a union card, whose union condones the acts of violence practiced against non-union men who wish to work. Public sentiment no longer supports unions that deny our boys the chance to learn a trade, nor does it take kindly to the theory of the "closed shop." The public knows the closed shop is a violation of the rights of American citizenship as guaranteed by the Federal Government in the Constitution of the United States. The public does not believe that the open shop is a question that can be arbitrated any more than can the questions of race, color, creed, political or fraternal affiliations of mankind under the Stars and Stripes. The open shop is the corner stone of American liberty, and if the question is ever brought to an issue, it will be "Free labor or a free fight," in which eighty per cent of our people (comprising merchants, doctors, dentists, lawyers, clerks, farmers, manufacturers, etc.), who can neither join the trust of capital or the trust of Union Labor, will take the side of law and order and good Government. Suppose a foreign foe were to appear at the entrance of Golden Gate to destroy our city, how many union men could be found in our State militia or in our regular army or navy ready to defend our city. Go ask Cornelius or McCarthy. Unions that forbid their members joining the State soldiery can not expect much comfort from public sentiment. The claim is made that the militia is used to shoot down strikers. Why should strikers assume unlawful attitudes, ignore the courts and seek to take the law in their own hands. Surely some one is making a serious mistake, or else a show of military force would not be necessary to overcome unlawful force. It should be plain to any one in San Francisco why the police authorities do not keep the peace in labor strikes, and it ought not take a wizard to guess why the Hall of Justice defends the Union law-breakers. It is this sort of thing that has brought into existence that mighty organized force that is now sweeping the country from one end of it to the other, known as the Citizens' Alliance. There is no effect without a cause. Union radicalism has at last brought a mighty resisting force that cannot be downed. It is an American movement, started in America by an American who believes in American institutions, and it stands for the rights of American citizens who can speak the English language, and who vote, fight and pay taxes to maintain law and order. If the radical element of San Francisco Unionism desires to test its power on the Coast, it is up to Cornelius to roll his hoop. His kind may own the municipality and possibly Pardee, as they claim, but one thing is certain—they don't quite control the Government at Washington, that still lives, thank God, and stands for all the people and not for any particular church, creed, political belief, nor for any Labor Union, but for all. There may be a strike in San Francisco, but that feature of it that means broken arms, intimidation and violence will not be tolerated any longer than it will require to get at the peace authorities that will maintain law and order. The last issue of the local labor paper gave the unions some very good advice when it said "No union is any stronger than the public sentiment that sustains it." Public sentiment in San Francisco does not countenance violence, as the phenomenal growth of the Citizens' Alliance fully attests. Labor and capital must work together in harmony or go to destruction individually. Wise men will counsel moderation and justice. The hot-heads should be relegated to the rear. Unions have the right to organize and maintain their unions; so have those who belong to Citizens' Alliances. The Federal Government guarantees this privilege, but neither the Alliance nor the Unions have any right to say that none but Alliance members or Union men shall be denied the God-given right to earn a living. San Francisco is unionized very thoroughly, but it does not compare with the thoroughness of the unionization that once existed in Denver when everybody wore union labels, ate union labels in their bread, and displayed union signs in the shop windows. People who live in Denver today grant unions the right to better their conditions, working and sanitary, shorter hours and secure better pay if they can do so without lawlessness and violence, but nobody in that city now wears the inverted boycott, better known as the union label, nor do the business men of Colorado's metropolis permit union signs to be displayed in windows—and all this in one short year. Surely, California has nothing to fear. Its Unions have not three dozen cold-blooded murders and assassinations to their credit as the unions of Colorado have. Taken as a whole, the Union men of California are good citizens who mean to do right. The leaders of California unions need a little trimming up, and the chances are the unions will do the work without calling upon the Citizens' Alliance for aid. The Citizens' Alliance is not in the business of "busting up" unions, as tricky leaders claim, nor does it seek to pose as anything but a liberty-loving, peace-advocating institution that sustains the constructive side of life and frowns upon the distinctive side. The members of the Federated employers and alliances now number fully as many as the unions. They are as well organized and can raise as much money. Why not recognize this fact and get together like men and think out the problems that visit commercialism instead of trying to shoot it out or hate it out. We are all God's children and all off the same piece of cloth. None of us can escape the results of lob-sided justice or false economics, nor can we stand in the way of progress. The law of growth and evolution cannot be interrupted by the pin-heads of this world, who fancy they know it all and seek to make the people accept conditions they are not prepared to accept simply because they do not understand them. Reforms come when they are needed, and they usually move on schedule time. Most of us love to reform a neighbor and forget to reform ourselves. The greatest reformation is that reformation that begins under one's own hat. There are religious people who have yet to learn what righteousness is; there are intellectual people who have yet to learn what enlightenment is, and there are Alliance and Labor leaders who are good hot-air artists, who have yet to learn what leadership means. Let the people lay aside false leaders and cling to that side which means peace, protection, and happiness. Let us be tolerant and try to remember that the world is made up of all sorts and conditions of people, and that each and every one is trying to live up to his or her highest conception of truth and succeeds fairly well in wabbling in the right direction. Enlightenment is a plant of slow growth. Let us not lose faith in mankind. Usually the world is nearer right than we individually are. Let us be patient, but remember that eternal vigilance is the price of liberty. Come! Let us reason together.

Lucullus would have licked his lips with pleasure after a meal at Moraghan's Oyster House in the California Market. And Lucullus was a Judge of good cheer. He knew the oyster, and at Moraghan's he would have said: "Thou art mine oyster," and never more would have roamed.

—The carpet becomes very dirty in winter, but this can easily be remedied by sending it to Spaulding's Carpet Cleaning Works, 353 Tehama street. There the carpet is cleansed from every particle of dirt without any injury to the fabric, and is returned looking as fresh and new as when first put down.

"LITTLE MOTHERS."

The "Little Mothers," bright little girls from the homes south of Market street, are having another day in the country, this time at Mt. Tamalpais. Sixty of the bright little faces shining out from under sixty snow-white caps, were at the ferry depot this morning for the early boat. They will spend the day romping over the green grass and come home at night happy and content as were ever a lot of youngsters.

Since this training school was opened at 942 Harrison street, four years ago, the good women who have taken an active interest in the work have managed to take the little ones several times on these outings, where they might enjoy the bright sunshine and pure air, away from the dingy surroundings in the narrow streets in which they live.

Each summer they have been taken to their country home, the homestead of the late Judge Pringle near San Ramon. This year the outing will be on the Russian River country. It is in this section where Mrs. Sheppard and her associates are now negotiating for the purchase of a tract of land for a permanent summer home for the children.

When this good work was undertaken the object was to admit the little girls who were spending their days in drudgery, most of them in unsanitary home surroundings, and their evenings in the rough amusements of the streets. They were gathered into the training school and taught housework, cooking, sewing and laundry work. The school is fitted up as a model for the moderate purse, and so to these "Little Mothers" is a practical object lesson in itself. Many of the girls have found employment in homes of the city as result of this school, and have proven most competent. In short, the school is making model young women of girls who will make good wives and housekeepers. What might have been the result in the lives of the four hundred girls if they had not been brought under the influence of the school is not necessary to consider. They might have become good women. They might not. Under the influence of the training school they have been taken from the streets and taught useful things and refinement. The management shows results.

The Reverend Dr. Fourthly was reading the morning lesson: "Doth not even nature itself teach you," he said, "that if a man have long hair it is a shame unto him?" Whereupon Cactus Bill, who happened to be in town that day and had gone to church for the first time in twenty-five years, fingered his revolver ominously but thought better of it, and avenged himself by withholding the $5 gold piece he had intended to drop into the basket when it came around.

The Political Situation

An event in no wise connected with politics is likely to have a very decided effect on the political situation in Santa Clara County and incidentally on that of the State, since the persons whom it most effects have been mentioned for both the positions of Governor and Senator. Every one who knows anything of politics in California has heard of the Hayes Brothers and of their successful fight with Johnnie Mackenzie, the erstwhile boss of Santa Clara County. The Hayes are very wealthy, their income being a thousand dollars a day, it is said, and they have a wealthy mother, a charming and intellectual old lady, who devotes most of her time to religious topics. She is the founder of a denomination of her own, and preaches every Sunday to a congregation, which if it is small, is select. She formerly had a church of her own, in which she held her services, but the edifice recently burned down, and now she uses the Unitarian Church for her Sunday gatherings. Last Sunday she undertook to explain how she had personally reached a high altitude of holiness and communion with the Deity, and then she proceeded to explain that her son, E. A. Hayes, commonly known as "Black Hayes," who sat near her on the platform, had also reached a great height religiously; that he held special intercourse with the Almighty, and was, in fact, a prophet and leader appointed to uphold her doctrines when she is gone, and to reach a height of holiness and understanding of the Divine Will accorded to few mortals. Tuesday this sermon was reported in one of the papers, and though denied in part by the son, was confirmed by the mother in an interview in the same paper Wednesday. The result in San Jose has been marvelous. Owing to the defalcation of the City Treasurer, the only Mackenzie man elected last year at the city election, the "push," alias the Mackenzieites have been practically wiped out, and Justice Lorrigan of the Supreme Court, who has long been the brains of the "push," while Mackenzie was its ostensible leader, tried to get Vic Scheller, the lawyer, to run as a candidate for Mayor this spring on the Democratic ticket, promising him the support of the "push," which was not strong enough to put up a candidate of its own. I mention this as showing how demoralized and discouraged the push was, when the report of the supernatural powers of Black Hayes was first revealed to an awe-stricken public. Now, all is changed. On every corner in San Jose you can hear the citizens declare that they do not want any supernatural leader in mundane politics, and Jim Rea is even irreverent enough to say that he "wants no spooks in his." The irreverent are busy ridiculing the pretensions of Hayes, and when a man becomes a subject of ridicule, it is almost impossible for him, even with a big bank account, to have much influence in the community. Mayor Worswick will be renominated by the Hayes faction, and will probably be elected, but he will lose hundreds of votes because of the revelations, and it will take all of Black's supernatural powers to pull him through. By the way, I am told, though not being there I do not know if it be true, that Madame Hayes declared that the defeat of Mackenzie by her son was the direct result of a revelation which she received and which she explained to them.

It is said that the publication is due to Mackenzie, or some of his followers, and Justice Lorrigan's name is mentioned in that connection also. He lives at San Jose, goes up and down from the city daily, and is shrewd enough to see what use could be made of the revelation politically. Color is lent to the statement by the fact that while the discourse was delivered to some three hundred persons Sunday, it did not appear in print before Tuesday, and meantime the Justice had had time enough to come to town and consult with friends here. It is well to remember that he is a candidate for election this fall, and that the Hayes faction would not favor him. If he could weaken them, as this move undoubtedly has done, the result would be greatly to his advantage. I may add that E. A. Shumate, formerly principal of the Night School, but who was removed by the Hayes' influence from the place, is to be the opponent of Mayor Worswick in the city campaign.

* * *

I was talking to John C. Lynch in the Palace Grill the other day, and he tells me that the Republicans have settled all their difficulties, and that Abe Ruef is to manage the Presidential campaign. The announcement means that the campaign will be run shrewdly and that every vote possible will be secured for Roosevelt. There are, of course, some Republicans that would prefer another leader, but as Lynch says: "We want the best General we can get, and there is no question who he is."

* * *

The Hearst boom is not what it was, and there is a decided hedging on the part of a number of distinguished gentlemen who not long ago were shouting with loud voices for the hero of Sausalito. The trouble is this: It looks now as though the conservative element in the party has been aroused, and that the Democrats of the South will stand behind New York in its support of Parker. If that should prove correct, the supporters of Hearst at St. Louis will be persona non grata with a vengeance if Parker is nominated and elected, and Phelan and Coleman and the fellows that are anti-Hearst to-day will control the distribution of patronage, and will be the local representatives of the White House. It is a very difficult position for the Democrats who want to ride on the band wagon, a position that is none the less embarrassing that to-day their allegiance to Hearst is openly attributed on the streets and around the hotels to his check book, and not to his popularity. It is a stigma that will stick to them in the future, and which will undoubtedly keep several of them out of office when the Democrats have any to give.

It is noticeable that a number of the Democratic editors of the State are coming to San Francisco, calling at Democratic (alias Hearst) headquarters and going home filled with the assurance that Hearst is going to be elected as well as nominated. Mark Plaisted, of the Fresno Democrat, has just made the pilgrimage to the local political Mecca and returned home after giving out an interview in which he lauds Hearst to the skies. Those who know Mark best will be least likely to believe that his enthusiasm is entirely disinterested, and that his visit will result in substantial dividends to the eminent gentlemen who are stockholders in his paper. He will no doubt at once buy another Mergenthaler and name it "William Randolph Hearst," a fact that contains a hint which the country editors and newspaper proprietors of the State should not neglect.

* * *

I notice that Colusa Green, the Democrat of Democrats, who was once State Treasurer of this commonwealth, thanks to Governor Budd, and who has been reported as willing to support Hearst if he is nominated regardless of his dislike of the man's record, is getting in line with Leake and Barry, and in his latest issue of the Colusa Sun, hints very broadly that if Hearst is nominated he will not support him. It is of course, quite an effort for Will Green to take such a position, but he loves the Democratic Party too well to be willing to help bury it, which is what the nomination of Hearst would mean.

* * *

I understand a Parker club will shortly be inaugurated here, and that it will include a number of very prominent Democrats among its members. Those who have the movement on foot are only waiting until they are certain that New York will endorse Parker, and then they will at once call a meeting and come out boldly for him. Meantime there will be anti-Hearst tickets at the Democratic primaries in every ward and precinct in the city on May 4th, and if New York endorses Parker, the antis will mean pro-Parker.

Hamilton A. Bauer, Senator from the 22d District and son of Emile Bauer of the San Francisco News Company, is out for Congressman for the 4th Congressional District, and hopes to get the Republican nomination, believing he can defeat Livernash.

The police say the police judges are responsible for the unpunished crime of San Francisco, and the judges return the compliment. One finds it not at all difficult to agree with both sides to this controversy.

That English preacher of prominence who denies the inspiration of the Scriptures, calling the Bible a "manual of morality," is being roasted in the newspapers instead of at the stake, wherefrom we deduce the progress of civilization.

THE FORCE OF ARMS.

Thoughtful Americans are watching with anxiety the morbid conditions that disturb the internal economy of the State of Colorado. Here the limited military authority of the commonwealth is coming into direct and painful conflict with the legal authority resident in the courts. The issue is the labor question, not in any economic phase, but in a cruder and more difficult aspect, involving open resistance to and defiance of constituted authority. For years Colorado has been a hot-bed of the most virulent form of unionism, because of its vast mining interests, bringing within its border a class of men easily led into the error of violent opposition to the law and its ministers. For years, it has had a National Guard not to be despised as a factor in the working out of the problem of peace for all and oppression to none. As nearly as can be ascertained an unfortunate incident is that the acting commander of the State's troops is a man of ardent bravery and complete fidelity, but ineffably pompous and pig-headed, talkative where he should be silent, threatening where he should be tactful and firm. The State courts, or some of them, have swung into line with the leaders of labor, and only the extreme of patience and good sense on the part of an executive whose lot no one envies, can stave off a most regrettable conflict. The prospect of federal intervention is by no means remote.

Right or wrong, the labor leaders, whose wisdom, if not their patriotism, is to be doubted, will best serve their cause by yielding to the military pressure by counseling their followers to such a course as will leave no room or excuse for activity on the part of the militia, and by trusting to time and to a fair-minded people for adequate justice and redress.

Here, where there is the daily menace of a situation not unlike that which is troubling Colorado—we mean the threatened car strike, with its probability of an ultimate appeal to State or to nation for an armed adjustment—the labor leaders ought to consider well what is happening in our sister State and move with caution lest they precipitate a struggle full of the possibilities of evil for San Francisco and California.

AFTER THE SCHOOL TEACHERS.

The Board of Health is making war upon the microbes of Chinatown; it has given notice to the germs of the telephone; the milk men have also been warned; the school children are to be subjected to daily inspection, and now, with the assistance of the Board of Education, the city's doctors propose to find out whether there are any school teachers whose sight has become weakened during the course of years, or whose hearing has been dulled by the monotonous droning of hundreds of pupils. Such teachers will be marked for sacrifice. The Health Board is certainly undertaking a most extensive campaign, which, prima facie, appears to find its causes in a most enthusiastic desire to improve those conditions over which the Board may have jurisdiction. No one has any fault to find with any of the propositions, considered solely upon its merits; but it is to be regretted that the Board of Health does not possess the entire confidence of the people. The exposures of the practices in the emergency hospitals are of too recent occurrence to be yet forgotten. The proposition to submit school teachers to medical examinations by the "volunteer" doctors, smacks somewhat of a scheme to find a way to get rid of instructors who have lost their pull. The public schools are part of the State system, and the Board of Health, which is a purely municipal affair, has no business with them. Nor can the consent of the Board of Education to the entrance of the doctors into the schools give the latter any authority therein. The physicians are in the schools only by sufferance, and any recommendations they may make upon teachers can in no legal sense be received as official.

There may be teachers who have become superannuated; there may be others who, through sickness, have lost temporarily the energy needed for success in instruction; there are doubtless many who, at times, are on the verge of nervous collapse. But it is not the business of the Board of Health to pass upon them. That matter lies absolutely and alone in the province of the Board of Education. The State school law provides the only manner in which teachers may be dismissed. If the Board of Education could fall back upon a long report, signed by several of the assistants of the Board of Health, showing why, in the opinion of the latter, a certain teacher should be dismissed, the School Directors might find it easier to make vacancies than at present. Just as a coincidence, positions as school teachers are much in demand, and numerous vacancies would be hailed with joy by certain people. The public school teachers are the most deserving, the hardest worked, and in many ways the least appreciated by the city's employees. They enjoy the public confidence, which can hardly be said of those who may undertake to condemn them. Heretofore, they have had sufficient political influence to ward off attacks. It behooves them now to get at the bottom of this sudden interest taken in their physical well-being. If the purpose is an honest one, not much harm can come of it, but it is much to be feared that this sudden streak of paternalism is fraught with danger to those who have no friends at court.

PORTFOLIO OF THE U. S. NAVY.

Secretary Moody is to be commended for his forthright opposition to a Congressional suggestion of a general staff for the navy like that which "advises" the Secretary of War with regard to the army. It has been common knowledge ever since the opening of the Spanish-American war, and it may have been known long before, that to the experts the navy is better organized, more efficiently directed and far more effectively disciplined than the army. In a measure this may be due to the obvious wide differences between the machine that fights on land, a thousand-legged thing crawling on its belly, and the fighting machine of the sea.

Ten thousand tons of steel
Sky-shooting through the brine.

From Appomatox to Santiago the army of the United States was a fiction. The rapidity with which it was converted into a ponderable and forceful fact was a thing for other nations to wonder at and for this nation to be proud of. In most of that same thirty years the navy had been developing steadily, in personnel and equipment, to a state of instant readiness and ample preparedness. The very Congressmen who had lifted their voices against a "great standing army" had won re-election upon their eloquent pleas for a "great standing navy." We would brook no idle legions marking time through the decades of peace, but we were comforted by every four million dollar battleship that slid off the ways. The difference of national sentiment as to army and as to navy was—and, in a degree, still is—a curious anomaly. Fortunately, a comparatively trifling affair of arms has changed public opinion and we hear less than we did, in and out of Congress, about the evil of a big army in time of peace. Matters are now nearly equalized between the two great branches of the military arm.

But there still remains a condition of things at the center of the army's administration which keeps it below the right limit of efficiency—a condition chargeable largely to political and other kindred influences operating to breed favoritism and a host of smaller allied evils. The navy has been almost entirely protected from this condition. Its scandals, aside from occasional jobbery in the building of ships, have been few and promptly and severely dealt with. Its effectiveness and its capacity for taking care of itself and of the enemies of our peace, are unquestionable.

To place extensive powers, even of an advisory character, in the hands of a general naval staff, would be to expose the navy to the ills that afflict the army and to invite them. Secretary Moody is right when he says that no board should be created which would usurp the powers attaching to the portfolio of that department.

UNCULTIVATED MANKIND.

Curiously enough, in all the progress of mankind the one thing the making of which science has not touched and improved is mankind itself. This passing reflection is inspired by the recurrence of an event which is held by some to be of importance and consequence—the annual dog show. In it will be exhibited the results of scientific study and experiment applied to the great and mysterious re-productive forces of Nature, the fruit of selection and training carefully carried on through some centuries of intelligent effort. We shall see how marvelously man has wrought out the betterment of his friend, the dog, eliminating, combining, marking and making use of the laws of heredity until that family of the beasts with which man is in closest touch has risen toward four-footed perfection with truly astonishing rapidity. The snarling, wolfish creature of the caves and fens has been trained and bred into a rare degree of usefulness and of intelligent comradeship and differentiated into widely varying types of beauty. Artificially man has done for the dog in a comparatively few years what Nature unaided could have accomplished only in ages if at all.

But there has never been—and probably never will be—a man show. We shall continue to cultivate our pets, shaping their bodies and their intelligences to our own views of what constitutes dog perfection. We shall go on learning how to hurry the silent influences of creation and to direct their operation for our pleasure and our profit, but never for our own advancement. Save for the ameliorating and uplifting that comes from a church or a college here and a gymnasium there, sporadic centers of man-culture, chance-founded and chance-sought, we are as we were a thousand years ago. Carlo, Don and Fido on the show bench are as unlike and as superior to their ancestors of a score of generations ago as we are unlike and superior to them. Their breeding for a hundred years has been a matter of vast thought and of experiment: ours has been a matter of happen-chance, of environment, of impulse, a purely natural selection. The dog of the bench show is strikingly illustrative of what discrimination in breeding may do: his master illustrates how slowly Nature unassisted moves to her own molding and shaping.

It will not do any particular good, but neither will it be productive of evil if, when you go to the dog-show, you think what a different kind of being you might have been had your ancestors, in the "dark backward and abysm of Time," turned their attention to the breeding of men instead of dogs.

HEAVEN OR THE PENITENTIARY.

In the land of the Mormons there is a weeping and wailing and gnashing of teeth. The General Conference of the Mormon Church has formally declared that all true believers who may now take plural wives will be excommunicated, and from them will be withdrawn the mighty influence of the church. Whereat there is much travail in Zion. Surely it is a most unpleasant predicament into which the modern Saints have been forced. If they would gain that paradise of which the original faith had the vision, it is apparent, it is their bounden duty to take unto themselves numerous wives, so that their seed may not perish from the earth; but should they do so, Uncle Sam will fall upon them with all the fierceness of the devastating Assyrian, scatter their folds to the four winds, and place them in jail. Meanwhile, the elders of the church will look on calmly, refuse to interfere and lighten the affliction of the sufferers with the comforting assurance that they are martyrs in a holy cause. President Smith has declared his belief that polygamy is a divine institution, given into the keeping of his ancestor by the power of revelation. Upon his return to Salt Lake from Washington, he gloried among the faithful in the fact that to him had been given the opportunity of asserting the divinity of the church and its institutions in the face of the scoffing queries of the hard-headed investigators. But Mr. Smith is a man of much worldly wisdom. His visit to the capital convinced him that the laws of the United States must be obeyed in Utah, divine revelations to the contrary notwithstanding. So the head of the church has given out the word, and the expansive hearts of his followers are saddened accordingly. The Congressional Committee has issued subpoenas for many prominent polygamists, and it would seem that at last fear of the law has found its way into the Mormon stronghold. It may be the beginning of the end. With polygamy forbidden and punished, Mormonism is on the wane. Polygamy was its foundation stone. With that removed, the structure will soon totter to its fall.

It is a pretty commentary on the management of the Emergency Hospital when the injured would rather take chances than undergo treatment at the hands of the surgeon in charge. Three such cases occurred during this week, and in each case the injured person, battered as he was, had sense enough left to beg to be excused from the attendance of the city sawbones.

During February and March of this year, the U. S. Mint in this city coined $54,409,500, the largest sum ever coined by any mint in the world in the same length of time. None of it got away, either, although Solomon, Perry and the Nagles were in town all the time. Dear, dear, what chances even the best of us miss sometimes!

LIVERNASH IS REBUKED.

That E. J. Livernash, who represents Mr. Hearst, and presumably the people of the Fourth Congressional District of this State in the House of Representatives, should have taken advantage of a favorable opportunity to insult another member of Congress, will surprise no one acquainted with the Livernash methods. That he quickly withdrew into his shell when the other Representative assured him that he assumed a great deal if he assumed that he (Livernash) was a gentleman, will also be taken as a matter of course, for the ability to withdraw under fire is one of the leading characteristics of the member from the Fourth District. When he attacked Bartlett, of Georgia, Livernash woke up the wrong man. Those men from the South have a way of hurling back an insult, and following it quickly with an offer of personal violence that may well put fear into the heart of a man of wind and words. Livernash, it may be admitted, possesses considerable ability, but he lacks a saving grace of humor, but for which he would see himself as others see him—a somewhat ridiculous figure, beating with his tongue upon the drum of his vocabulary, to the end that "me and Hearst" may be great in the land. Hardly had he become firm in his seat when he tried to introduce a resolution charging the President with all sorts of high crimes and misdemeanors. Upon that occasion, Mr. Speaker sat him down so hard that chips of brass fell from the Livernash cheek. But as soon as he regained his assurance, he was again knocking at the door of notoriety, a practice he has indulged for years, occasionally to the physical discomfiture of those who may have been in the way of his missiles. His arrogance and irascibility have done more to gain opponents for Hearst in his own party than any other elements in Willie's Falstaffian campaign for the Presidency. For this reason, mayhap, the election of Livernash may be considered, philosophically, as a blessing in disguise.

SAN FRANCISCO'S SAM PARKS.

It seems passing strange that the Carmen's Union, which contains so many bright and intelligent men, should not see that they are being made cats'-paws of by Richard Cornelius. If he can carry his scheme of allowing only members of the union to work on the United Railroads he will have every one of them at his mercy. If they undertake to criticize him they may expect the fate which befell Dingwell and his friends who committed "lese majeste," and had to go to the courts to obtain reinstatement under the great Cornelius. Any man who does not pay his dues promptly, any man who is not completely pleased with all that Cornelius does, who does not yield his manhood and independence to this labor Czar, who does not contribute out of his hard-earned money to keep the agitator in champagne and cigars, will be deprived of an opportunity to earn a living.

That Cornelius is no true friend of union labor was shown when he stood by Livernash, who openly defied the Clerks' and Barbers' Unions. Does that not show to any thinking man that he is in the labor union business for what there is in it for himself, and not for the men who are allowing themselves to be his dupes? If he really believed in the principles he pretends to advocate he would have stood by the Clerks and Barbers, but no; he knew on which side his bread was buttered, and he stood by the man who openly insulted those unions, ignoring their boycotts and insulted their committees. Why was Dingwell expelled at a secret meeting from the Carmen's Union? Was it not because he denounced Cornelius for selling out the union to the Examiner and its clique? But let any of the men who are supporting Cornelius in ease and luxury go to their headquarters in the Emma Spreckels Building and see the style and airs the fellow puts on. The visitors wait in an uncarpeted room on benches, while his henchman comes out, and in an insulting voice wants to know: "What's ye bisniss?" If Cornelius condescends to see you, you get into an inner room furnished more luxuriously than any banker's office in San Francisco, and there you see the great man. Who pays for all of this? Either the Carmen or some one else, and if some one else it is because Cornelius is using the Carmen to hold up some one. That this whole business is a case of graft is evident. Why do not the Carmen see what is so clear before their eyes, and at least put at the head of their union a man who is devoted to unionism entirely, and who is not the well-known hireling of a political debaucher? How can they expect the Clerks and Barbers to sympathize with them when they have shown through their leader their contempt of their fellow unionists? Meantime, Cornelius might profitably read the biography of that other traitor to labor, Sam Parks, formerly of New York, but now of Sing Sing.

Once upon a time, W. F. Whittier went fishing. He caught a lot of rheumatism. Some one told him the best cure for rheumatism was massage. He was properly massaged. The massage artist has been on his trail ever since. She even camps upon his doorstep; she will not be denied. All she wants is about $25,000. All of which shows that it is a dangerous thing—to go fishing.

In Pennsylvania, the other day, an air tank exploded, killing one man and injuring six others. Politicians will please take notice.

How San Francisco Looks to Me

By Fernaud Travers, Tourist

No. 16

I really trust, my dear News Letter, that you will pardon me when I tell you this is about the last, if not the very last, letter I shall send you. I am in a bally lot of trouble—of course not any financial difficulty, and I think I shall return at once. You know, the chap at the club who said he could get me the house place to live in tells me that the chap that owns it is in stocks or something of that kind, a broker sort of fellow, and he has been caught short on the market, and so is sort of on his uppers, don't you know, and can't take a run over to Europe, for he is short of the quid. I am disappointed in not getting the house and being able to show you over here how to entertain correctly.

Another thing in distaste muchly is the fact that Roger, my man, is bullying me for an advance of wages. The beggar can't figure out the difference between dollars and pounds sterling. Dollars seem big to him. You know I would like to keep him, but a dear, sweet old chum at one of your clubs has seen how correct a gentleman's man he is, and I am really afraid he has thieved Roger from me. I told Roger, however, that if he stayed here he ought to get lots of money from the other fellow, so I may keep him yet, but without a living place of my own and without Roger to attend me the life out here would be unlivable. I am truly glad to have come, and I may return, but if I do it will be to remain. I like your climate, I like your gentlewomen, but really the chaps are impossible.

You will, I am sure, let me state that I think I have been of inestimable and incalculable benefit to your people since I have been among them. You will concede this, I am sure. I know I have noticed an improvement in manners since I commenced to show you how San Francisco looked to me.

I really think I should be more appreciated than I am, if that is possible. In the meantime, I am instructing Roger to pack the trunks, and if I can get the accommodations I want on the railway, I am liable to trust myself to the negro porter between here and New York. After the coaching I have given Roger I shall smile while I am on the railway to think of how Roger will abuse the American chap who hired him away from me. I have arranged matters so that Roger can reach me by cable when he gets tired of the new master, and I'll wager a pony Roger catches me in New York before I sail for Liverpool. If I have the time, don't you know, before I leave, I will write again. I must, of course, pay my P. P. C.'s and a few other calls of a different social nature, which will be hard to me, but really and truly, don't you know, I never encouraged a young lady in my life, for of all things there was never anything of the marrying man about

A TRUSTY TIP ON THINGS THEATRICAL.

ORPHEUM—Extraordinarily good. You should see the Mortons.
COLUMBIA—Anna Held—Mam'selle Napoleon—Superbly staged musical comedy.
GRAND—Mrs. Fiske—Good. In combination bill.
ALCAZAR—"Aristocracy."—An amusing and well balanced production
CENTRAL—"In the Hands of the Enemy."—Fizz, boom, bang.
FISCHER'S—"Kismet"—Musical and sparkling comedy—Go.
TIVOLI—"The Beggar Student."—Good.
GHUTES—An all around good show.
MECHANICS' PAVILION—Dog Show.
TIVOLI—Schumann—Heink farewell—Sunday afternoon.
CALIFORNIA—McFadden's Flats—Very Flat.

Bronson Howard is credited with a finesse in writing, with a keen appreciation of all that goes with cutting sarcasm, with a deep knowledge of the things mechanical necessary to a good stage production, but I will bet four dollars and ten cents that he never intended the misfit clothes of the Marquis of Normandale, neither did he intend that character to descend to the level of melodrama of the Folsom street variety. Mr. Gattan, who did the part in a "hand me down" Prince Albert, was sadly handicapped by the length of his trousers. Mr. Gattan has a good voice, and we believe that is all. Probably in some other play he may be able to develop something else.

Miss Crosby did her Virginia Stockton with a most remarkable lack of all feeling, and the Sheridan Stockton of that hitherto splendid actor, Mr. Hilliard, was colorless and unamusing.

"Aristocracy" is a strange medley of remarkably poor dialogue in the first, second and fourth acts, and a splendid, well-sustained piece of playwriting in the third. The situation when Diana, the wife of the seventeen times millionaire Californian, is hypnotized by the villain, Prince Emil Von Haldenwald of Vienna, is very strong in many ways. Miss Block made a splendid Diana, and once again showed that as an emotional actress she has but very few equals on the American stage.

Mr. Durkin's Jefferson Stockton was good, without being remarkable, while the Haldenwald of Mr. Conness was really out of the ordinary. Mr. Mason's Caryston-Leigh was easy and natural, and it occurs to me that one fool Englishman in one play is amply sufficient for all needs. Once again that clever young man, Mr. John B. Maher, has shown his extreme versatility. His Duc de Volante enjoys distinction because it is not overdone—simply a clever, natural piece of work. We must not forget Miss Starr and her infectious laughter. She was charming, as usual.

Mrs. Fiske has just found out that in past performances nine-tenths of her audience has not heard her. Some one, a reader of the News Letter most probably, has given her this valuable tip, and I see that the Daily Booster says the newly acquired "articulation is perfect." It is better than it has been at any time during this engagement. The performance of "A Doll's House" was a generally good one, and with the improved enunciation of the star left little to be desired. Max Figman deserves special mention as the best example I have seen in many moons of doleful and inane potato mouthing.

The four Mortons at the Orpheum are the best fun-makers I have seen in a very long time. Samuel would make a horse laugh, and Kittie is very clever. The children, Clara and Paul, are very bright and the team work of the four is excellent. It is in the trio, however, that they bring down the house. This is Irish wit without vulgarity. The young man's cockney-dude song is a very good one, and he and his sister are able descendants of nimble-footed parents. This is taking it for granted, of course, that the programme tells no lies, and they are related. Flo Adler is the only poor bit of work on the programme. She has a very good stage presence, and presuming on this, she murders "Navajo" and other songs nightly without compunction to the accompaniment of a pale young man with a morphine cast of countenance. He sings from the audience.

"McFadden's Flats" is given at the California. That's what it is—flats and no harmony.

There is a sensational escape from prison and a battle for life at the Central in "In the Hands of the Enemy." The audience is an enthusiastic one, as usual. The Chief of Police of Carthage, as portrayed by Mr. Harry Shumer is given a make-up that is a replica in caricature of the Mayor of San Francisco. In order to make the resemblance more striking and life-like, the author has made the Chief of Police accept a bribe of $100,000.

"Kismet" is still holding the boards at Fischer's. Lovers of good music and clean comedy have been more than pleased with this bright opera. It was an ambitious thing to put on at such a small house, and it is pleasing to think that the management has not lost any money on the enterprise.

Schumann-Heink, after a very successful season at the Alhambra, finishes up with a concert at the Tivoli. She will give an entirely new programme, and there is a feast in store for music-lovers.

"The White Squadron" will be the bill at the Central for the coming week. It deals with the combined forces of the world at sea, assembled at Rio Janeiro, and there to deliver an ultimatum to the Brazilian Government, because of various outrages committed by the war-like people of the interior. The Congress of Navies will give an opportunity for color.

Richard Mansfield is heading this way, and will be at the Columbia some time next month. Now look out for all kinds of yellow stunts by the jaundiced papers. Mansfield is proper prey for the hysterical dailies, and they never fail either in rapturous admiration or in vitriolic invective. Mansfield is unfortunately independent, and this results in fawning praise or effluvial criticism, according to the dictates of the "business department."

Fischer's will not close until after "Chow-Chow." There are to be one hundred more seats on the ground floor when the architects get through with the remodeling. "Chow-Chow" is described by the press agent as "real pure fun." Unfortunately, he makes a comparison that is odious. He says it resembles Weber & Field's. Now, that is not real pure fun. It's fun, but it is not pure. However, the Fischer productions have never smacked of the vulgarity of Weberfield, so we may hope the press agent aforesaid is wrong in his forecast. "Kismet" was such a good show that the old patronage of the little play-house flocked again, and if "Chow-Chow" is anywhere near the standard, we may look for crowded houses.

The Four Cohans will hold the boards for two weeks as the next attraction at the Columbia. They will appear in George M. Cohan's "Running for Office," a laughable farce.

Maude Adams is starring under a large guarantee by Gottlob, Marx & Company, who are directing a trip in conjunction with Charles Frohman.

Henry Miller and Margaret Anglin open at the Hudson on Monday night in a revival of "Camille."

Sunday night will see the last of the phenomenally successful engagement of Anna Held as "Mam'selle Napoleon."

Millocker's "Beggar Student" is on for a long run at the Tivoli. Want of space prevents the extended notice the elaborate mounting demands. I shall handle the subject in the News Letter of next week.

The old Fischer favorites, from Kolb and Dill to Hope and Emerson, will follow Mrs. Fiske at the Grand. There is sure to be a crowded house at every performance.

Mrs. Fiske will appear in the curtain raiser, this afternoon and to-night, "A Bit of Old Chelsea," preceding Act 2 of "Hedda Gabler," Act 2 of "Divorcons," Act 1 of "A Doll's House," and Act 4 of "Tess of the D'Urbervilles." The admirers of the little lady will fill the house, as this is a feast they will not again enjoy in a long time.

The chorus in the "Beggar Student" at the Tivoli is creating great enthusiasm. Dora de Fillipe's "Bronislava" is like a bounding rubber ball covered with spangles.

TOWN CRIER

The policeman's voice was soft,
And the policeman's speech was low,
"Five dollars—hand them out to me
And I will let you go!"
The prisoner heaved a sigh—
He ceased from being pale;
He handed out five dollars—
And he didn't go to jail.

The judge's voice was soft,
The judge's speech was low,
He said: "Tell me the pull you have
And I will let you go."
He handed up his card;
The judge bowed and grew pale.
The prisoner said he'd pardon him—
And he didn't go to jail.

Government officials are obliged occasionally to play strange roles. Thus, it takes more than an ordinary amount of imagination to fancy Collector Stratton as Poundmaster, and Alexander Crow, who rejoices in the magnificent and polysyllabic title of Horticultural Commissioner as the presiding genius of what, in order to keep up with his title, we must call a lethal chamber for stray quadrupeds. All the force of the entire department, was directed with energy and weight against a King Charles spaniel, belonging to the daughter of Colonel Mears, an officer of the United States Army who gave his life in the service of his country. Much machinery was set in motion to compass the death of the little dog of the daughter of the dead officer, and in view of the postal frauds, it is pleasant to know that the greatest energy and promptitude was shown, and that no one has so far even been accused of taking bribes in connection with it. Special mention must be made of the Honorable Fred Stratton, Collector of the Port, who carried on the correspondence with the Washington officials, of Inspector Gallagher, who intercepted the terrier and to whose keenness of vision the successful termination of the affair is largely due, and to Alexander Crow, Horticultural Commissioner, who administered chloroform to what the newspapers sentimentally term "the pet."

The feminine footpad now graces the scene, and an additional terror is added to the life suburban. The newspaper accounts of the gallantry of Berkeley women in standing off footpads has naturally given rise to the deduction that if a woman can be a match for a footpad, a little footpadding might be an acceptable occupation for the more desperate. At any rate, she has taken it up, and has shown a commendable good sense in beginning by holding up her fellow-woman. These female highway women had better devote their attention exclusively to their own sex, for the mere wearer of trousers is so held up by the fair sex all the time that it is doubtful whether a female footpad would be able to get anything. In some cases she would not even get the trousers, as they are frequently worn by the dominant partner in the firm matrimonial.

The Town Crier can cry praise as well as blame where an opportunity for praise really exists. Such is afforded by the open air concerts in the new amphitheatre at Berkeley. The idea is in every way to be commended. It is a good way of utilizing a beautiful place, and provides first-class entertainment for audiences of close on five thousand. I wonder what the Puritan element thinks about the idea.

There is a fine flavor of romance in the story from Fresno to the effect that two young men of the ancient and honorable borough of Sanger, having failed in their wooing, literally proceeded to take it out of the proverbial hides of the ladies who denied them the favor which they craved. To this end, having masked themselves, they proceeded to whip the girls, who were on their way home from an entertainment. The young ladies, in a true modern spirit, retaliated by a charge of battery, and a prosaic modern judge will follow matters up. The method of the Sanger swains suffers from the defect of either being too drastic or not drastic enough. The aboriginal men who followed it in prehistoric times took two precautions which these young men omitted. In the first place they never gave the lady an opportunity to refuse them, for they stunned her with a club, striking her from behind, and in the second place they always took care that the lady came into their possession, a fundamental condition in such cases, which these ignorant young men appear to have overlooked.

What fun the University is, to be sure. A week ago Professor Gayley spoke his mind to the women students in their giggling propensities; this week Professor Moses has been telling them his opinion upon their manners and their lack of respect for the commandment against stealing, and now the whole town, or at least that part of it which earns a meager and laborious living by providing students with board and lodging is to be subjected to a strict investigation, and soup, pies and the like to be analyzed and overhauled. I suppose it is all right; the students are not sufficiently bad to poison, and death by typhoid is a luxury which it is just as well to confine within as narrow limits as possible, but taking everything into consideration, it is still a matter of mystery why in the names of the muses so many of them are students. The vast majority do not seem worth saving in that capacity.

Now we shall have some Eastern and probably European comments on the curious qualities of the California literary man. In the short course of three months we have produced two prodigies with the same name, each being a wonder in his class. George Sterling, the poet, who wrote "The Testimony of the Suns," gained fame and recognition at a stroke; George Sterling, the robber, called for the resources of the Police and Fire Departments combined before he was compelled to reasonable submission to his fate. The Eastern and English papers are very sure to mix the two names, and it is going to be a little hard on the poet. But think of the comments and headings: "Literary Lawlessness in California," and the like.

Life is full of apparent contradiction, and the cross-purposes of the power which preside over things mundane are so involved and so absolutely without rational basis that it is the merest folly to trouble about them. Here last week an honest working man was caught in a noose in a rope and dangled for some time above the pavement. At the same time there was another person in this city whose presence in a noose in a rope would have been an unmixed blessing, and yet twelve men, and the existence of undeniable facts, and a cost of eighty thousand dollars to the State combined, were unable to put that head in that noose.

According to Law

There is a certain Justice of the Peace in the immediate neighborhood of San Francisco—we will call him for convenience Hon. James Wesley Hawkins, who was not very well versed in the criminal law of the State when he took office, as can readily be seen by the following, which occurred the first day he assumed his new position. This was, however, not the first official position which has been thrust upon him. For two years previous he had been president of the town club, and was considered an expert on parliamentary rules. So much so that many persons holding similar positions in nearby villages came to this "Solon" to ask his opinion on important matters involved in the more disputed points of parliamentary law.

On the day he assumed office the first case on the docket was that of a man named "Wilson, alias Peters," who had been caught red-handed in the act of breaking into the town bank.

When the defendant, Wilson, was brought into court, he was accompanied by a lawyer from Fresno, whom he had retained. The Hon. James Wesley Hawkins called the court to order. The charge of burglary was read to the prisoner. When it was concluded the attorney from Fresno arose to his feet.

"Your honor!" he said, "I move the defendant be discharged on the ground that the complaint does not state an offense against the State."

The Hon. James Wesley Hawkins cleared his throat, and in a sonorous voice asked: "Do I hear a second to this motion?"

At this point the attorney from Fresno nudged the defendant in the ribs. "I second the motion," said Wilson.

"All in favor," continued his Honor, "will make known by saying 'aye.'"

"Aye," said the defendant and his attorney in unison.

"No," screamed the prosecuting attorney who was sitting by himself in one corner of the room up to this time, but now he arose to his feet with the words: "This proceeding is preposterous."

"The ayes have it," shouted Hon. James Wesley Hawkins, "and I order the defendant discharged."

When the Army Suffered.

Some of the officers of the Marine Service at the Presidio have decided that hunger is not the best sauce. The cook, C. Nelson, at the Marine Hospital, went crazy recently, and as a result dinner had to be postponed. Here the story ends. It doesn't continue by saying who cooked the supper and how many doctors were subsequently placed on the sick list. So far only one man seems to know who cooked it and he won't tell.

Guilty of Murder.

At the Polytechnic High School in this city the students are a cosmopolitan lot. There are representatives of almost every nationality included on the roll book. Several months ago a Chinese boy named Jaw Bing came to school. His teacher in drawing was a Miss Murdock. On the first day she attempted to explain some of the minor points of art to him, but to her dismay he couldn't understand a word of English. She then asked another Chinese named Lee Toy to act as interpreter. After considerable confusion Lee informed the teacher that as Jaw came from an inland province he could not effect a means of communication. For several months Jaw has been coming to school regularly, but day in and day out, he still carried the same blank expression. Not long ago Miss Murdock perceived what a trial it was to jaw to sit and understand absolutely nothing, walked over to him and said in tender tones: "It must be very hard for you to come to school here, Jaw, where you can't understand a thing." In a moment Jaw's face lighted up, his almond eyes sparkled, and with all the feeling of the American school-boy he said: "Sure!"

Tolstoy and His Problems.

In a series of some ten essays, Mr. Aylmer Maude gives an account of the life, character and work of Tolstoy. Mr. Maude is particularly well equipped for the task which he has undertaken. He says: "Being the only Englishman who in recent years had had the advantage of intimate personal intercourse, continued over a period of some years, with Tolstoy, I hardly need an excuse for trying to share with others some of the results he helped me to reach." The various essays have several of them received the distinct and emphatic approval of the Russian recluse himself. This is valuable, as giving an authoritative expression of Tolstoy's views, which, owing to defective translations, and one thing and another, have by no means been yet clearly understood by readers in England. Mr. Maude is evidently a great admirer of his hero, but whether the reader, when he has finished the book, will share the admiration is another matter. If there is much that is fine and strong, there is much that is narrow and repugnant to reason and clean thinking. Whether the Russian hermit ever really achieves permanent fame is still, strange and wild as the statement may appear to his followers, doubtful, but there is no doubt about his abnormality and little about his unwholesomeness. But this has little to do with Mr. Maude, whose work has been very satisfactorily carried out. Students of the Master will find this little book indispensable.

Indians of the Yosemite.

In this book we have a valuable little history of the customs, traditions and legends of the Indians of the Yosemite Valley. The writer is Galen Clarke, pioneer of the Yosemite and the discoverer of the Mariposa Big Tree Grove. He is ninety years of age, and has only now been persuaded to write the story, which he knows so well and which is possessed of interest not only to the people of California but to those who are interested in the American aborigines. The book is well and simply written and deserves every commendation. Chris. Jorgensen has done the illustrations, and numerous photographs in half-tone give accurate views of the inhabitants and the locality. Mr. Clark was largely instrumental in bringing Yosemite Valley under State control, and was a member of the first State Commission to manage the Valley in 1864.

Published by Galen Clark, Yosemite Valley, California.

"Young America in the Hands of His Friends," a political drama, so-called, by Arthur W. Sanborn, published by James H. West Company, Boston. If the author had put himself "in the hands of his friends, it is at least doubtful if he would ever have published the little work, for small as it is, its size is the only thing which can be found to praise about it. Young America becomes enamored of Miss Empire, who has come from Europe and who is something more than the proverbial handful to the young husband. It will be seen that the book deals with the somewhat well worn subject of Imperialism, and contains no really new or valuable ideas on the subject. The pseudo-dramatic form is of no value to the elucidation of the subject.

"Russia at the Bar of the American People" is a book written by Isidore Singer, Ph. D., Projector and Managing Editor of the Jewish Encyclopedia. It contains expressions of the opinions of public men, such as leading politicians, ecclesiastical dignitaries, university presidents. It also reprints the Kishinef Petition, including the addresses of President Roosevelt and Secretary Hay. The book is valuable as giving an account of one of the most dreadful and barbarous events in recent years. The material is well arranged, and upon all grounds can be entirely recommended to all who wish for information upon this question. (Funk & Wagnalls, New York.)

"Essays and Letters of Leo Tolstoy," is by Aylmer Maude, to whose work on the Russian novelist and moralist we called attention recently, has translated a number of essays and letters by Count Tolstoy and printed them in a small book issued by Funk & Wagnalls. There is no necessity to do more than call a passing attention to this work, for the opinions and ideas of the Russian writer are by this time very widely known and there is nothing here to cause me to change any opinions already formed with regard to them. The translator has produced a good, easy English version, and the author is highly pleased with the correctness of the revision.

Funk & Wagnalls, New York.

"The Trouble Woman," by Clara Morris, is a very short and pathetic story of an old woman who had suffered much. It is a very clever analysis of what constitutes real trouble as seen by one who has suffered it. Clara Morris is a very striking instance of the development of literary talent at an advanced age. Her work is strong and is sure to be popular, for she seizes instinctively upon those points which appeal directly to the greatest majority.

"Running the River" is a story of the Mississippi at the time of its greatest prosperity, when it was crowded with craft. It is full of dash and adventure, and makes excellent reading, particularly for young people, boys and girls alike. George Cary Eggleston is too well-known a writer of this class of work to require any advertisement, and it is sufficient to say that in the present volume he is well abreast of his best achievements.

SOCIETY

Dear Bessie: Cats and dogs have been the engrossing topic this week, the annual Bench Show going on at the Pavilion opening on Wednesday, and what a variety of doings that same Pavilion witnesseth. Last week it was devoted to the circus; on Monday night the Scouts gave a drill, and drew a big crowd, and then came the Bench Show. We have had rather a reaction this week from the crowded gaiety of the last, not that it has been by any means dull, but there has been less doing, and there has been a lull also in the matrimonial line, the number of new engagements out making amends for the lack of ceremonials. Florence Callaghan was the chief bride of the week, her marriage to Vincent de Laveaga taking place at her home on Washington street at eight o'clock on Wednesday evening. Mrs. Callaghan's health is so poor, a large affair was deemed unwise, so only a limited number was invited to see the ceremony performed by Archbishop Riordan; Mabel Hogg was sole bridesmaid, Ed. de Laveaga his brother's best man. The decorations were all in pink, and were, I hear, extremely pretty. The Pettigrews had a very pleasant tea on Friday of last week, given for the purpose of announcing Helen's engagement to William Lemmon. June is to be the wedding month of several happy couples—at least, such is the general belief—I mean of Genevieve Huntsman and H. S. Williar; Susie Blanding and Knox Maddox; Florence Bailey and Fred Mohr; Clara Sawyer and Ed. Bishop. I hear that the Sperry-Carrigan nuptials are to come off in September, and that Jean Nokes Murphy will come here from Fort Russell in time to return the compliment to Anna, who was her only bridesmaid, by officiating as her matron of honor on the happy occasion. Jean is to be here a couple of months on a visit to her grandmother, Mrs. Rodgers.

We are having a good deal of music just now. First, there was the Schumann-Heink concerts, which were delightful; then Professor Adelstein gave one of his charming mandolin concerts at Steinway Hall last week, which was excellent; Mrs. Worthy Ames and Gertrude Wheeler are to be the soloists at the Twentieth Century Club concert to-day, with sixty voices in an oratorio. I am looking forward to Carrie Little's song recital, which she gives next Tuesday afternoon, and in the evening we are to have a dance at Century Hall, something like the Gaiety Club dances, a young ladies' affair, with Leap Year features; to-night the Valentine Holt's have one in the same hall. Another thing we are looking forward to is the dance to be given on board the U. S. S. Marion on the 30th. Now, if there is one thing more delightful than another, it is a naval ball, given on tolerably smooth water and not too much wind for the transit to the ship. How one gets home is another consideration.

Don't you remember my telling you of the jolly little Sunday teas Ethel Bent and Mrs. Lansing gave over at Fernside last year? Ethel is no longer here, but Mrs. Lansing, who is a host in herself, remains, and she intends to repeat the teas this year, giving the first last Sunday. So, you see, country hospitality is commencing. Mrs. Roe had a luncheon party over at Ross Valley on Thursday; yesterday Mrs. Frank Findley gave a tea in Sausalito for some of the brides of the near future—Edith Findley, Anna Sperry and Ollie Hamilton.

The hot weather last Saturday lured many away from town to enjoy life in, and get a breath of, country air, and so parties were made up to spend it in divers directions. The Burlingameites had a crowd down their way; Mrs. Martin took a party over to have luncheon at the Hotel Rafael, and Helen de Young had what she called a picnic at Meadowlands, their country home near San Rafael.

Last Friday was quite a card day; Mrs. Tim Hopkins had forty to play bridge at the Palace, and Sara Drum's bridge and 500 party was one of the largest of the month; both games had their votaries, and some very pretty prizes were won. Julia Buckbee was one of the guests, her first appearance since her late illness, from which she seemed to have quite recovered. Mrs. Sam Pond had a very pleasant euchre party yesterday afternoon. Apropos of cards—for I always couple Mrs. Middleton with pleasant afternoon card parties—much to our regret, she and Dr. Middleton are really and truly going to leave us, going East next week, and then possibly to Europe; as they have set no date for their return, I greatly fear it will be a long time in the future, if ever, and we can ill afford to lose them.

For next Saturday there is the Horse Show at Burlingame, to which you can be mighty sure all who can are going; it is to be at the Frank Carolan place, the Crossways.

I understand that Mamie McNutt Potter is one of the happiest of the happy, that Ashton has at last decided to give up army life, and sent in his resignation, something she has been eager for almost ever since her marriage. Possibly the next one to do so will be Martin Crimmins; "constant dropping, etc," you know, and Lottie is by no means infatuated with life in barracks, and would prefer it somewhere else—at least, such is the general belief. The Boardmans—Bernie and Sam—are going to keep house in the parental Drown abode on Jackson street, while the elders are at Paso Robles, which seems to be almost as attractive to "the quality" as is Del Monte just now; Newell goes with them, as it is on the cards that they all go East for a passager before they return to San Francisco. Mrs. Stubbs and Helen arrived from Arizona last week in time to welcome the latest addition to the family, the infant son of Mary and Doctor Morton Gibbons—the first grandson, I believe.

Daisy Parrott Whitney and Parker have been down from Rocklin and are staying at the St. Francis; I have met her almost every day of late, "replenishing my wardrobe," as she expresses her interest in dry goods, and at one or two cozy little afternoon teas, where she has been the center of interest; she is looking well and blooming. Carrie Merry has arrived from the East on her visit to Grace Martin, and says she is so glad to be here again, but would hardly know San Francisco with all its new tall buildings. Louis Bruguiere was one of the arrivals of last week, but does not intend to stay long. Howard Veeder is back, too, after a long visit East, and Arthur Cheesebrough came back from Korea last week—a trio of long-lost beaux.

Lilly and Stella McCalla were down from Mare Island last week—came for the bachelors' ball; Natalie Coffin is going East for the summer months; the rest of them are at their Ross Valley home, and Edith Simpson will spend the spring months in New York. The Dan Murphys and Mrs. Frank are off for a trip abroad, and will probably do Europe very thoroughly during their absence, which is not limited to any period, so will likely be a long one.

Mrs. McClung and Gladys did not come up after all, and are still at San Diego, but Alma is here with her husband, Lieutenant Horne, and has been up visiting her grandmother, Mrs. Beverly Cole, at her home in Napa Valley; Mrs. Voorhies is anticipating a visit from Miss Wright, en route from New York to Manila, where she goes to join General Luke Wright; Ursula Stone, who has been away since last summer, has come home, and intends to stay, she says, but there are whispers to the contrary. The George Moores are forsaking Blithedale this year in favor of foreign parts—they go abroad, and will be absent all summer; the Gallatins left for Europe last Friday, first making a stop in the East, and are to be away indefinitely. Leta is going to study music in Paris; the Downey Harveys have taken the Poniatowski house at Burlingame for the season—they are expected home next month. The Albert Dibbles are at their Ross Valley cottage, where they will pass the entire summer; the Ed. Schmiedells and the Eells have also gone over to their homes in the valley. Del Monte is claiming a lot of the smart set at present; there are the George Popes, the George Lents, Emily Carolan, Mr. and Mrs. Brander Miller—May Burdge, you know—Mrs. Houghton and Minnie, and oh, heaps more. Bertha Dolbeer will soon be among the missing; she and Miss Warner are going abroad for an indefinite time; Mattie Milton is going to China; some of the O'Connor girls are to spend the summer touring Europe; the Allan Wallaces have been spending April in Cuba. Mrs. Chamberlaine, wife of the Inspector General in the Philippines, came back on the transport Sheridan from Manila, where she has been the past few months—the climate did not suit the baby, I believe. She is a charming woman, and every one is glad to see her again.

THE LOOKER-ON

Roses, roses everywhere,
 And weddings each day of the week,
 Then why is your brow so full of care
 And why so pale your cheek?
 What is the sorrow that haunts you, dear?
 Why are you gloomy and sad?
 Is it champagne that makes you queer
 Or the lobster Newberg you've had?

"It isn't the lobster that pales my cheek,
 It isn't that life's too gay,
 But the weddings that happen each day of the
 Are eating my heart away. [week,
 My bills pile up for silverware,
 My milliner's after me,
 But my heart is sore and full of care
 For nobody marries me.

Mrs. Botkin has been convicted again; the jawing lawyers have given rest to their tongues; the contemptible Dunning has hidden himself in the shadow of his sins; the "fair defendant's" prayer book has been put back on the shelf; the women without self-respect, who crowded the court-room, are wandering around Butchertown or slumming upon the "dumps," eager yet to satisfy their insatiable longing for filth, and the daily papers are seeking new sensations. For all of which, "Dei gratias." The conduct of the Botkin trial, to my mind, was more than reprehensible. I do not hold Judge Cook to blame, for in permitting the crowding of the court room and in allowing the lawyers to conduct themselves like so many fish-wives, he only followed local precedents. He is no worse in this respect than the other judges, but that does not excuse the complacency which permits a murder trial to be conducted with all the low comedy properties of a wretched opera bouffe. Knight will be the greatest loser by the trial. By his own statement, he gets no fee; he lost his case and he dropped several notches in the estimation of many who had considered him a good lawyer. It used to be said that when a lawyer has a poor case his only recourse is to abuse the other side. Knight's greatest efforts were directed to the abuse of the other side. The gaping crowd was much disappointed at the non-appearance of the mysterious "double" of Mrs. Botkin. Well, some things are too dangerous to attempt, even in a murder trial.

* * *

The bathos written in the daily press about Mrs. Botkin was sickening. One paper had her reading from the Book of Common Prayer; another had her calling for her mother; a third described her cell, which she had beautified with "her own fair hands." When one considers the terrible horrors of the crime she committed, and remembers that she yet encumbers the earth, and may again subject this city to great expense for a third trial, the endeavors to arouse sympathy for her are disgusting. As Judge Ferral said, she is a woman without a conscience, lost all sense of morality, a pervert to whom remorse is impossible. If it should be necessary, unfortunately, to try her again, it is hoped the trial Judge will restrict the attendance, and above all, bar out all women. A trial of this importance should be conducted with dignity, a feature that cannot be maintained in the face of a court-room so crowded that movement within it is next to impossible.

The Board of Health has discovered in the mouthpieces of the telephones in the ferry building germs of streptococci and staphylococci; in the telephones in the Western Addition, the fierce microbe saprophytes has been found lurking in the mouthpieces awaiting a chance to jump down the throat of the unsuspecting gossip; in the office of the Harbor Commission traces of the notorious charleyspearacuss have been removed for bacteriological examination. For all these reasons, the Health Officer, backed up by the serried ranks of the "volunteer" physicians, insists that the mouthpieces of public telephones shall be covered with carbolized paper, or some other preventive that will catch the unwary microbe in its flight and render it innocuous. There must be many thousands of public 'phones in the city. A patent carbolized anti-germ wafer to cover the mouthpiece of a telephone costs from twenty to thirty-five cents. They would average in price about $250 a thousand. If the Health Officer put upon them the stamp of his official approval, of course that would make them more valuable. The accommodating Health Officer could assist the public by selling the wafers at his private office. They would all be warranted not to bear the slightest suspicion of inoculation with the germ of prafiticoccus.

The builders of high-class hotels and apartment houses should take warning from the fate of the San Marco, which has gone under, after a career of only three months. It is a magnificent building, and the house was conducted in first-class style, but the opposition was too fierce. Builders have gone mad on private hotels and apartment houses. The town is over-crowded with them, and some one must bear the burden of the over-production. C. A. Plotner, of the San Marco, paid $1,300 a month rent, and invested some $25,000 in furnishings. Now the furniture man has sued him for the price, and the Musto estate has taken back the house.

Bailey Millard has broken loose again in some "fine writing." Millard occasionally rests from his labors in the line of the higher literary criticism, and tries his hand at writing a news story. He did the Sacramento flood to the Queen's taste, and now he has told an admiring public just how a little tailor down in Kearny street put bullet holes in the body of his sweetheart. Millard describes the victim of the tailor's gun as "a fresh, bright-eyed, resilient young woman, arising on a soft April day, as rare as Lowell's famous day in June." Such a fair creature, he says, "with the thoughts borne of a peaceful morning, can share nothing of the Prospice idea." Now, in the name of Noah Webster, what is a "resilient" young woman? Is she some peculiar product of North Beach, who possesses true metallic qualities? Did she wear a "pull-back," and therefore have the true spring-back resilience properties? What did the copy-reader think when he passed Millard's copy? Did he fear toying with the vocabulary of a self-made critic? If Mr. Millard will only stay with the higher criticism, I shall overlook all the liberties he may take with the English language, for ordinary men never presume to enter the higher heavens of the craft; but when he gets down to describing a North Beach seamstress, I decline to give his literary imagination full swing. We must have our seamstresses true to life.

The Commonwealth Club will give a dinner at the Palace in honor of Alfred W. Cooley, United States Civil Service Commissioner, and Elliot H. Goodwin, secretary of the National Civil Service Reform League, of New York. Mr. Cooley is inspecting the various Federal Civil Service departments.

The Cosmos Club had a very enjoyable anniversary evening during the week. Though not so big as some of its more pretentious neighbors, the Cosmos is one of the "chummiest" clubs in town.

The Press Club is gaining fame from its entertainments. It always manages to gather together numerous interesting people, each of whom can and does contribute some part to the evening's pleasure. Its next affair will be the art exhibit.

The Monticello Club banquet in honor of the much lamented Thomas Jefferson was socially successful, but politically innocuous. The heavy-weights of the Monticello are but light-weights in their party, and what they do, or say, or think, seems to make but little difference in the progress of the nation.

The Dutch are slaughtering the Achinese in northern Sumatra; the French are pumping lead into the tribes of the Soudan; the Germans are decimating the aborigines in Southern Africa; the Belgians are cutting off heads and hands along the Congo; the British are using machine guns upon the people of Thibet, and we are plugging the mountain tribes of the Philippines with bullets and reform. Gentlemen, it is certain that the progress of modern civilization cannot be stayed.

Mike Tarpey, the last of the "Old Bills," is directing the course of the Hearst boomlet throughout the State. Have you noticed the storm of enthusiastic silence with which the press and the people have received his efforts? Tarpey is a genial fellow, and he dearly loves a practical joke. He is now perpetrating one of the biggest in the State's political history. It is the best thing since the days when the ancient Romans attached the political hoodoo to M. F.'s family name by painting it on that rock on the Capitoline Hill from which the "has beens" were hurled to destruction. It was always a question among the Alameda students of nomenclature whether Hearst's manager took his name from the Tarpeian rock, or whether some seer of old Rome, peering into the future, and seeing M. F. struggling with his present fight, named the rock after Tarpey. The latter will give a piece of the rock to any one guessing the conundrum.

General Miles, when asked if he were a candidate for the Presidency, said he was in the hands of his friends. Seems to me, I have heard that remark before. It has a familiar ring. Strange that some men do not gain wisdom with age.

glory last Monday night at the Pavilion, where they gave a battalion drill to the end that more money might be raised for the monument to Father McKinnon, the "good padre." There are four tribes represented in the battalion of scouts, and so far as possible, all the men of the same tribe are put in the same company. In camp, each tribe also has its own street. The little brown men will make a hit at St. Louis. They will be under command of Major Carrington, who, it seems, will accompany them, instead of returning to the Islands.

When the present Board of Health started in business it was proudly proclaimed that the expenses of the Department would be greatly reduced. Now it has filed its first budget. For the Emergency Hospitals it wants $10,000 more than was allowed last year. Well, its hospital doctors are expensive men; they come high. The Board wants also an increase of over $80,000 for running the County Hospital, an increase of $7,100 for the Alms House, $2,800 for the Small-Pox Hospital, and over $500 for the Leper Hospital. It needs only about $100,000 more than the former Board to conduct its business. It should be given what it asks—of course, of course.

FINANCIAL

An Oleaginous Mix-up.

Are we never to hear the last of the "craze" for oil investment, where cheap stock in cheap land were peddled out by cheap people to the get-rich-quick class, who are always pitching into some ditch dug especially for their injury, head first and eyes open, and then howling a deafening howl for sympathy in their troubles, which they never get? Scarcely a day passes without an aftermath of the boom (?) in oil. How many of those cheap, so much a yard in fancy paper certificates are in existence now? Only the big concerns are alive now, those which were used as a bait by the "Johnnies-on-the-Spot," who make their hay when the sun shines, and who will always be found next the hand-wagon when the hungry-eyed dollar chaser starts a rush for some good thing cooked up and manipulated for his particular benefit. Even these are free from their troubles, and only within the past week a row has broken out between a heavier class of operators. H. H. Blood, the well known oil operator, is the defendant in a suit brought by a number of wealthy people who think that he made too much money out of a deal in oil lands, which took place some years ago. While the defendants likely got all that the traffic would bear, it is just possible that he in turn thinks there might, in all fairness to himself, have been a few cents more profit. Opinions differ upon a proposition of the kind. However, in this, all the parties concerned are able to hold their own and indulge in litigation, if so desired, to their hearts' content. It is the conception of the promoter's fertile brain that works havoc in quarters either too proud to confess their mistake or too poor to seek relief in the courts. And then, what comes of it, nine times out of ten? Take, for example, the suit brought by H. F. Bulwer against the Yukon Crude, the American Fuel, Rex Crude and the Union Con. Crude, in which he charged. This suit was brought by the plaintiff in 1902, and after a year's experience of the law's delay, Bulwer departs this life, and now, in the year of grace 1904, the proceedings that were always "in futuro" have been dismissed, the principal witness having removed his residence beyond the reach of any earthly subpoena.

A Sensible Mining Law.

There is a disposition upon the part of mining men all over the country to convene for the purpose of taking action to simplify the American mining law down to a point where lawyers will not be in a position to make ducks and drakes out of the statutes for the purpose of conforming to the rulings of a Supreme Court handed down one day, to be reversed the next. The simplicity of the Mexican mining law would recommend it for special consideration to take the place of the complicated code of our own. The apex of a lode, on which so many decisions have been rendered in the American law courts, cuts no figure there. Whatever ore is found within the lines of a mining property belongs in Mexico to the man who owns the ground, and no one can gopher it on the plea that it could be followed to the surface in the territory covered by his location. There is no jumping, and no questions can be raised as to ownership once the land is set aside to any one and the taxes, which amount to a few dollars every year. Mexico may not be so far ahead of us in many ways, but in the matter of mining law we can well afford to follow her lead. The proposition to change and remodel our system upon similar lines, and then there will be less chance for the miner to escape hazard of law and the outside blackmailer.

Business has been rather quiet during the week on the Pine-street Exchange, but this has been due entirely to the manipulation of certain lines of stock by the representative of a new capitalistic force now in the field for control of some of the leading Comstock mines. Whether they will succeed or not in attaining their end, it is difficult to say, but in so far as the present operators are concerned, there is no opposition of any kind, as all the interests are being arranged upon an amicable basis. The injection of new life into the business is something that will be hailed with satisfaction on all sides. In the future management of the mines the Sutro Tunnel will be an important factor, saving the hoisting of ores above the tunnel level. An electric trolley system is to be installed in the tunnel and connections will be made with all the mines.

Representative Van Duser of Nevada hits the nail on the head in the interests of legitimate mining by the resolution which he introduced in the House. This document, if adopted, will place the Secretary of Commerce and Labor in a position to investigate the dishonest and fraudulent mining companies conducting their operations and sale of stock by advertising and circularizing through the use of the United States mails, whereby thousands of investors have been defrauded through misrepresentations in circulars and printed matter. The resolution goes on to say that this printed matter contained exaggerated and false statements, and the Secretary will investigate the organization capitalization profits, sources from which dividends are paid, the conduct, management, promotion of stock sales, and methods of mining companies and mining corporations in general, who conduct their sale of stock by means of advertising and circularizing through the use of the United States mails. He will, in turn, make a report of the findings to the House. Just imagine what a revelation there would be if this resolution was carried into effect. It would develop a condition of affairs which would astound people.

Dr. C. T. Deane, secretary of the California Petroleum Miners' Association, has compiled a statement of the production of crude oil in California for 1903. The total number of producing wells in the thirteen oil-bearing districts in the State is placed at 2914. These yielded last year 23,602,000 barrels, 15,750,000 of which came out of the Kern River district alone. The estimate is conservative and therefore safe. The extraordinary growth of the industry is revealed in the fact that the output last year exceeded that of 1902 by nearly 10,000,000 barrels. It is fully expected that the yield this year will reach at least 30,000,000 barrels, as the demand for refining, for fuel and export, is steadily increasing.

The California Fruit Cannery Association has just closed a very prosperous year. The financial statement submitted for the year ended February 27th states that $208,195 had been paid in dividends, and that an increase had been in the surplus and reserve funds of $225,134. In contributing to general results, the adoption of improved methods of distributing the products of the association was an important factor. The sales for the year were $1,000,000 in excess of the previous year. The officers elected were: President, William Fries; first vice-president and treasurer, S. L. Goldstein; second vice-president, Henry F. Allen; third vice-president, Francis Cutting (in place of W. L. Thomas); secretary, Charles B. Carr; general manager, R. I. Bentley; general superintendent, Mark J. Fontana; assistant general superintendent, T. B. Dawson; manager of the sales department, C. H. Bentley; assistant secretary, George McLean; auditor, C. F. Jackson; and attorneys, Thomas, Gerstle & Frick. As additional directors, there were chosen F. Tillmann, Jr., Percy T. Morgan, W. L. Gerstle, and W. C. B. de Fremery.

The local market for securities has been steady during the week, and prices show few changes, with the exception of little bolstering aid lent Gas and Electric. The market must be considered quiet for this time of the year.

Since the recent impetus to building on Montgomery street and the completion of several fine buildings for offices with a good class of tenants, good restaurants and lunch rooms are in demand. To meet this emergency, W. W. Moore, who for years has been a caterer to the better class in San Francisco, has opened a lunch and coffee house at 426 Montgomery street which will vie in excellence of cuisine with any other similar establishment in this city. The rooms are handsomely decorated in natural wood, while plate glass mirrors in continuous panel surround the wall. A private dining room for ladies is one of the features, and as the kitchen is separate, the fumes will not offend the most fastidious. W. W. Moore & Co. are sure to get the preferred customers in this vicinity.

The Minister of Foreign Affairs

French public sentiment is as variable as March winds, except that always it is for France as a whole. A few weeks ago the Socialists raised a hue and cry against any sort of Franco-Russo alliance to help the Asiatics, and the masses took up the theme and made much over it. But the socialists and the masses are now just as vehement in their denunciation of the "yellow and brown people," and an object lesson in the weather-vane character of the French will be of interest to very many religious cultists of San Francisco. A private letter has just reached this city telling of the treatment the Reverend M. Dharmapola received in Paris a fortnight ago. It will be remembered that Dharmapola represented Buddhism at the Parliament of Religions in Chicago in 1893, and that he became a sort of center of attraction in religious cult circles all over this country and Europe, and especially in San Francisco were his scholarly attainments and high character known and appreciated. In fact, he has been a great favorite here among liberal religionists, and was made a member of one of the Theosophical societies, besides being a most welcome guest in many homes. En route to his home in Ceylon, Mr. Dharmapola decided to stop in Paris and visit old friends, who had on former occasions given him hearty welcome, even the general public treating him kindly, though perhaps because of his grotesque robes and Asiatic cast of features. Upon reaching Paris on this trip he found a radical change in public sentiment. He reached his particular friends—a count and countess—late in the evening, but his arrival was made known by the "cabby," and a few minutes later the count and his illustrious guest were startled by stones flying through the mansion's windows, accompanied by loud yells of the mob, "Down with the yellow peril," "Down with the Asiatics," "Get out of France, you yellow-robed pagan." The count was quick to take in the situation, and by rushing Mr. Dharmapola to a hotel, and to a train bound for Italy early the next morning, he saved his house from being wrecked and possibly himself from bodily harm at the hands of the mob, to say nothing what might have been the fate of the yellow Buddhist priest. There has been an effort by the count and his San Francisco friends to keep the incident concealed from the public, but the News Letter deems it proper to give it publicity because it reflects the uncertainty of French sentiment. A year ago Paris religious cultists so lionized Dharmapola that his yellow robes commanded something akin to adoration, and now he is practically run out of France for no offense other than having been born in Asia.

For a United White Race.

There is no little diplomatic and political cunning in the effort of St. Petersburg to play upon the prejudice of the white race against Asiatics and Africans, so as to resolve the Russo-Japanese war into a united white race struggle against yellow, brown and black race aggressiveness. But the scheme will fail so far as the Anglo-Saxons are concerned. Events the last century in the world of commerce, industry, invention and politics show clearly that while the white race is endowed with those moral and intellectual qualities which make for a higher and a still higher civilization, the Anglo-Saxon leads in every channel and avenue of human progress. Moreover, it is the mission of the Anglo-Saxon to raise the races of Asia and Africa to higher levels of individual liberty and national administration, and while accomplishing that work the other branches of the white race will necessarily advance, but as recipients rather than as distributors of the accruing political, social and intellectual blessings. And, again, the Anglo-Saxon could not be inveigled into a race war on lines of prejudice of superstition, for it would be repugnant to his sense of justice and good will towards mankind; besides, the God of civilization and human rights has committed too many black and brown and yellow peoples to the tender care and uplifting influence of the Anglo-Saxon to permit him to treat for either their destruction or humiliation. The Slav is likely to be hoist by his own petard.

China's fast and loose dealing with Russia has about reached the point that the Peking Government has evidently been playing for, which is to force Russia to declare war against the entire Chinese Empire. In this play of perfidy diplomatists have not been fooled by the Chinese, yet so adroit has the play been that China could not be charged with actual unfriendliness to the Russian Government, and if the Czar declares war it will appear to the unthinking world as a wanton attack upon the Celestial Empire to obtain more territory. That is what Chinese diplomatists have been scheming to accomplish. They want the neutrality treaty broken, but want Russia to force the breaking, and this the Czar knows as well as the Dowager Empress knows it. On the other hand, actual hostilities with China would be preferable to the Judas-like policy of Peking; hence a formal declaration of war is likely to be made any day, and then will come fresh complications because of the "spheres of influence" which nearly all the nations of Europe possess in Chinese territory. However, Russia would have little to lose if she would guarantee the permanency of the spheres in any event, and might gain the active support of France and Germany, and certainly would if the Anglo-Saxons rush in to preserve China's political identity and national life, neither of which could they allow to be destroyed. For the moment the play between Russia and China is to inveigle the other into committing an open overt act of war, and Japan's diplomacy is China's coach.

Although fighting is going on almost every day or near the Yalu, no engagement that is worthy to be called a battle has been fought. The Russians are employing the tactics the News Letter said they would at the beginning of hostilities—i. e., contest the Japanese advance, but avoid a decisive battle until the enemy had been drawn far inland and away from his base of supplies. Such strategy would not regard the Yalu river as of sufficient value to hold at the expense of even a small defeat. As time goes on the field plans of both sides are being at least partially revealed. Russia's plan is to mass an enormous force and oblige the Japanese to attack under the disadvantages of maintaining a long line of communication with their base, and in case of defeat be thrown on the defensive for the balance of the war. Opposing this, the Japanese seem to be handling their four armies to first strike in detail and then concentrate for a crushing blow. Those familiar with the McClellan-Lee campaign that culminated on Malvern hill, will not fail to see that both the Russians and Japanese have studied the strategy of those great war captains to some purpose.

INSURANCE

The entire United States business of the Thuringia of Erfurt, Germany, has been re-insured by the Firemans Fund of San Francisco. The negotiations were carried on in New York between President Dutton, of the Firemans Fund, and an executive officer from the home office of the Thuringia. Voss, Conrad & Company were the managers for the United States, Mr. Conrad controlling the Western States and Mr. Voss handling the other side of the Continent from New York. The company had a large agency plant, and were well established. The Thuringia entered the United States in 1896, and have deposits in New York, Massachusetts and Oregon. The business done in premiums for 1902 and 1903 amounted to about a million dollars per annum. An examination of the figures of the company, as shown by the statement made to the Insurance Commissioner, shows that while the company's income was increasing year by year in the United States, the outgo outgrew the income. Its loss ratio to premium for 1903 was nearly 57 per cent, and its expense to premiums was almost 45 per cent, thus showing that the company was not making any money on the transacting of a business amounting to one million one hundred thousand dollars in the last year. Various reasons are advanced by underwriters for this condition of affairs, cut rates, excessive expenses of management and enormous commissions. Whatever the reason or reasons may be, the home office got tired, laid down and quit, and the business went to the Firemans Fund, and under the management of that company it is safe to say the business will be cleaned up and put at once on a profit-paying basis. It is understood that the Thuringia ceases writing on the 18th instant at noon. The company has in the United States, in the hands of its United States trustees, assets of $1,273,489. Its initial agents in this country were Voss, Conrad & Co., and the company has never seen fit to make any change. During its brief stay there has from time to time been heard a lot of rumors regarding the strength of the company, but so far as known, it has met every obligation fairly, and the home office of the corporation has, it is said, on more than one occasion come to the rescue of the United States branch by sending remittances. Mr. Conrad and Mr. Hall are both too valuable men to be long out of the management of a fire company, if they wish to continue in the business. The agency of Voss, Conrad still retain the United States agency of the Frankfort, another German company, which confines its business to accident, liability and marine insurance.

The Superintendent of the Insurance Department of the State of New York, in his recently published annual report to the Legislature, takes occasion to skin a few Lloyds. He intimates these pirates are sailing around on the ocean of fire insurance and robbing and plundering, and that although he has tried to prevent this kind of privateering, he is unable to stop it, because he is not clothed with sufficient authority and the laws of the State do not meet the exigencies of the situation. He pleads his cause in this manner: "The department ought to have authority to restrain these associations from transacting insurance business, for failure to file reports, and for false or fraudulent statements therein, and the provisions of section 577 of the Penal Code applying to corporations ought to be extended to apply to these associations as well."

The conflagration in Baltimore is cited as an object lesson to induce the insurance companies to continue their policy of accumulating large reserve funds, a feature studiously avoided by Mutuals and Lloyds.

"The large part of the loss, variously estimated from $40,000,000 to $60,000,000," he says, "will ultimately fall upon insurance companies, and the prudent and conservative policy followed in past years has resulted in accumulation of reserves so large that the companies, with scarcely an exception, will be able to pay their losses promptly and without embarrassment.

"From general information it would appear that the city of Baltimore was as free from danger of conflagration as any of our large American cities; that it occurred where the construction was substantial, the Fire Department efficient, and the water supposedly adequate, justifies the fear that a similar catastrophe may happen elsewhere at any time. Such being the case, it is advisable that fire insurance companies should continue to pursue the same policy in regard to the accumulation of large reserves to meet like disasters when they occur."

Mr. Hendricks then requests that authority be given him to revoke the license of any company of another State whose capital shall become impaired, and then asks that assessment insurance companies be barred from organizing or being admitted to transact business in the State of New York. Vive Hendricks.

The Spring Valley Water Works Company object to putting in the three hundred and odd additional fire hydrants asked for by the Board of Fire commissioners upon the request of Chief Sullivan, claiming that it would cost a quarter of a million dollars to comply with the request of the Fire Commissioners. In the meantime, the Board of Fire Underwriters, the Fire Insurance Companies, and the Fire Department are wondering how they are going to come out. The Fire Department can't fight fires without water, and the Insurance Companies, realizing this fact, are liable to give a gentle boost to the rates of insurance in the unprotected or inadequately protected districts. The fire limits are to be extended, and a bill has been passed to print by the Board of Supervisors limiting the erection of frame buildings in the prescribed limits to three stories in height.

Mr. Rolla V. Watt, an ex-member of the Board of Fire Commissioners, says the Spring Valley Water Company should be paid a lump sum for fire protection, and the question of hydrants settled in this way. Others of the underwriters see the safety of the city from the conflagration hazard only in the installation of an auxiliary salt water plant for fire protection.

A PRESS CENSOR WANTED.

"Ill fares the land to hastening ills a prey, where wealth accumulates and men decay." So sang the bard. The purport of this article has nothing to do with the accumulation of wealth. It has to do especially with the decay of man. The question of decay naturally brings to mind a certain class of the daily press. "Hastening ills" aptly applies to Sunday literature and Sunday and daily newspaper advertising. Open the pages of last Sunday's Daily Excreta published in San Francisco, and what is the nature of its advertising? Here you have an astounding array of quack and patent medicine advertising, mechanical appliances and nostrums that will cure from tuberculosis to cold in the head. The "hastening ills" that beset us are the ills of the thousands who are made ill from the ill-advised use of quack remedies. In full confidence in his favorite Sunday magazine (?) the victim buys a remedy that takes every hair from his head, pours salicylic acid into his stomach to its eternal destruction, introduces his wife to a poor brand of whiskey under the name of a remedy for the nerves; women are given cancers by the use of a vacuum developer; men have been known to bleed to death because of the use of a developer (shamelessly advertised by the daily press), and yet the community goes unmurmuringly on, apparently oblivious of this debauching influence.

A press censorship is wanted, and it is wanted as soon as possible. Laws should be passed that would provide for a State Board to examine into the merits of the appliances and the nostrums offered to the public. This power should have the right to veto the insertion of advertising and prevent the sale of such articles inside of the State. It should be the province of such a board to look into the nature of the advertising offered, because of the effect on the minds of the young. The chief offender in this line publishes in the same issue cartoons that we are sorry to say have become very popular with the youth of the country. After reading these cartoons it is but a glance to another page to read of the vilest diseases known to mankind. These advertisements are sometimes adorned with color, and not satisfied with this, the shameless proprietors (one of whom is a candidate for the Presidency) publish pictures of an apparatus for the use of men that it is best we leave undescribed. We are surprised that this shameless individual did not add a personal endorsement of this appliance.

It has been suggested that instead of trying to restore the great "King's Highway" that the local automobilists could profitably turn their energies to better profit nearer home.

San Francisco has not an over-abundance of good and interesting roads within the city and county limits. Why not try and have the great highway south extended along the Coast to Half-Moon Bay? What other drive could be proposed that would bear comparison with it? The famous drive at Del Monte would be changed.

San Francisco and San Mateo Counties could easily build such a road at a comparatively small cost, as there are no bad grades to be encountered.

Such a drive would soon make San Francisco famous amongst the tourists.

Almost a mile per minute has been clipped from the world's track record for automobiles since Alexander Winton established the mark at 1:47 in 1897, and since that time the record has been almost continuously to the credit of the Winton car. Mr. Winton raced his own cars until he had approached the minute mark, when he gave into the hands of Barney Oldfield the task of reducing the figure still further. Oldfield hit the minute mark at Columbus last August with the little Bullet, and before the season had ended he had succeeded in getting below 55 seconds. The following list shows the record speed developed by Winton cars from the introduction of automobile racing to the present time: Made by Mr. Winton—1:47, Cleveland, May 30, 1897; 1:33 2-5, Chicago, September 18, 1900; 1:12 2-5, Detroit, October 10, 1901; 1:09, Detroit, October 23, 1901; 1:06 4-5, Detroit, October 24, 1901; 1:02 1/4, Cleveland, September 16, 1902. Made by Barney Oldfield—1:00, Columbus, August 28, 1903; :59, Cleveland, September 4, 1903; :57 1/4, New York, October 3, 1903; :56 4-5, New York, October 3, 1903; :56, New York, October 3, 1903; :55 1-5, Los Angeles, Nov. 20, 1903; :55, Los Angeles, November 20, 1903; :54 4-5, Los Angeles, Nov. 22, 1903.

No longer will the enthusiastic automobilists of San Francisco go about in nondescript, piece-meal costumes after May 1st. The real toggery from Europe, and the fine domestic makes as well, in all its variety, the first complete assortments of automobile clothing for men and women brought to the Coast, will, on the first of the month, be on sale in a brand new department of the Emporium, to be devoted exclusively to this class of goods.

Among those who took the run to San Jose Saturday and Sunday were the following, all of whom ran White touring cars: Mr. George H. Lent, Mr. A. M. Shields, Mr. Fred W. Gregory, Mr. W. M. Mr. George Merriman, of Alameda, purchased a Stevens-Duryea automobile from the Pioneer Automobile Company, and, after one or two lessons, on Sunday, April 10th, took a party of friends for a trip to San Jose in his machine. He returned late in the evening, thoroughly satisfied with his purchase. Although having never run an automobile before, Mr. Merriman handled the machine very skillfully, making the run of over one hundred miles with no difficulty whatsoever.

On the run to San Jose, Mr. and Mrs. George W. Luce were guests of Mr. and Mrs. A. M. Shields. They made the trip in Mr. Shield's White touring car.

A party of Oakland people, owners of Stevens-Duryea machines, toured around the bay on Sunday. The party consisted of Mr. George H. Strong, Dr. Cunningham, Dr. Chamberlain, Mr. F. A. Lathe, and their friends.

Mr. John H. Spring has purchased his second White touring car and run it to San Jose Saturday, over to Los Gatos and Congress Springs and back Sunday afternoon. The machine had a canopy top, and Mr. Spring says it is a great goer.

In Memoriam

Let'ter R. I. P.

As I wandered onward aimlessly
By the ocean's sandy brow,
I chanced to meet an old man—
A fisherman, I trow.

He motioned, and I sat me down
By the noisy, restless sea,
And the tale which I now unfold
Is as 'twas told to me.

"When I was but a gentle youth,
I remember well the day
That Willie Hearst, a prodigal,
For President did bray.

The old man rose as thus he spoke.
I turned and went my way,
While I mused on the old proverb:
"Every dog will have his day."

SHAKESPEARE IN NEW SOUTH WALES.

"Hamlet" had its first presentation in New South Wales the other day, and this is what the critic of a local paper thought of the play and its author:

"There is too much chinning in the piece. The author is behind the times, and appears to forget that what we want nowadays is hair-raising situations and detectives. In the hands of a skillful playwright a detective would have been put on the track of Hamlet's uncle, and the old man would have been hunted down in a manner that would have excited the audience out of their number elevens. The morals of the piece are not good. The scene where Hamlet cheeks his mother is a very bad example to the rising generation, and it is not improved when the dreary old ghost comes in and blows him up. Our advice to the author is a little more action, a little more fine sentiment, and a fair share of variety business in his next piece. In the specialty arts of the play-scene he has entirely missed his opportunities."

Wilfred Clarke, the well known actor, who last appeared in San Francisco in a starring engagement, has returned to vaudeville, and will re-appear at the Orpheum for a limited engagement this coming week. He is supported by a strong company, which includes such capable people as Archie Gillies, Miss Lucille Spinney and Miss Theo Carew, and will present for his opening week his adaptation from the French, entitled "No More Trouble." It is described as a playlette of unique conception, laughable and possessing a condensed and coherent plot.

The programme at the Chutes for this coming week will be almost entirely new, and the offering is one of the best made by this popular place of amusement. Alberta C. Hadley and Helen Archer, direct from the East, will present a high-class comedy sketch, entitled "The New French Maid," and the three Malverns, society acrobats, will give a daring and graceful act. Storey and Van, accomplished musicians who play upon a variety of instruments, will make their initial appearance here, and little Ruth Roland, the greatest child favorite who ever appeared in this city, will re-appear after a long absence. Mabel Lamson, the sweet singer of illustrated songs, the Robinsons, clever colored singers and dancers, and the animatoscope, showing the latest novelties in moving pictures, will complete a bill that will challenge comparison with those offered by many higher priced places of amusement. The amateurs will appear on Thursday night. Esmeralda and her lately born monkey are objects of unceasing interest.

"The Frisky Mrs. Johnson" will be the bill at the Alcazar for the coming week. I see that some of those who know, or pretend to know, say this play is an adaptation from the French. Poor Clyde Fitch! He has been responsible for a good many things, but plagiarism is the last straw. Thus do the mighty fall. The play is an unusually interesting one, and the Alcazar company should bring out everything there is in it. Mr. Edward Price, the general manager of the Alcazar and Central Theatres, and Mr. Belasco, have left for an extended Eastern trip. They will secure additional attractions for the O'Farrell and Market street houses.

The new fire-proof theatre, the Majestic, will open the coming week with Isabel Irving, in Winston Churchill's play, "The Crisis." The direction is by James K. Hackett. Tickets have been placed at $1.50, $1.00 and 50 cents, and box seats, $2. It is claimed that the system of exits is the best in the city. San Francisco has needed a first class theatre in the vicinity of Tenth and Market for a long time, and the large population in the Mission district now has a chance to show its appreciation of the new enterprise. The theatre is as easily reached from all parts of the city as it is from the south, and will meet with a quick patronage, providing the quality of performance is in keeping with the price.

Although this will be Miss Irving's first local appearance as a star, she is too well known and too well liked by play-goers here to need many words of praise. As leading woman for John Drew, in which capacity she was last seen in this city, Miss Irving won for herself the name of the cleverest of American comedienues. She created that inimitable fibber in "The Liars," with brilliant success, while her earlier performance of Lady Susan in "The Case of Rebellious Susan" is a classic of comedy. Before her experience with Mr. Drew, Miss Irving appeared in conjunction with her present manager, Mr. James K. Hackett, in the first great performance of "The Prisoner of Zenda." Hers was the original Princess Flavia, and all her successors followed closely in the lines laid down by Miss Irving. Those who saw these performances have never forgotten them, Flavia in particular being the very embodiment of sweet womanly loveliness and charm.

Since those days Miss Irving has made tremendous strides professionally. Her impersonation of Virginia Carvel, the warm-hearted but hot-headed young Southern belle, has won the name of being one of the most delightful stage characters of the present day. In its way it is fully as loveable a character as the Flavia of "The Prisoner of Zenda," but with more light and shade, and a great deal more of that dainty, merry comedy of which Miss Irving is the acknowledged mistress. As the young Southern girl, she runs the whole gamut of human feeling; a merry, impetuous coquette in the first act, she develops into a sweet, womanly young girl, with a keen realization of all that life means, a gentleness and tenderness engendered wholly by love, and a wholesomeness that marks the very best type of American womanhood. No one can see this careful character study without a keener appreciation and a closer and better knowledge of what womanhood really means. Mr. James Hackett, Miss Irving's manager, has provided his star with an excellent company, while the scenic investiture is said to be one of the most beautiful seen on the stage in a long time. Miss Irving's engagement is for two weeks only, with matinees only on Saturday.

"His Royal Nibs" is to be produced at the Alhambra Theatre next Thursday and Friday evenings for the benefit of the California Women's Hospital. The play is by Shafter Howard, who has given evidence in several of his published musical compositions of ability in the line of song-writing. Several of the musical numbers are being rendered by the orchestra at the Hotel St. Francis, Zinkand's and the Louvre with pronounced success, and are being repeated every evening at the request of the guests of all three places. "His Royal Nibs" will be presented by a cast and chorus of over seventy people.

along that if the management of the local theatres would only give us money's worth I would in turn give unstinted praise. The week has been a banner one for good performances, and it is hoped that this will continue. The San Francisco public is not at all hard to please, and the critic is not trying at all times to find fault. It is a fact that, because of business reasons the daily press will praise and puff unreservedly. Think, for a moment, what the cry would be if a patron of a daily newspaper asked the editor to praise a patent medicine editorially, to say that a fake appliance was the boon of mankind, that a new brand of catsup was beyond compare, and that Rugglass shoes were the best ever made. All this regardless of the quality of the goods advertised, and yet this and more is what the theatrical manager asks of a daily newspaper and it is what he gets. He receives columns of free publicity. What for? Because he's a good fellow, because he sends business, because the critic is made much of by a chorus girl, because he ADVERTISES. The only protection the San Francisco public has is the News Letter. The News Letter is read and it is believed. Why? Because the News Letter tells the truth.

THE COST OF LIVING.

There is a general cry among the people of San Francisco because of the increased cost of living. Food is continually rising in price, rents are being raised all over the city, and while the general cost of living is less than in most of the cities east of the Rocky Mountains, it must be admitted that it is out of all proportion to the earning capacity of the individual. It is worthy of note in this connection to remember that the increase is greater in all centers where the labor union is paramount in its influence.

In San Francisco, an unholy combination exists among the planing mills created by the union of capital and labor to exploit the general public. Prices of building materials have been raised to such a pitch that it is a millionaire or a fool who indulges in the luxury of building. The union policy has encouraged a cessation in building. It has encouraged the trusts to employ a scheme of perfect organization and higher prices, and the laborer who received $3 a day four years ago, and who was not tied down to dues and union meetings and dictation, now finds it difficult to save carfare where before he had the opportunity to save much money. To-day he receives four to five dollars a day, and has the satisfaction of receiving it to pay it out again as quickly as possible. The union is responsible for high wages, high rents, high meat, high groceries, and in fact, an unnatural and unbearable condition of affairs in general.

We append an excerpt from an editorial in the New York Evening Post on this subject:

"The true explanation for this unfortunate rent increase, therefore, must be found in the causes underlying the cessation of tenement building. This is accounted for in several ways. In the last year the mortgage loan market has been unfavorable, though building operations in tenements have not been hampered as much from this cause as the larger and more hazardous class of undertakings. The high price of building materials has also stood in the way. Probably the greatest deterrent, however, is the demoralized state of the building trades. The extortions of the unions and the contractors, the combinations which have been made against investors in buildings, the high wages, and the incessant strikes, have paralyzed what, without these untoward influences, would now be a most flourishing industry. The increase in wages is especially significant. Thus in 1897 the prevailing rate for bricklayers was $4. They now receive anywhere from $5 to $5.50. Plasterers then got $4; they now get $5. Carpenters six years ago were eager for employment at $3.50 a day; the rate at present is $4.50. And so all along the line."

The mass of the people have not been benefited in any way. The professional man, the writer, the dentist, the doctor, the school teacher, the advertising agent, the clerk, in fact the great majority of the people, among which may be counted the farmer, receive no more for their product than ten years ago, and in many cases wages have been reduced to enable the employer to pay the extortionate demands of the man with the labor union club. There's a good time coming, however, and unionism is going to get its just deserts. It will receive its worst defeat at the hands of those of its members intelligent enough to realize that if four dollars is divided between Casey and Schmitz, McCarthy and Ruef, there will be little left for Maggie and the children, and that three dollars and a half for Maggie was better wages than four dollars for the gang.

The Pilfering Sorority Girls

"Some people say that a co-ed. won't steal. But I caught one in my corn field," is the favorite refrain on the Berkeley campus just now. "Holy Moses!" is the exclamation whenever Professor Bernard Moses swings into sight. And the Pie-Biters, formally known as Pi Beta Phi, are wearing their best Sunday-go-to-meeting expression and consider themselves martyrs to the cause of Professor Moses' unholy wrath. His case against them has been duly and daily aired, but the scene when Professor Moses actually saw his apple and peach blossoms decorating the walls of the Pie-Biters house remains to be told.

Enter Professor Moses, his spic-and-span appearance somewhat impaired by rather dusty shoes which he has surreptitiously wiped on the porch with his pocket handkerchief. To two gurgling young ladies who came up just then he remarked, "I have been tramping through my orchard." The three are greeted in the hall by members of the reception committee and the young ladies exclaim: "My, how beautiful the house looks with all those blossoms, doesn't it, Professor Moses?" The ex-Philippine Commissioner gazed at the decorations with open-mouthed admiration—at least that was the way the sorority girls translated his expression. The Professor then walked around the rooms sniffing at the bloom and closely examining it. Finally he strode over to a table where two girls, who are members of his class in political science, were serving tea. "So charmed to have you here," began one of them, but Professor Moses put the stop-cock on the polite etceteras by asking in a melodramatic whisper, "Where did you get those blossoms?" And then the trouble began to brew, which—all the doctors could not subdue, ginger and paregoric, too! much less sorority tea. Professor Moses acted like a gentleman and a scholar at the tea—he waited until his lecture hour next morning before he publicly denounced the act that has ruined this year's crop in his orchard.

The sorority girls claim that they had permission from a real estate agent, supposed to be in authority, to pluck the blossoms, and their statement is generally believed around college. That they did not know the orchard belonged to "that mean old Moses" is substantiated by the fact that he was bidden to the be-blossomed tea. Professor Moses' next book will probably be called "The Pilferings of Perdita," and will deal with co-education. And the next time a sorority gives a "blooming old" tea it is safe to say the bloom will not come via the Moses orchard.

This affair has raised the ghost of the article Elizabeth Knight Tompkins wrote last year in an Eastern periodical anent the University of California in general and the sorority girl in particular. Miss Tompkins scored their social attempts as cheap imitations of the real thing, and suggested that the time spent in scouring the hills for green and borrowing the neighbors' cushions and dishes might be better employed over books. The truth of the matter is that the sorority girls do have to rustle around rather lively to keep up their social status, for many of the members are girls whose allowances barely permit them to get along at college without any margin for the inevitable assessments of a sorority house. Even the few girls of wealthy families who are sent to a co-educational institution like Berkeley are cut down to much smaller allowances than their brothers enjoy, on the theory that girls do not sow wild oats, and therefore do not need so much money in their halcyon days. So the sorority girls are on the whole "a poor lot" in the literal meaning of the phrase. They have to resort to many makeshifts to have their "frat. house" put on a bold front as the average impecunious housekeeper with social aspirations.

Professor Moses did not empty his locker of ammunition on the Pi Beta Phi girls. He gave the co-eds, who disturb university meetings a hot shot, too. These university meetings are held once a month, and the students are addressed by prominent men. At the last meeting, the famous Dr. Myer was the chief speaker, and Professor Moses scored the girls because a troop of co-eds, noisily left the hall in the midst of Dr. Myer's lecture. The girls claim that the University meeting is supposed to last from eleven o'clock until twelve, and when speakers drag along into the noon hour they have to break away in order to get a bite of luncheon before their one o'clock recitations. But Professor Moses pointedly remarks that the men remain seated no matter how long the meeting lasts.

Dr. Myer is a very learned savant, but his enunciation is so bad and his talk was so long and erudite that it must be confessed the students gave a sigh of relief when he finished, and ex-Mayor James Phelan, who was present, arose to hand out a few remarks. Mr. Phelan was not prepared to talk, but President Wheeler insisted, and the obliging Jimmy could not refuse.

"I hesitated about talking to you in this off-hand manner, but I have sat on the platform the last hour and have observed that you are a very indulgent audience!" was the gist of Jimmy's first rounded period. The hall rocked with mirth, only Jimmy himself and Dr. Myer not seeing just where the joke came in.

THE WANDER-WOMAN.

By Agnes Leem The Reader

The town and woods I span
 From height to height securely.
 And if I love no man,
 I love no woman, surely!
 Oh, give me day and the sun thereof,
 And night with never a goal,
 And never a love that's worth the love,
 But the love of a child's young soul!

Rains from the heaven's wide arch
 Troop down the dawn to smother.
 The long-lost waters march
 Back to the sea, their mother.
 The byre shall roof till dawn be red.
 Then on from sun to sun.
 They are more than the price of a crust and bed,
 The smiles of my little one.

The tide the hour shall beat,
 The turbulent reminder.
 Kind are the folk we meet.
 The birds and beasts are kinder.
 Then up the road and o'er the wild,
 And through the darkest door,
 With ever and ever a little child,
 That skips and trips before.

ERE COMES THE NIGHT.

By Nannie Byrd Turner in Smart Set

Ah, pain that a rose should die,
 That a lily's grace should fail;
 That dark should dim a sunset sky,
 And a rainbow's glory pale—
 And lovers say good-bye!

Alas, that Youth is fleet—
 Swifter than Age is swift—
 That dearest hopes have winged feet,
 And Love's a transient gift,
 As shadowy as sweet.

So kiss we while we may,
 While lips are still afire.
 For all too surely creeps a day
 When fades the dear desire
 To ashes cold and gray.

Too surely comes the night
 When the star of Love shall set,
 And the bitter snow of Time lie white,
 And the soul would best forget
 The old, beloved delight.

A VANISHED STAR.

By Eugene C. Dobson in New England Magazine

Last night I saw, in light elysian,
 A fair star gleam across the sky,
 To dawn a moment on my vision,
 Then into darkness fade and die.

And now at morn, with weary eyes on Yon white sail, lessening down the bay,
 I see beyond my life horizon
 Love's one star vanishing away.

OUTWITS UNION LABOR.

Through M. L. Moustier from France, the French representation at the World's Fair has outwitted the St. Louis Machinists' Union. The French were on a state bordering on despair over the problem of how to set up their big engines in Machinery Hall. The protest of the labor union against their employing French workmen who were not members of the union, caused the trouble.

M. Moustier is a master mechanic from the Delauney-Belleville works. He arrived last week to oversee the installation of the engines his company will exhibit. The labor union protest was one of the first difficulties he met. The next day after a solution of the trouble occurred to him the walking delegate came around to reassert that no work could be done except by union men. Previously M. Moustier had indignantly refused to comply with labor's demands. Now he surprised the delegate by graciously acceding, one of his colleagues doing the talking. "Certainment," the interpreter said, "we haf decided to let you do ze work. Here are ze plans. All you haf to do ees to follow ze plans. M. Moustier, you know, speaks no Englaise."

The delegate looked at the roll of blue prints. Everything but the white lines was in French. "These won't do," he said, "the foreman here can't read a word of this. Get the specifications put into United States."

"I am sorry, very sorry, but ze man who made ze plans is in France. No one could do it with-

The delegate believed it. He stared at M. Moustier and then at the plans. "Well, I'll be —. I can't ask you to work my men when they can't do the work. Put your men to work and let her slide."

And that is why the French artisans who came with M. Moustier are at work after three days of idleness, when all around them are only union men setting up foreign exhibits.—Globe-Democrat.

A popular British weekly has just discovered the existence of a novelist named James Fenimore Cooper, and writes of his "Pathfinder" as the work of a promising author. A London daily is better informed, and ironically observes that Mr. Cooper is "now well over his hundredth year," and is engaged on another book which, as at present arranged, will be entitled "The Last of the Mohicans." Americans, however, need not be in haste to jeer. It is not very long since a school superintendent in a thriving town of the Middle West wrote to a historian named Hume to ask him to make some changes in his history of England which would fit in for class room use. Later he expressed some surprise that his politely worded request had elicited no reply.

He—Oh, I wouldn't take you to that show, my dear, the dialogue is too spicy. She—That would be a pleasant change for me. Usually when I go to the theatre with you the only thing spicy about it is your breath after you've been out between the acts.

Levy's brother died in Chicago the other day. The undertaker telegraphed to Levy: "What shall I do with the body? I can embalm it for $50 or freeze it for $30." And Levy telegraphed back: "Freeze it from the knees up for $20; he had his feet frozen last winter."

The Political Situation

Although the Hearst papers may endeavor to keep up the impression for a little while longer that their owner is still a candidate for the Presidency, it must be evident to even the readers of those delectable journals that he has lost all hope of winning the nomination, or even of preventing the nomination of any candidate who is persona non grata to him and his clique. His papers are busy letting him down easily, and his friends are as busily occupied in seeking cover and announcing that they never were for him. I have no doubt that since the returns have commenced to come in from the "cow counties," Cammenetti wishes he had not introduced the resolution endorsing Hearst at the last meeting of the State Central Committee, and that Budd and Maguire wish they had never heard of the editor. Of course Maguire was dead politically anyhow, and you cannot kill a corpse, and Budd has not the power and influence in the councils of his party that he once had; indeed, Lane is the only man who seems to have gathered any strength out of the Hearst fiasco, since the counties that have repudiated Hearst have done so, in most cases specifically, because of the position of the Examiner in the Lane fight for Governor. As Lane ate no crow, but announced distinctly that he was not for Hearst, he stands well with the country delegates and representatives of his party, and has something to hope at its hands in the future, but the Hearstites have tarred themselves with a brush that it will take much party loyalty and hard work to rid themselves of. For years to come the finger of scorn will be pointed at them, and the question: "What did Hearst pay you?" will be the question asked of them whenever they come up for office.

What would have happened in the whole country if by any accident Hearst had been nominated and elected President is shown by the experience that San Francisco is having with her street car employees and their threatening strike. While those who only see what is written on the dead walls of the city in poster type may have fancied that the strike was purely a labor trouble, having no connection with politics, those who know anything of the political conditions that prevail in this locality will have no difficulty in discovering that the "nigger in the wood pile" is Hearst. In the first place Richard Cornelius is well known as the henchman of Livernash, and it was because Dingwell, the Secretary of the Carmen's Union, declined to have the union made an adjunct of the Hearst campaign that he and those who thought with him were summarily expelled from the union by order of Boss Cornelius. Those men will tell you that Cornelius never makes a move until he has gone to the Examiner office and asked for orders over the "longest leased wire in the world." They will tell you that Cornelius opposed Schmitz, the Labor Union candidate for Mayor last fall, because he got orders from Livernash to do so, and they will call your attention to the fact that if the trouble with the car company had been allowed to wait adjustment until the time when the agreement between the men and their employers expires, it would be only a day or two before the primaries which Hearst is so anxious to carry. They would call your attention to the further fact that although Livernash pretends to represent union labor, and Cornelius is never tired of harping on the rights of labor and the outrages of capital, and although he publicly denounces those workmen who are not union men as traitors to the cause of labor, yet he supported Livernash when he refused to recognize the Clerks' Union in its boycott of a haberdashery in this town, and the Barbers' Union when it boycotted an anti-union shop, and even when the Clerks and the Barbers sent committees to Livernash to call his attention to his inconsistency in those matters, and he insulted them in his rooms at the Grand, Cornelius said Livernash was alright, and still continued to hold him up as the friend of labor and to take orders from him. They will call your attention to the fact that the Teamsters' Union proposes to join the Carmen in a strike, the President of the latter union being the infamous Michael Casey, of malodorous fame, who is also an attache of the Hearst gang, and who, like Cornelius, takes orders, if nothing more, from Hearst. Both Cornelius and Casey are announced as among the representatives of labor unionism who are to go to St. Louis on Hearst's special train, wearing his collar and drinking his champagne, while the Carmen and the Teamsters stay at home and put up money to keep their bosses in luxury and idleness. It is clear from all those facts that politics is at the bottom of the Carmen's demands. Possibly the men themselves do not know it, but let them do a little reflecting and figuring for themselves, and they will see that they are being used as dupes by their so-called leaders.

There will be no special train to St. Louis, however, and no need of the services of either Casey or Cornelius at the World's Fair metropolis, so much that they have been anticipating will be lost to them. Indeed, it is a question whether Hearst will be so enthusiastic in the cause of labor as he has been, now that he finds that it cannot give him the prize he coveted. There are already rumors that the arrangement by which he was to pay a large number of men in the several towns where his paper is published, for imaginary work on his colored Sunday supplement, will be abrogated, and that he will pay only for work performed, unions or no unions.

* * *

The country and State having rid itself of the Hearst, should not stop in its good work until the entire gang is retired to private life. Livernash, who only lacks the money to be even worse than Hearst, should be turned down by the Democracy and a decent citizen put up in his place next fall as the party's candidate for Congress. If the Democracy has any hopes of ever returning to power in this State, not to speak of the country at large, it must rid itself of the men who are revenue Democrats only, and who are willing to pander to every vice, indorse every anarchical idea, and lend their support to every enemy of morality, decency and patriotism, in a vain effort to be the political bosses of the commonwealth. The Democratic Party is a pretty big institution, but it is not large enough to contain a Hearst and a Cleveland both within its folds.

* * *

The Republicans of the First Congressional District have agreed to send ex-Senator Vorheis of Amador and Major Bull of Eureka to Chicago.

* * *

In the Second District, Senator Devlin of Sacramento, and some one from Napa, not yet determined upon, though it may be Duncan McKinley of Santa Rosa, who wants to go to Congress instead, as that would give him a position to become more prominent than if he stayed at home. In the Third, Postmaster Luckinger of Vallejo is certain to be one, and Contra Costa may name the other as Governor Pardee is to go as delegate at large from Alameda County, and that County will not be allowed everything. None of the other districts are yet certain whom they will send, though all have a number of candidates.

* * *

Los Angeles has developed a new Senatorial candidate in the person of James Lankersheim, whose campaign is being managed by John W. Mitchell, which to those who know Mitchell will be a sufficient indication of what Lankersheim principally relies upon to win the prize. In the South the candidacy is looked upon as a joke, although General Otis has added to the gaiety of nations by indorsing it. That, of course, settles any possibility of the new candidates getting a vote in the Legislature.

THE BEGGAR AND PROFLIGATE

A Fable of the Man, the Dog and the Barrel.

Once upon a time there was a Man, and this Man possessed the Society Eye and the inherited Barrel. He had also a Dog. This Dog was an Extraordinary Dog. Not because of Pedigree, but because of Achievement. He succeeded in having Himself incarcerated in an Asylum for the Insane and afterward he was elected to the Office of Congressman. He was a good Dog to his Master, and became known as a Retriever.

There was this difference between the Dog and His Master. At times the Dog acted according to an innate instinct of righteousness. The Profligate Man we are writing about became known far and wide as the Apostle of Discord. The Dog was simply the tool. Through the Dog the Master in Profligacy became connected with Labor, and through this acquaintanceship he fomented discord, hoping thereby to pose as the Apostle of the Poor. But the Common people know him best at Home. The Profligate is now parading about the Country with the Dog and a Tin Cup begging the nomination from the Democratic Party. Under his Arm he Carries the Barrel, and from this Barrel pours a Yellow Stream. This stream goes to the Walking Delegate and the Professional Agitator, and the Labor Element sees it not. Do the Working People take any Stock in the Man, the Dog and the Barrel? Oh, no, they are ON!

Congressman Hearst's boom for the Presidency is so noiseless that nobody but himself can hear it.

Admiral Togo is suspected of "salting" mines at Port Arthur with explosives.

Hill looked it right straight in the eye, and then the Tammany tiger purred and went to sleep.

Every now and then Russia lifts her head from the mat long enough to catch the referee's eye and yell "foul."

It may be true that a gallant Kentucky editor would not take Hearst's coin, but we will wager that he bit it first.

"If you have no baby, adopt one," shrieks a lady reformer in New York. In other words, if you have no trouble, borrow some.

A gentleman called Gayley tried to live up to his name and succeeded in being such a jolly good fellow that his wife is getting a divorce.

A hundred dollars a pound for a bulldog sounds like a high price, but it must be remembered that there was a good deal of bark thrown in.

Congress is asked to establish an American "Cross of Honor." Make it of oak, seven feet by five, and tie it firmly to Representative Livernash.

One of the funny things about a dog-show is that the exhibits do the barking and the exhibitors attend to the fighting.

Public ovations to a Chinese prince remind us that Kearneyism and the sandlots were ancient history a long time ago.

Hearst's hired men are busy trying to find one of their numbers who will admit that it was he who first mentioned their employer for the Presidency.

An article in a San Francisco newspaper attempts to illustrate the stowing of a cargo, but gives no picture of Captain Barnes or Colonel Kowalsky at luncheon.

The club ladies who are called upon to defend an expelled member's suit for damages, have learned that "knocking" is not scientific when you are caught with the hammer on your person.

If Emperor William's voice must be amputated, it must be comforting to reflect that already he has talked as much as one man ought to.

A Government inquiry about the "loco weed" seems absurd when everybody knows that it is the favorite vegetable of the yellow journalist.

Russia has put the ban on wireless telegraphy for war correspondents, and has her eye on the smokeless powder proposition as a doubtful point in military ethics.

That Oakland husband who whipped his chickens when he was angered at his wife, is in a way to find out that there is no vicarious plan for paying alimony.

Berkeley has put a premium on that form of inebriation technically known as the "silent soak." Noisy drunkenness in the college town now costs the offender anywhere from $1 to $100.

We might feel sorry for Texas, which is washed away by floods in winter and devoured by grass-hoppers in summer, if we were not so busy rubbing the places where the labor agitator bites.

Now, if the Carmen will strike, and the Hackmen will stay out, the average citizen who does not own an automobile can read his title clear to all-night enjoyment of the bock beer season.

It is possible that suspicion concerning the robbery of a saloon safe had much to do with the "breaking" of three policemen, but it is only fair to add that there are pockets in the clothes of some of their superiors.

An expert alienist thinks that Hetty Green shows evidence of insanity when she lugs around $2,000,000 in bills in a hand-bag. It is noteworthy, however, that the old lady is not crazy enough to let any kind person hold the satchel for her.

That McGlade, who is best known as "Pete the Penman," served his sentence at San Quentin with no complaint until he learned that the town was "wide open" again, and then he began to pine for a "wide open" prison.

It's too bad about Judge Parker's shattered boom. Discovery that he puts on evening dress for dinner every day queered him with the rank and file, and learning that he drinks water and not much else settles it for him with the Solid South.

If the supply of mines lasts long enough in the harbor of Port Arthur, it will be necessary for the Japs to reduce their fighting strength on the sea. The Russian land forces are now carrying large signs inscribed with the words: "Don't fire till you know who we are."

BETTING ON THE RACES.

At Monday's meeting of the Board of Supervisors an ordinance was passed prohibiting the laying of wagers on horse races except on the race track. The proponents of this measure urged it as the most practical law for the restriction of gambling on horse races. They pointed out that by restricting the area in which wagers may be laid, the opportunity for gambling was likewise restricted, and therefore that young men who cannot go to the race track, having no opportunity to lay wagers down-town, will stop gambling on the races. So weak and ridiculous is this argument that those who made it must have had their tongues in their cheeks when they did so. The only result of the ordinance passed last Monday is to give the race track gang a monopoly of the gambling, under protection of the law. None of the Supervisors imagine for a moment that their prohibition of the down-town pool rooms will have any effect whatever upon the laying of wagers. The police will arrest a few pool-sellers who are not in the ring, and the others will continue to contribute for "protection." It is more than strange that a man like Supervisor Brandenstein should lend himself to a measure surrounded by such iniquitous influences. There is some satisfaction in the knowledge that at least one member of the Board—Supervisor Comte—has not only convictions on the subject of race track gambling, but also has the courage to express them in the face of a bitter opposition and threats of political enmity by the combined forces of the race track gang. Mr. Comte submitted an amendment prohibiting gambling on horse races at any place in the county, the race track included. He said he did not pose as a moralist, but that as a good citizen whose attention had been directed to the numerous embezzlements and other crimes, and to the increasing number of suicides, all directly traceable to the race track, he wished to perform his duty in endeavoring to do something effectual toward suppressing an evil which has caused wide-spread demoralization throughout the community. Comte's amendment received only four votes.

Brandenstein and Brauhnart, in urging the passage of the race-track bill, argued that it would be useless for San Francisco to prohibit gambling on the local race track, unless it were also prohibited at Tanforan and Emeryville. This is a vicious argument. They might as well say it would be useless for San Francisco to prohibit pocket-picking or open prostitution, unless other cities or towns had similar laws. It is surely our duty to keep our own house clean, notwithstanding the habits of our neighbors. They must know, moreover, that the race track bill is class legislation of the worst kind, with no excuse for its passage except the fact that the people behind it are popularly supposed to control about 2,000 votes in the red light district. It is worthy of notice that at the same meeting at which the bill was passed the Supervisors directed the City Attorney to bring suit against the Commissioners of Public Works and their bondsmen, who are responsible for the theft by bookkeeper White, of the Board of Works, of over $10,000, most of which White lost at the race track. Widber, the city's former treasurer, also dropped at the track a small fortune stolen from the coffers at the City Hall; McKeown stole over $50,000 from the funds of the State University, and lost it all at the race track; Peter McGlade, now in San Quentin, was another public employee who forged pay warrants to raise money to play the races; Justice's clerk Williams got into trouble, though he was not a defaulter, by going to the race track; and endless is the list of young men, employed down town, who have lost their employers' money and their own good names at the race track. Yet Mr. Brandenstein says the Supervisors are not the keepers of the public conscience; in other words, that it is not their duty to make laws the object of which is to prevent crime. Upon what theory, then, did he support the race track bill? Was it not to close the pool rooms, because they are a public evil? If they be evil, because they are the outcroppings of the race track, why not close down the fountain from which springs all the many streams of vice—the race track itself?

JUSTICE.

The News Letter believes in Fair Play, with capital letters, and when the Mayor of San Francisco comes out with a manly statement, such as he made in regard to the impending strike of the Carmen's Union, we believe that he should be given full credit. The responsibility of office has taught him that he is the Mayor of the whole city, and not of any particular class of its citizens to the detriment of all the rest.

He asks the men to ponder before they take any step that will mean the serious crippling of the business interests of the city. He asks the men to listen to the promptings of their minds rather than the dictation of their leaders, who lose nothing by the strike but who gain much in fomenting discord and dissatisfaction.

The Mayor asks the men to take a secret ballot to obtain the untrammelled opinion of the workers. This is wise advice, as it will establish beyond a doubt whether it is the sense of a majority of the carmen that there shall be agitation and unsettledness every six months.

CENTRAL EMERGENCY HOSPITAL.

City hospitals are rarely what they ought to be, but that San Francisco institution grandiosely called the "Central Emergency Hospital," goes away below the limit of what such a plan ought to be. Before this, the Receiving Hospital—that is its popular name—has been afflicted with incompetency and dishonesty and rapacity, but it remained for Mayor Schmitz to fill it with wolves in silk hats and whiskers. Worst of all the crew is one Brackett, a person of shambling intellect, a straggling beard, and fingers that crook for clutching like a vulture's talons. He has been in office only a few weeks, and has been unpleasantly in the public eye most of that time. From the frequency with which men suffering from fractured skulls have been treated under his administration for such ailments as pneumonia or cholera morbus, it might be inferred that Mayor Schmitz looked for his medical staff among the livery stables, but the inference would be incorrect. If Brackett be guilty as charged by the recent verdict of a Coroner's jury, then, plainly, he got an important part of his education in a pawnbroker's shop or the office of a cent per cent loan shark. This jury found from the testimony given before it that Brackett frightened a poor woman into refusing to have her desperately injured husband go to a public hospital for treatment; that he began to reach out for her few dollars while her husband lay helpless in the Receiving Hospital, and that after the victim's death, following an operation by the talon-fingered Brackett, the dead man's employer was hounded and harassed by Brackett for still more money. All this upon the sworn evidence of a physician more reputable than any Brackett could ever be; of a reputable business man and of the woman widowed by Brackett's knife.

The city is full of physicians not much worse than Brackett, but happily they do not often get into places where they can "operate" upon men and women stricken by casualty and where they can graft under the protection and with the aid of official position. They are the physicians who will swear to anything for a few dollars, and for not very many dollars will perform any surgical service, including those expressly inhibited by statute. But they are less dangerous than Brackett. Any man, any man's mother or sister or daughter may be laid low by accident and flung into the eager hands of Brackett and his underlings. Seemingly it would be better for any one to be sent to jail than to the Receiving Hospital, for we have not yet heard of prisoners in any city jail being cinched out of their money. Moreover, it is always possible that a patient in the Receiving Hospital may be operated upon by Brackett or one of his associates before he can be rescued from their mercies.

As a diagnostician of the condition of wallets and bankbooks, the Receiving Hospital doctor of the Brackett school is at his best. He may overlook a fractured skull or a row of broken ribs, and men may die under his knife and bone-saw, but he makes no mistake about the patient's money. Nobody has accused him yet of "grafting for a case," as it is called in this hospital, when the victim had empty pockets and no relatives or friends.

THE EFFORT TO FREE McGLADE.

Public attention is earnestly invited to the case of Peter McGlade, confessed and convicted forger. McGlade is wearing stripes at San Quentin, but is letting his hair grow in the hope of a parole which will let him loose upon society before his insufficient sentence has been served. After five trials, in which the gang of "case fixers" and jury bribers to which McGlade belonged did its dirtiest work to save him, he was convicted upon a portion of the long list of felonies charged against him, and sent to San Quentin for an eight year term. On Monday he will go into court—the same court that convicted him—and try to rid his record of the remaining indictments that stand between him and the operation in his behalf.

McGlade is an expert bookkeeper. He filled the books and accounts of the city Street Department with forgeries which lined his pockets and the pockets of his confederates with the city's coin. Detected, he ran away, was caught in another State, was brought back, confessed his guilt, went free on bail, "jumped" his bonds, and was caught again. It might have been thought that conviction would be easy. The proof of this rascal's guilt was plain, even if he had not run away, even if he had not confessed. But convicting him was another and intensely difficult proposition. Daily during his trials the courtroom and the adjacent corridors were filled with the most dangerous foes of organized society—professional perjurers, past masters in the corruption of jurors, the stranglers and hatchetmen of the "push." Even the minor officers of the court were leagued in iniquity with the defense. The bailiff of the court, Deputy Sheriff Dasher, did valiant service for McGlade in driving people of the prisoner's own kidney to sit on the jury and in permitting and encouraging such conduct on the part of the jurors as would lead to a mis-trial. Dasher has since been convicted of a felony in "substituting" Chinese prisoners left in his charge. And Dasher was not the only man who took liberties with his official oath in order to help McGlade. Four trials went wrong, thanks to the criminal "push," and then a conviction which was not so much a triumph as an accident.

It may be asked: Why all this interest of the jury-fixers and their kind in a criminal of a very ordinary kind? It is not loyalty, we may be sure, nor any other manifestation of the fabled "honor among thieves." Nor can it be that McGlade compels sympathy and assistance through his personal qualities. A vile fellow, he was in his hey-day of forgery and prosperity, associating by choice with the hags and harpies of the tenderloin, preferring black skins to white. To these he was "handsome Pete McGlade." To the vicious crowd which helped him before and is behind him now he was "Pete the penman." That probably is the secret of his influence—his skill in writing other men's signatures. A man of such a talent, criminal in his tendencies, is too valuable to the "push" to be left in prison. That is why this effort to free him is being made, and that is precisely why the court in which he is to appear—the court of Superior Judge Carroll Cook—needs watching.

THE PROMOTION COMMITTEE'S WORK.

The California Promotion Committee announces that on the 30th inst. it will hold a public banquet for the avowed purpose of bringing together representative men from all parts of the State to boom California. The recent tour of the committee has aroused good feeling throughout the great valleys and the rapidly growing Southland, and a public sentiment has been created to the effect that it is about time Californians got together and did something for California. It is about time that all the people, from Siskiyou to San Diego, and from the Sierras to the sea, should be thoroughly educated in the idea that anything that will help the State at large will certainly benefit every individual portion of it; anything that will increase our foreign commerce, or our inland trade, will put dollars into the pockets of every man, let his business be what it may; anything that will induce immigration will double values by the course of natural development. But these things can be done only by united effort. Too long have the merchants of San Francisco given but small heed to the wants of their brothers in other places; too long has the interior been arrayed against this municipality and glared at it with eyes of envy; too long has the South lived within itself behind the shoulder of Tehachapi; too long has the North struggled alone for the fruits of the birth-right given it by nature. The California Promotion Committee comes at an opportune time with the hand of brotherhood extended, and with words of fair promise for California's future greatness. Leading men—men of actual personal influence—should attend that banquet from all sections of the State. If they find it impossible to come, they should send a message assuring the co-operation of their section in this endeavor to develop the State—in accordance with a definite plan. Between now and November next, over 100,000 people, representative in greater or less degree, will visit this State from the East, to attend national conventions in this city. They should be sent back to their homes as advertising agents for California. This is the time for action. Let the watchword be—co-operation and advertising.

"THE RUIN OF SOCIETY."

Gertrude Atherton thinks that society is a magnificent ruin from a moral standpoint. She may not be alone in this belief, but she says it right out in public; wherefore her remarks are worthy of attention. Modern society, she says, has reached the same depth of degradation in which wallowed the belles and dandies in the days when George IV was king. She admits that the women of to-day are not absolutely worse than those of yester-year, but she insists they are no better. And as for the men! Mrs. Atherton classes them as "superior sort of grooms," who know no higher law than the satisfaction of all their desires. She refers, of course, to the men of the "smart set," the real insiders, who have their names blown in the bottle. The pace they set has shocked even Mrs. Atherton. The main cause for the slump in morality, she finds, is, first, the all-controlling influence of the smart set; second, the demand for dress, the insane desire for display, the insatiable yearning to exhibit more peacock feathers than our neighbors. Mrs. Atherton really doesn't know what we can do about it, but she very much fears the result will be something akin to the Reign of Terror. Now, here is a subject for the women's clubs. There are many able and honest women in the local clubs who should be willing to break a lance in defense of their sex and their class. Are the society women of the day degenerates? Are the men social lepers? Do society girls resort to any means so that they may have new gowns? Are we getting worse from a moral standpoint? Have we any standard of morality—practically, not theoretically? Can we learn anything new from a close study of the times and manners of the days of the last of the Georges? In brief, what justification exists for the charges of Mrs. Atherton? The News Letter will be pleased to publish any answer to Mrs. Atherton that any local club-woman may submit.

A LAMENT TO GENERAL MacARTHUR.

That part of San Francisco which is tributary to the Presidio should be rid of the drunken and the discharged soldier. The commanding officer at the big garrison has every intention to keep his men within bounds. We are told that patrols attempt to round up refractory characters, and that the civil authorities are trying their best to co-operate with the military. The discharged soldier is the greatest offender. He finds an able assistant in disgraceful conduct from the vampire civilian of the Barbary Coast. These people are a stench in the nostrils of the citizen who patronizes the Ferries and Presidio Railroad.

Two suggestions have been made that would undoubtedly mitigate this evil. Large numbers of the soldiers might be transferred to Angel Island, and they would be exempt from the temptations of the city. They would enjoy better climate and the public would be generally benefited by their removal. Another scheme contemplates the re-establishment of the "canteen" and the insistence by superior officers of cleanliness in the matter of clothes. Most of our soldiers appear drunk or sober in the streets of San Francisco with clothes that are little better than those of a tramp.

Let no one for a moment suppose that the News Letter means a slur on the privates of the United States army. The army is a good one and the vast majority of soldiers are deserving young men who have enlisted through patriotism, and at times through poverty. The army is a necessity. There is no reason why it should be a dirty necessity.

Neatness and cleanliness will lead to sobriety and good behavior. Who ever saw a drunken marine? The deck officer on a ship of war inspects each man as he leaves the ship and as he returns, and the result is that the U. S. Marine Corps is an honor to the Nation.

There is no valid reason why an American soldier should behave more boisterously in San Francisco than in Manila; there is no reason why a soldier should be dirtier in San Francisco than in Peking or Nagasaki, and yet these are facts. Do the commanding officers think it wise to let the men become hoodlums once they are in our city? We think not. We ask that General MacArthur enforce rules of cleanliness. If we cannot have the canteen to keep them sober, let us try to do so through the agency of white shirts, white collars and cuffs, belts, polished buttons and clean clothes.

On the other hand the civil authorities under our present inefficient Mayor should put a stop to a policy that puts a premium on crime. They should hale to the bastille the male and female vampire who lives on the uniformed representative of Uncle Sam. There is much to be hoped for in this direction from the military authorities. All they need is a suggestion, but when it comes to the civil authorities we must confess that there is very little to be hoped for. The present administration is bound by marriage in indissoluble ties to a wide open policy of criminal indulgence.

THE ENDORSEMENT BY THE PEOPLE.

It is no little gratification to the News Letter to feel that it has in many directions curtailed the shameless effrontery of criminal office-holders. From the waterfront to the City Hall there is a long line of offenders who are now compelled to do their work in the dark. The continual campaigning of the News Letter has not stamped out vice, but it has lessened the exploitation of the public in public. We are proud because of the enemies we are making. The circulation of the News Letter is increasing so rapidly that it is difficult to keep up with it in the way of printing press and paper. This is the only endorsement we care for. Our enemies read the paper, the public reads the paper, enjoys the discomfiture of the grafters, and the ultimate result is interesting to the advertiser. He it is that reaps the final benefit.

Jewish Encyclopedia, Volume VI.

The "Jewish Encyclopedia" is a descriptive record of history, religion, literature, and customs of the Jewish people, from the earliest times to the present day, and is prepared by more than four hundred scholars and specialists. It is published in twelve volumes, and embellished with upward of two thousand illustrations.

A subject of curious interest in volume VI, pages 157-158, is "Hair," an article contributed by Dr. Immanuel Benzinger. Here the writer describes the fashion of wearing the hair by men and women, also the religious customs followed. The rabbinical section of this subject, written under the direction of Dr. Solomon Schechter, President of the Faculty of the Jewish Theological Seminary in America, is supplied by Dr. I. Broyde, who tells us that in rabbinical times "a man who curled his hair was regarded as a vain person. At the age of seventeen Joseph was still termed 'na'ar,' or lad, because he was childish enough to curl his hair. Elijah had naturally curly hair; his enemies, however, mocked him, declaring that he curled it . . . While Samson was filled by the Holy Spirit, his hair," we are told, made a noise like bells, and the sound was heard from Zorah to Eshtaol. One authority states that a person who does not wash his hands after shaving his hair suffers from spells of anxiety for three days. A brief note on the superstitions that relate to the hair is added by Joseph Jacobs, B. A., the eminent folklorist. author of "English Fairy Tales" and other contributions to Jewish lore, who points out among other things that to have a hairy body is a sign of luck; and to throw away hair cut from the head will cause a headache.

The topic, "Hand" (pp. 211-212) is from the pen of Dr. M. Grunwald, who in treating this subject covers the origin of tattooing, the customs of the laying on of hands, and of using the hand in taking oath, and of kissing of hands. He tells also that according to the Haggadah the hands of Adam were covered with a horn up to the time of his fall. Dr. Fishberg also contributes interesting data upon "Idiocy" (p. 556) and "Insanity" (p. 603). The statistics which accompany these articles will prove of especial interest to students of anthropology. On the subject of "Insanity," Dr. Fishberg shows that the proportion of Jewish insane in nearly all the places from which statistics have been obtained is often more than double that of the non-Jewish population.

The Horse-Leech's Daughters.

The ambition of a selfish wife as extravagant as she is beautiful, the ruin of a generous, typically American husband (a member of the Stock Exchange) and his ultimate happiness through the love of another woman, give the central motive of the plot of Mrs. Jackson's new novel. It is further explained by the origin of the title, which is taken from the familiar verse in Proverbs: "The horse-leech hath two daughters, crying, 'Give, give.'" The book shows the reckless extravagance of well-to-do Americans. It is set to the stirring pace of present-day New York, and reflects the mood of buoyancy and power which belongs to the great metropolis and its brilliant society. To one who thinks life is a comedy, as well as to one to whom it is a tragedy, this novel will have an attraction as extraordinary as it is unusual. The story is told with a skill that leaves in the mind a vivid picture and a sense as of having just watched the actual play of character, so real is it. Through all the apparently hopeless tangle, the author keeps in hand the thread of the happy ending.

"The Yeoman," published by John Lane, is a novel consisting of thirty chapters, and written something on the line of the dime novel. Price, $1.50.

"The Life of an Actor," by Pierce Egan, contains twenty-seven colored illustrations and several designs in wood. It is a new edition, founded on that published by C. S. Arnold in 1825. The illustrations are rather crude, and are certainly not superior to anything printed in 1825. The text is well written, and will be appreciated by book readers as well as the theatrical profession. D. Appleton & Co., Publishers. Price, $1.50.

Edward N. Townsend is to the front again with new "Chimmie Fadden" stories. Mr. Townsend has a large following, and those who enjoy his writings will be as well pleased with his latest book, "Sure," as with "Chimmie Fadden" and other books of a similar character.

Dodd, Mead & Co., Publishers, New York.

"To Windward" is by Henry C. Rowland, the author of "Sea Scamps." It is partly a sea story, and partly the account of a man's struggles in New York. It is full of incident, strong and invigorating, and shows quite a distinct development in style over the preceding works of the same author.

A. S. Barnes & Co., New York.

"Parsifal, the Story and Analysis of Wagner's Great Opera," by H. R. Haweis, is an appreciative and well-written account of the opera. It is seasonably re-printed at this time when this particular opera is receiving much public attention. The author was eminently fitted to do the work, and his readers will no doubt be entirely satisfied. This small work is published by Funk, Wagnalls & Co., New York.

The Chinese and the Rand.

Some weeks ago, when the subject of the importation of Chinese into South Africa for mining purposes was rife, the News Letter remarked that the question was one which the Afrianders would settle eventually to their own satisfaction, and more rapidly than by law. The Chinese as a body have not commenced to come in, and yet a feeling of uneasiness prevails in the community, and a determination has already been announced to keep them when they arrive in a compound or enclosure. That this is not a very satisfactory proposition is evinced by a story told of an experience the late Boer Government had with a "Chink" at the time they were prohibiting the entry of undesirables into the Transvaal, when all the trains arriving over the border were examined and any objectionable characters were turned back. On one occasion a Chinaman arrived in a passenger train. He was removed from the train and taken to the border, and he came back into Charlestown. That evening the Chinaman secreted himself in a goods truck, under a tarpaulin, and essayed to get through in this manner. He was again discovered and kicked from the station to the little stream which divided the two countries, and he again drifted back into Charlestown. Next morning John started on foot to walk up to the promised land. Two days later two Boer policemen arrived, leading him between them with a rope. When they arrived at the border the policemen dismounted and literally wiped up the dust with the yellow man. Then they released the rope, and he again came into the colony. That evening John went to a store; he purchased some red ochre, some blacking and a blanket. He borrowed a bucket of water from the storekeeper and went into the back yard. When he returned he was the most unsightly Kaffir the world has ever seen. Then he started again on his weary way. He got through all right; at any rate he did not come back. It would be a pretty difficult trick to keep individuals of this type in a corral or compound.

Jere Lynch on this city is out in print again. the Klondike.

Ex-State Senator Jere Lynch of this city is out in print again. Since his memoirs of an Egyptian trip, he has rested in quiet until again the silence is broken and the Sphinx speaks, this time upon the frozen North and the ice-clad domains of the Klondike. The tale is told from the standpoint of a "cheechaka," one of the motley gang of adventurers who "rushed" the new diggings in the spring. It was a case of tinker, tailor, soldier and thief with a sprinkling of the capitalistic leaven in this omnium gatherum, which hailed from everywhere and nowhere. Not having been honored with a copy of "Three Years in the Klondike," it is impossible to descant upon its merits, but from what we hear from across the water, the volume has interested people who have read it there. It is said to have a wide range, dealing with all the details of a live mining camp in the true spirit of Bohemianism, which of course will be tolerated and rather admired by Great Britain from the pen of a foreigner, while it would mean failure and rebuke for any author, a resident of that part of the world. It is remarked, however, that in so far as throwing light upon the question of staking claims and working pay dirt and the subject of mining, the information afforded is meagre. While comment also is made that the Mr. Lynch had left his readers in the dark as to the success of his own venture, it is implied by his critics that he was numbered among the lucky ones who accumulated a pile of the "stuff." Quien Sabe!

Capital Moving on Tonopah.

That the big monied men of the East have their eye on the the mines of Tonopah, is evident from the movement in that direction of capitalists or their experts which has been going on of late. Charles M. Schwab, well known in connection with the great steel trust, has just returned from a personal examination of the camp, and the interests he has already attained there are about to be increased, from all that can be learned. This shows what merit will do in the way of pulling a mining district to the front, and also that there is just as much money ready in America to back up American mines as there is abroad for South Africa or Westralia. The Guggenheim corporation is now the owner of the biggest property in the camp, and with Schwab and a few more like him in point of wealth, this section of Nevada will have as strong a backing as any other camp in the Silver State had, even during the palmiest days of Silver mining. It is too bad that San Francisco got left on the Tonopah disposition, but an investment there would have necessitated somebody putting their hands in their own pockets, and that means something in this burg. The big Board of Brokers also had its chance to control the share selling end of the proposition, but it had no more use for the shares than the local capitalists had for the mines. Fortunately for Nevada, this, however, will not affect Tonopah or its people, who pride themselves now of being independent of San Francisco.

Local Securities are Weak.

The feature of the trading on the local Stock and Bond Exchange during the week was an advance in the stock of the San Francisco Gas and Electric Co. It was just slow and jerky enough to bring into evidence each turn of the jack-screw which worked the oracle. It did not take the up grade with flying leaps, which might have been expected from the news of the new blood about to be interjected into the management of the company. At the rate it is now going, it will be some time before the price reaches a point anywhere between $80 and par, which represents the point where not a few of the present holders got in. This slow movement does not show much buying upon the part of holders of high-priced shares, desirous of averaging up so as to cut the figure of original purchase down to a level where a chance can be hoped for of getting out of an investment which has caused a lot of people much worriment of mind. A Big Cut Needed in Salaries.

It is now morally certain that C. O. G. Miller, who is an experienced gas man, will have actual charge of the manufacturing department of the S. F. Gas and Electric Company, although not assuming altogether or wearing the mantle of "Manager." He will likely, however, be empowered to put in his own engineers, among whom will likely be his chief, employed when he was at the head of the Pacific Gas Improvement Company. This is one step in the right direction, the next is to cut down the expense of running the institution, reducing all the high-priced lists down to a figure in accord with the requirements of an income which is already strained to meet weighty obligations of an imperative nature. Some money put into improvement and renovation of a very antiquated service plant would be utilized to much better advantage than by the payment of fancy salaries when first-class men in all departments from the head of the institution down can be obtained at a very much lower rate.

The Comstock Market has been quiet of late, prices ruling firm at the north-end, where the principal work on the lode is now being done. The preparatory work at other points has not yet been sufficiently advanced to allow of operations upon the newly arranged plan which involves the utilization of the Sutro tunnel more than ever before in its history.

OBITUARY.

Despondent because of continued ill-health and brooding over the law's delay in settling a long-standing libel suit against a San Francisco paper, with which he had been in litigation for nearly a score of years, Judge J. W. Turner, one of the most prominent attorneys in Northern California, committed suicide in Humboldt Bay April 15th, about 5 o'clock, just as day was breaking. The body of Judge Turner was found by some fishermen about a mile from the spot where the fatal leap had been taken. The Judge had been troubled with neuralgia for a number of months. Lately this was accompanied by insomnia, superinduced by constant worry over the libel suit. After sixteen years' battling the courts recently awarded him $15,000.

Judge Turner was a prominent Mason, and leaves a family of five children, three daughters and two sons, at San Jose. His oldest son is a student in the law department at Stanford University.

"Hear the Crier!" "What the devil art thou?"
"One that will play the devil, sir, with you."

TOWN CRIER

He sat in gloomy silence
While his family glowered around,
The woe that he was feeling
Was obviously profound.
He was gripping at the table,
And his trembling under lip
Was as soulful as a waiter's
Who has had too small a tip.

It was not that his first-born
Had been buried yesterday,
It was not that his fortune
Had chased itself away.
It was harder, sorer trouble
That produced the sigh and frown—
His daughters were insisting
On a summer out of town.

The municipal work bug is afflicting the brains of our local women to an inordinate extent, and unless a halt is called, we shall have several alarming cases of wheels revolving far too free in charming little heads. It is reported that the babies of some of our most delightful society women ask for models of municipal cars at six months, and before they are two years old display a wonderfully precocious knowledge of the analysis of milk. In some cases, it is whispered that the feminine zeal for pure food has actually led to sterilization. This new feminine departure is being watched with great anxiety by medical experts, who have not yet located the microbe, but in some cases, where the family treasury has been sufficient to warrant it, have entered upon a system of treatment, of which the leading ingredient appears to be more babies. It is observed that the municipal interest of a woman with five babies is much less than one-fifth of her who possesses only one. On the other hand, from a series of close observation, it has been determined that of unmarried young women, those at whose home a young man is observed to call, have very little interest in municipal affairs.

The dictum of the scientists to the effect that evolution consists in the development of specialization does not apply to the local police department. One of them added to his usual equipment a sledge-hammer, a punch and a chisel, all these as assistants in the guarding of a shop. He is unfortunately accused of burglary. This cannot be the case, for the purity of our police Department is so well and generally known that none of our very finest can be even remotely connected with such an offense. The tools are simply evidence of a desire on the part of the policeman to pursue manual training, and may be considered as a distinct compliment to the Board of Education, which has made such entertaining part of the regular school instruction.

We are to have a musical comedy in praise of the devil. This is San Francisco with a vengeance. The French go seriously into the worship of his Satanic Majesty and invent a thing called Diabolism about which learned writers hold forth. They have made a ritual and lots of other stuff in connection with the matter. We write a comic opera, put on a crowd of society people to play it, and enjoy our diabolism in our own way.

One of the curiosities of the University town is the close affinity between its women and robbers, highwaymen or burglars. Surely a professor might be spared to examine the question. Three months ago the phenomenon became apparent in series of highway robberies perpetrated on women; then the women took to highway robbery on their own account; now a woman is credited with the discovery of a burglar, and the tale is still untold. What does it mean? Is it merely a manifestation of the love of notoriety which takes possession of womenkind in this salubrious climate or is it a result of the moral influence of the University student, which affects the most sensitive and sympathetic part of the community. I ask these questions in all seriousness, for the University cannot afford to be laughed at any more at present.

What devilment is the Hearst contingent up to now? On page 28 of the Examiner for last Sunday we read a paragraph heading as follows: "Several Ways of Looking at the President.—He is Identified as Assailant of a Four-Year-Old Girl, and Citizens Give Him a Beating Before he Can Leave Town." Of course, as an item of news, it is about on a par with the usual yellow press standards of veracity, as an example of cleanliness it will bear comparison fairly well with the short editorials, and its usual run of cartoons, and a sample of political amenities it does not come far behind its recognized method of warfare. The delightful part of it is its daring, its unblushing audacity. The news editor, I understand, is to have a raise in salary to mark the appreciation of his employers.

Father Yorke is keeping up his reputation. The Oakland people allow freely that he gives "the most original entertainments on this side of the bay." He did just the same thing in San Francisco. Anything "more original," or more—never mind, let by gones be by gones—than Father Yorke used to give would be so original as to be inhuman. I note; however, that he is leaving labor questions alone and is taking to negro minstrelsy. Not only are the good people of Oakland to be congratulated on the change, but the reverend father will doubtless find it a more agreeable occupation. In either role, whether of agitator or entertainer, he seems fated to provoke laughter.

The Pacific Coast Women's Press Association, the fame of which will live for a considerable time, in the satire of Ambrose Bierce is up against a stiff proposition. Suit has been brought against its members by an expelled member. She claims to have been expelled from the association without trial, owing to the jealousy of her fellow members. The fun of the thing is that the lady in question estimates the loss of social advantages of the Pacific Coast Women's Press Association at one hundred thousand dollars. Mrs. Foster, the lady in question, must have either a glowing imagination or a pretty wit; but what about the lawyer who commenced such an action?

The University is carrying out experiments looking to the formation of a silk industry in this State. Should success follow their efforts, the University authorities should be allowed to turn out a pretty fine variety of the fabric, for, goodness knows, the President is smooth enough.

A SWINDLING DEVICE.

The World's Fair at St. Louis is bringing out the usual crop of swindling devices and questionable schemes that follow in the wake of all great shows. The latest to come to our notice is a company that pretends to issue a "souvenir coin of admission." Mr. Morris B. Gregg and Walter B. Stevens, respectively Director of Concessions and Director of Exploitation of the Louisiana Purchase Exposition Company, have issued a letter which is countersigned by Mr. D. R. Francis, the President. In order to minimize the loss to Californians as far as it is in our power, we reproduce the warning letter below:

St. Louis, U. S. A., February 27, 1904.

Numerous inquiries have recently been received by this Company from newspapers, publishers and others, making inquiry about the "Louisiana Purchase Souvenir Coin Company," many of them asking whether the Louisiana Purchase Exposition Company is officially connected with such "Louisiana Purchase Souvenir Coin Company," or has authorized the operations of that company.

In reply to these inquiries, this company deems it proper to say that it has no connection officially or otherwise with the "Louisiana Purchase Souvenir Coin Company," and has given no authority or sanction of any kind to the operations of that company. The Louisiana Purchase Exposition Company has not authorized any individual, firm or corporation to issue any "Souvenir Coin of Admission," nor any ticket, certificate, or other symbol or device purporting to be exchangeable for admission to the Fair Grounds, and will in no way be responsible for same. Louisiana Purchase Exposition Company.

Every mail brings a number of letters addressed to the Louisiana Purchase Souvenir Coin Company. The Exposition has a Souvenir Coin Department, but has no connections with the company named or any similar company. The only souvenir coin recognized by the Exposition Company is the United States Government gold dollar, which is sold as a souvenir, but which has no relation to the admission of the visitors to the Exposition.

"What is meant by the best?" asked the latest arrival from Mars, as he stepped from his airship. "If you mean the best to eat, the best on earth, and you want oysters straight from their beds, succulent and fresh, go to Moraghan's, at the California Market." An hour after, the Martian was enjoying a fine cigar, and he remarked that there were "no better oysters on the planet," and the crowd endorsed this evidence of good taste in the traveler from afar.

THE BARD AND THE YELLOW PERIL.

The Bard of the Sierras
Has a grievance to relate;
His language teems with terrors
Of a sort I dare not state.
But the upshot and the zest of it—
Not to bother with the rest of it—
He has lost, and gone in quest of it—
His pay, which comes too late.

Three thousand silver dollars
Mr. Hearst proposed to pay,
If he'd wear the yellow collars,
And report the yellow fray;
If he'd brave the Chinese dragon,
With his whiskers and his flagon,
And write calmly, with no jag on,
What might happen every day.

And the Bard of the Sierras
Sallied out to do the work.
He conquered the ocean's terrors
And he showed no coward quirk.
He feared no foe terrestrial,
He faced the mad Celestial,
He endured their habits bestial—
Then Mr. Hearst did shirk.

So the dreadful yellow peril
Threatens Mr. Joaquin Miller,
And the bother and the worry 'll
Be a very lasting filler.
He has surely had satiety
Of the crude gamboge variety;
He's done with their society,
But I doubt he'll get the siller.

A Chat With a Mormon Lady

"Show me a Mormon is the inevitable request of one class of tourists—tourists are divided into two classes: the Cook-ed and the un-Cooked. The raw product expects a Mormon to sprout some distinguishing mark, like hoofs or horns. These people are grievously disappointed when they realize that the Latter Day Saints are cut after the same pattern as their Protestant or Catholic brothers. If the tourist has the open sesame, and is bid to a social function, he is sure to elbow with Mormons, for the bars have long since been let down in Salt Lake, so that the wealthy Mormon and Gentile may take his pleasure in the same pasture. It must be confessed that only the younger generation of Mormons grasp this privilege, and it is unquestionably true that the younger generation rarely enters into polygamy. So there is no chance to study plural wives at first hand in the smart set.

While in Salt Lake recently, I met a number of people at a tea whose names are as well known here as in Zion: The Salisbury, the Kirkpatrick, the Trumbo families were all represented. The affair was given by a leader in the Gentile set, but at least two dozen Mormon ladies were present. They were pointed out to me, and I managed to get one of them for a little chat a dieux in a cozy corner. This lady is a descendent of Brigham Young, a graduate of an Eastern college, and is married to a physician who took his degree at Ann Arbor. She has a fascinating manner and a modern mental range that can take high C in literature and G in art. She touched on subjects ranging from submarine boats to Satsuma ware, from Shakespeare to sewing classes. Afterwards I heard her lecture to the girls at the Zion University. "I am the daughter of a man who had five wives," she said, "and I know that the home life of my mother and my father's other wives was as beautiful as possible under monogamy. I wish I were a good enough woman to let my husband take another wife!"

The next time I met her—it was at a dinner given at the University Club—I braved a question on this delicate subject which Mormons rarely talk about to outsiders. "My husband does not believe in polygamy," she answered. "He would not take another wife if I begged him on my knees, and I have not yet reached that state of spiritual nobility, nor have I attained that divine spirit of renunciation necessary for polygamous relations. How charming the decorations are to-night!"

Which shows that, given a certain religious slant, no amount of mental message can bring the religious bent to the worm. This college-bred Mormon took her creed literally while many other Mormon women of her set, who had not had half the advantages in study and travel she had enjoyed probably accepted the spirit of Mormonism, but laughed at the letter.

The Mormons are very proud of those who achieve distinction in the fine arts. They are delighted over the success Clawson, the portrait painter, has enjoyed in San Francisco. I was asked about him on all sides, and was surprised at the detailed knowledge everybody seemed to have of his work. "Was his picture of that Miss Haydenfelt really a Bohemian Club star success?" "Did the portrait of the Tevis child achieve as much distinction?" were the sort of questions asked by people outside his own family. The Clawson family take up not a little of the census man's time, their progenitors all having had plural wives. This generation, however, has not taken the polygamy cue from their forefathers. It was a half-sister of Clawson who was the first wife of Governor Wells of Utah, but it was not until after her death that the Governor took a second wife.

The threat of disfranchisement which has tripped on the heels of the Reed Smoot affair as caused a merry tongue-wagging in the land of Much Married Saints and Some Sinners. Judge Powers, of Salt Lake, who is something of a jokesmith, created a ha! ha! by declaring that the Gentile half of Utah would at once turn Mormon. "We won't be able to get a man to serve on the juries in event of Mormon disfranchisement," predicted the Judge. "Every man who wants to get out of jury service will swear he is a Mormon! The average American would swear he was the shade of Joseph Smith himself to escape jury duty."

Dear Bessie: There is always something odd cropping up here, and the latest is the Chinese Prince who came in on the Gaelic last Sunday en route to St. Louis. He was the first royal personage we have had from the Flowery Kingdom, so Chinatown has been a sight to see—swept and garnished to do him honor, the decorations chiefly yellow, and the triumphal arches made that dingy quarter quite radiant, and it has really been one of the sensations of the week.

Were it not for cards, I fear some of the matrons of the swim would find these long afternoon hours hanging rather heavily on their hands while waiting for the time to come for them to pack up and be off out of town, and scarcely a day passes that one or two games are not played—sometimes more. Seven-handed euchre does not seem to have had its day in spite of the popularity of bridge and 500; it was played at Mrs. Pond's card party last Friday, which was voted one of the best of the season. Leontine carried off one of the pretty prizes and Kelcy Patterson another. Mrs. Frank Wilson had a big card party on Monday—a sort of house-warming for her new home, and Mrs. Shotwell had a little smaller 500 one in her rooms at the St. Dunstan the same afternoon. Mrs. H. M. A. Miller gave a luncheon, followed by six-handed euchre on Thursday, and there are no less than three card parties on hand for to-day. Mrs. George Gibbs, who has gone down South with the Kaness, closed her season in town with two very pleasant affairs last week; a bridge party on Tuesday, a game to which she is "perfectly devoted," and a tea on Thursday, both given as adieus for Mrs. Kane and Stella, who have been with her most of the winter.

While there is not so much doing in town just now, there are quite a number of little affairs being given across the bay, both in Oakland and Sausalito, as well as at San Rafael. Laura Prather gave one of her charming little studio teas last week, and Mabel Mason had one for Rebecca Dixon, who is to marry Arthur Chambers ere long. I had a lovely time at the Findley tea in Sausalito last Saturday—charming weather which brought out many pretty spring costumes, and how glad every one was to see Carrie Merry again. We had a hop at the Presidio the night before, but it was a garrison affair, and not one of those the 10th intended giving, but was pleasant all the same.

It has been rather slack this week in the amusement line; there are always theatre parties both large and small, and I suppose I can class "His Royal Nibs" as the chief event of the week, both on Thursday and last night, at the Alhambra. Mr. Greer Harrison auctioned off the boxes and best seats last week, and nearly every one was on hand to give it a good send-off, with the usual adjuncts of dinners before and suppers after. I expect there will be a crowd in the Sorosis Club rooms this afternoon, when the Chrysanthemums hold their bazar and fete for their free bed at the Childrens' Hospital. You know, most all the girls belong to them in one way or another, and have worked hard to make the affair to-day a success. There will be booths for fancy work, candy, tea, ices, a fish pond, and a musical programme which Laura Taylor has arranged—the hours are from 4 till 6, and I can't begin to tell you all who have promised to be there. Then there is the Horse Show at Burlingame to-day, too, but it will draw another kind of a crowd, though some I know hope to do them both.

The St. Francis is now the great place for theatre dinner and suppers—yes, and for luncheons and teas, also; Mrs. Rudolph Spreckels, Mrs. Bergovine, Mrs. Ed. Baker and Mrs. Tim Hopkins had luncheons there last week, and Mrs. Joe Tobin a dinner; Mrs. Jack Wilson gave her luncheon last Tuesday—which was for a lot of girls—in the Palace Palm Garden. They were all talking of the Mohican's coming back so unexpectedly, and the hope of some more of the jolly little parties on board which are to memory so dear in the recent past. Admiral Glass is looked for in the near future from his cruise, and in anticipation of his coming, Mrs. Glass has returned from Coronado, where she has been for several weeks, and is at the St. Francis. The St. Louis Exposition is going to attract a lot of our people by and bye, and all who go East are to take it in either going or coming. Jennie Blair and her brother, and Anita Bertheau and her brother, are among those who will soon be off there. The Jack Wilsons have gone to do the Grand Canyon of the Colorado, and will be away till early in May. The Herman Shainwalds are home again—arrived on Monday—so we are hoping ere long to have a peep at all the pretty things in the way of table ornaments which she is said to have picked up during her travels.

Hattie Currier is to be married a little sooner than was intended, and the wedding is named for next Thursday at her home on Pacific avenue, with only the family and most intimate friends present. Dolores Wilkins is to be maid of honor, Jane Barry of Oakland and Mary Nichols of Chico bridesmaids; Charles Gardiner is to be Walter Hale's best man. They go East for their honeymoon. Kate has been telling me of the pretty wedding Miss Elizabeth Doyle and Lieutenant Parker, U. S. A., had last Monday. It took place in St. Matthews' Church, San Mateo, at half-past ten in the morning; she said the bride looked lovely in white silk, point lace, and long tulle veil; and her sister looked equally well in a pink and white costume and large white hat. The men attendants were all in the service, of course—Lieutenant Hickox, who was the best man, and Lieutenant Potter and Lieutenant Farrell, who officiated as ushers.

Don't you remember my hinting to you several weeks ago of Marjory Gibbons' engagement to Lieutenant Shinkle? To be sure, I gave no names, as they did not wish it to be known so soon, but I thought you could make out who I meant. The engagement is now, while not formally announced, so well known I need not hesitate in mentioning it, but I believe the wedding will not take place just yet awhile; the death last week of Marjorie's grandmother, Mrs. Raymond, may influence all arrangements in a degree. He is much liked in the service, and quite popular, and she—as you know—is a dear. There are two other engagements talked about—those of Marjorie's cousin, Elsie Dorr, and Hazel King, and 'tis said it will be only a question of a short time before they are formally announced. Alice Rutherford will not be so long behind her sister Emma in becoming a matron as some people seem to think, as news of her engagement to John Erving of New York has been received here this week, so Mrs. Crocker will be happy at having both her daughters married and settled so near at hand.

The 11th Cavalry has come and gone, leaving for its new quarters during the week. We were glad to have Jakey Haines here for a bit—it seemed like old times to see him round again—for he was here a few days before his regiment arrived on hand to welcome its home-coming from the Philippines.

The Garceaus, who have spent the winter at the Richelieu, have selected the Hotel Rafael for their summer locale; Mrs. Garceau is rapidly winning the distinction of being one of the best bridge players in society, and if, as I hear, bridge is to be the game most played at the Rafael this summer, she will be most happily situated. The W. G. Irwins go East next Monday, and will be away all summer; Helen goes with them. Bessie Ames, who has been with her sister in Boston the past month, is, it seems, going to Europe before she returns home; some appear to think it is on trousseau thought intent, as there have been whispers that way for awhile past; she sails the last of May. Helen writes me that Azalia Keyes is just a mite tired of Europe, and coming back to spend the summer on Long Island with her cousin Eleanor, who expects her almost immediately; Kate Salisbury Keyes is down at Paso Robles with the mater. The O'Connor girls are going to Paris with the Robert Boyles, who left yesterday; Mrs. Jimmy Keeney and her daughter have gone on a trip East.

The Dennis Searles go to Menlo Park for the summer; the Athearn Folgers have already left town for their country home at San Mateo; Charlotte Russell is to spend part of the season with the De Sablas at San Mateo, where they have taken the old Howard place now owned by the Martins; the Jack Wilsons are going to spend the month of May and June in the Yosemite Valley and the vicinity, and may possibly be away even longer; the young Sam Wilsons are going to a cottage in Mill Valley for the summer; the Fred Fenwicks have joined the Ross Valleyites this season, and will be among the cottagers there. —Elsie.

THE RED LION INN.

The busy man of affairs will now find a fine restaurant at moderate prices right in the heart of the business district. The Red Lion Inn, situated in the San Francisco Stock Exchange Building, is easily accessible from Pine street, and from Bush or Montgomery, through the Mills Building. Ladies and gentlemen who desire a certain amount of neatness and artistic surroundings with their meals will find this at the "Red Lion." There is a spacious dining hall capable of seating several hundred people at one time, and the prevailing tone of the place is one of subdued richness. The woodwork is in old oak, and the walls are in a dark mellow red. The gas fixtures and the hat racks, in fact all the metal work is of special pattern and finished in bronze green. The table service is very fine and the grill and kitchen appliances are designed on the latest sanitary patterns. There is also a nicely appointed bar run in conjunction with the restaurant. Try the "Red Lion" to-day.

VACATION DAYS AT HOTEL DEL MONTE.

Society and all people interested in healthful recreation are planning to go to Del Monte earlier than usual this season. The spring days there are delightful, with wild flowers covering the hillsides, the golf-links a wonderful carpet of green, and the surf just right for swimming. A number of families have already engaged quarters for the season, and others will arrange doubtless before the first of May. Next month there will be an automobile tournament, and during the summer, as usual, the hotel will be the center for all sorts of out-of-door sports. Under the new management, this favorite resort promises to become more popular than ever.

There is no property within easy reach of the center of the city of San Francisco that will increase as rapidly in value as the section immediately adjoining Golden Gate Park. This is the ideal spot for the home-seeker, and whenever a sale is announced that gives one the opportunity to obtain this much sought after property at your own terms, the attendance is immense. Baldwin & Howell will sell at auction sixty-three home building lots on Parnassus Heights on Thursday, April 28th, at 12 o'clock, and there is sure to be a great crush at the sale. There is a branch office at H and 7th Avenue, and an agent on the ground who will show you maps and take you about the property. The auction will take place at the down-town office, 25 Post street.

They are always ready to deliver ice-cream and pastry—always the best, and their promptness can be depended upon.

—The Techau Tavern is the place to go after the theatre. It tops off the evening splendidly. The refreshments of all sorts are of the best quality and the price is reasonable.

Only a few weeks ago I referred to the illegal practice existing in the Police Department for years of requiring owners of stolen property, which has been sold to pawnbrokers by thieves, to repay the former the amount they claimed to have paid for the goods, before the owners could recover. Now comes Colonel Pierce, of Oakland, with a complaint that the police are trying to blackmail him in the very manner I described. Pierce's home was robbed. After considerable search, he discovered that the police had recovered his jewels from the pawnbrokers to whom they had been sold. He applied to the Chief of Police for his property, and was informed that he would have to settle with the pawnbroker before he could get back his gems. Pierce refused to be blackmailed, and sued out a search-warrant. Then the whole thing was tied up in the Police Courts in the mysterious manner so usual in those temples of justice. Whether Pierce has yet recovered his property, I am not aware. His experience, however, coming right on the heels of the exposure of the methods of the police, gives added strength to the News Letter's assertion of an urgent need of an investigation into the many violations of the law practiced by the police under the assumption of authority. The relations between the police and the pawnbrokers are illegal, and productive of crime. The police are acting as protectors of the receivers of stolen goods. This assertion is amply proved by the facts in the Pierce case. If the Grand Jury wants to keep itself busy, let it inquire into this affair and others of like nature.

News comes from the East that Al. Hayman, late of the old Baldwin Theatre, has retired from the theatrical business with a great fortune, and is now touring Europe in his $14,000 automobile. Hayman always was lucky. Even years ago, when he was running the Baldwin, and before he had made his later strong Eastern connections, he made money, as did no other local theatrical manager. But sometimes he lost it, too, which reminds me of this story:

A friend, meeting Hayman shortly after the close of the theatrical year, thought the impresario looked rather glum.

"What's the trouble?" he asked. "Isn't business good?"

"Oh, fair, fair," said Hayman; "but it might be better."

"Why, I thought you were doing a magnificent business," said his friend. "The street has it that you made a clear profit of at least $100,000 last year."

"What?" said Hayman, in tones of angry expostulation; "make $100,000! Why, the fact is, I lost $25,000 last year."

"I would never believe it," said the friend. "That is astonishing. How did it happen?"

"Why, see here," said Hayman; "year before last I cleared $100,000. That was good business. But last year everything went wrong, and I came out with a profit of only $75,000, a clear loss of $25,000 on the business of the previous year. So, you see, I am a loser to the extent of $25,000. But I will try to make it up."

And the friend went away slowly, thinking sadly on the losses of Hayman.

The Supervisors are quarreling over the distribution of the permits to the prize-fighting clubs. The latest phase of the question includes the so-called "amateur" clubs. Most of these clubs are fakes, impure and by no means simple, and the sole object of their promoters is to make money. The amateur clubs are not required to pay the same license as the regular organizations, consequently the amateurs are eager to get as many permits as possible. Of course, they do not comply with the law, for they pay their performers for going into the ring, and in other respects they follow the methods of the bigger clubs, each doing its utmost to get the most dollars from the pockets of the public. The financial interest of all the prize-fighting clubs has grown so great that certain Supervisors now devote more time to the affairs of the plug-uglies than to any other business before the Board. These Supervisors, of course, are "patrons of sport," and their activity in obtaining permits for their favorite clubs is not actuated by any consideration of the success of the financial investments of their friends. Of course not. In striving to strengthen the prize-fighting trust, the Supervisors are animated only by a desire for the public good. They are anxious to show their constituents in what high regard they hold the welfare of the public.

Lieutenant-Colonel William L. Pitcher, Twenty-Eighth Infantry, being left in temporary command of his regiment at the Presidio, thought he would make a tour of inspection, just to see whether it would be necessary to use his new broom. When he returned to his quarters, the Colonel was hot and muddy and angry. His eagle eye had discovered three old oyster cans and various scraps of paper in the company streets, and he had found slouchy-looking soldiers with unbuttoned uniforms sprawling in the cantonments. The Colonel immediately wrote an order which caused his subalterns to gasp. They have not yet recovered. He directed them to get busy cleaning house, and ordered further that until they had made everything clean and orderly, not a man-jack of them should leave the precincts of the Presidio. Then came petitions, protests and appeals, supplications, prayers and entreaties—all piled in and poured over Pitcher until he was nearly buried in the missives. He stood the storm for three days and then surrendered. Another attempt to make some army officers attend to their business had failed. Two Lieutenants, however, will be court-martialed, because they went down town from the Presidio, between the time when Colonel Pitcher began to consider the revocation of his order, and the hour of its actual revocation. The occasion demanded a sacrifice. To a serious man, engaged with worldly affairs, this terrible tempest over the discovery of a stray oyster can seems very much like "playing house." Army officers should keep their petty little squabbles to themselves if they would retain public respect.

"Uncle George" Bromley celebrated his eighty-seventh birthday last week, and for the eight hundred and eighty-seventh time he recited "When the Cows Come Tinkling Home." He may not be as young as he used to be, but his spirit is as gay as ever. Years ago, a stranger in this strange land, he was one of the party that sat around the board in honor of another birthday of Uncle George. Now this stranger had heard that on these festal occasions the wassail bowl sometimes flowed over. So he decided to be modest and to turn down his glass early in the game. Likewise, he had promised his wife to return to the hotel early. During the dinner the stranger decided that the best thing he could do would be to tie up to the venerable guest of honor, for "surely," he said unto himself, "that nice, old gentleman will leave this crowd of roystering young blades at an early hour, and I can escape with him." So the stranger lingered, lingered, lingered, and Uncle George and the cows made several trips up and down the "dingle, dingle, dingle," but the venerable guest of the evening continued to keep in good spirits. Presently the rays of the morning sun came peeping into the red room to see what was doing. Old Sol saw old Uncle George, and quickly moved along. About 6 a. m. the stranger, true to his original scheme, wandered forth with Bromley. They came to anchor at Lotta's Fountain, and watched the cars file by. The hotel was in sight across the street.

"Now for it," said the stranger. "It is sad to leave him alone and unprotected in the midst of the city's streets, but I must away. Mr. Bromley, I have had a most delightful time, for which I am your debtor. But now I must away."

"What, not going?" Uncle George asked.

"Yes, I must," said the stranger, thinking of the lonely wife.

"Well, what are you going to do the rest of the evening?" asked Uncle George.

And then the stranger fell upon his neck and wept.

Eight undergraduates have been examined at Berkeley to determine their qualifications for admission to Oxford in accordance with the provisions of the Cecil Rhodes scholarships. It is reported that every one of them failed in the preliminary tests in Latin and Greek. The questions were sent out from England, and they bowled over our young men in short order. Schoolmen are aware that the English schools give far more attention to the classics than we do, but that is but small excuse in seeking for an explanation of the failure of the representatives of Berkeley. These undergraduates have been instructed in Latin and Greek, and if their instruction had been thorough, it would seem that they should have acquired enough knowledge to have passed the entrance examinations to Oxford in these branches. The tests, the Professors report, were no more severe than the usual tests for matriculation at the great English university.

Business men will see little, if any, cause for complaint in the inability of the Berkeley students to overthrow the problems of the dead languages, for they will submit the old argument that a knowledge of Virgil and Horace or Homer will be of but small assistance in accumulating dollars in the marts of trade. There are a few people, however, who are yet foolish enough to think that the piling up of coin is not the main object of man's existence. To these, the failure of the representatives of the State University will be cause for regret. It might be well for the Regents to look into this matter, for the collapse of Berkeley in the competition certainly indicates weakness somewhere in its structure.

PLEASURE'S WAND

A TRUSTY TIP ON THINGS THEATRICAL.

MAJESTIC—"The Crisis"—Isabelle Irving—A most enjoyable, artistic, smooth performance.

ORPHEUM—A very fine vaudeville show.

COLUMBIA—"The Four Cohans"—"Running for Office"—A refined enjoyable comedy.

GRAND—Kolb and Dill and other favorites—Crowded houses

ALCAZAR—A splendid performance by a well selected company—"The Frisky Mrs. Johnson."

CENTRAL—"The White Squadron." Enjoyable spectacular melodrama.

TIVOLI—"The Beggar Student."—Beggars description.

Miss Irving, at the new Majestic Theatre, is a great success, but she is no greater than her company of the play. "The Crisis," dramatized by the gifted author, Winston Churchill, is one of the best I have seen in many moons. Here is a company worth seeing, a play worth sitting down to and enjoying. It is a natural, sweet and most interesting piece of stage work. There is none of the Ibsen morality. It is a wholesome bit of Americanism. There are no problems that smell to heaven. It is a play that leaves a delightful memory. The management should come in for first praise. I have rarely seen such painstaking care in the setting of a play. You can easily imagine yourself away back in St. Louis in the strenuous days of the war, and you remain in St. Louis until after you wake to find yourself in San Francisco's streets again.

The piano, the tables, the chairs are old vintage. The costumes are a study from the fashion plates of the times depicted in the play. The scenery is good, the acting is splendid, the seats are comfortable, and the theatre, when finished, will be one of the finest in the United States.

Miss Irving as Virginia Carvel is a sweetly winsome conception. The rest of the company is very well balanced with the honors going to Mr. North as the Bostonian and to Mr. Thomas A. Hall's Colonel Carvel, who never forgets his part and lives it to the letter to the infinite enjoyment of his audience. The noble and refined character of the grand old Southron is depicted in a manner that must please the author.

If you want an evening of quiet, keen enjoyment that will appeal to your better nature and to your intellectuality, go to the Majestic and see "The Crisis."

At the Grand this week the principals are a howling success. The merry press agent is at work making capital for the Antipodean tour. There is a nice story of a ten thousand dollar guarantee or forfeit to be given by Winfield Blake that he will not wed on the Australian tour. It now remains for some one to fake up a story that Amber will not flirt with the Kangaroos, that Kolb will let the Ponies alone, and that Bernard will stop joking about his father-in-law. The chorus at the Grand has the Chutes amateur night "skinned to death." It is the fiercest thing that ever came over the pike in the way of ensemble work.

Fun fast and furious is the keynote of "Running for Office," the new risical frivolity presented for the first time at the Columbia. No better setting for the varied talents of the Four Cohans could have been devised. George M. Cohan is versatile, indeed. Not only has he written the book and the music, but dancing, singing, joking or gesticulating he is almost constantly before the footlights during all of the three acts of the play. Were it not that he is so ably surrounded by his father, his mother, his charming, sprightly sister, and the well chosen people who fill so adequately their respective roles, he could easily constitute the whole show. He is a host in himself. The Cohan family form a quartette of rare excellence, for nothing could be more effective than their ensemble playing. Josephine Cohan shows herself a sweetly natural actress, and a gracefully vivacious dancer. "If I were Mr. Morgan," "Sweet Popularity," and other songs and choruses were—with "I'll Be There in the Public Square"—sung effectively by Della Nivens—the musical features of the play. But it is the noise, the nonsense, the fun-engendering situations, the jollity, the hilarity, the costumes—all forming an irresistible, mirth-provoking medley—which leave their impress upon eye and ear long after the curtain is rung down. It is a fun-show which fun-lovers—may their tribe increase—cannot afford to miss.

Fischer's has a good show this week in "Chow-Chow." General Hardtack is a fine piece of work by Frank Kelly. Roy Alton gives some splendid acting as Beef II, a poor king who afterwards becomes a good cook. Helen Russell has not much to do, but what she does in "Chow-Chow" is well done. The rest of the characters are all well portrayed, and the piece is generally good without being extraordinary. The music seems very thin in spots.

The Tivoli boards are held by the "Beggar Student" this week. It is to be presumed the players are doing their best with Milloecker's opera. This is a case of where the best is like the worst. Hartman's Ollendorf was a very poor production, and the rest of the male cast is a bad second. Caro Roma sang well in the character of Laura, but her stage presence is becoming daily more markedly bad. The crowning incompetency of the whole thing is the singing and acting of Dora de Fillipe. Some one told this lady, many years ago when she was young, that she could sing and act, and she believed her informant. The result is to be seen every night at the Tivoli.

When Clyde Fitch wrote "The Frisky Mrs. Johnson," he dubbed it a comedy. This is where he made his mistake. It is a first-class drama with a fine vein of sarcasm and merriment thrown in. Some of the Eastern critics have been accusing Mr. Fitch of an adaptation from the French. These critics cannot have seen the play. It is Fitch's own, without a doubt.

The Alcazar company is an aggregation of the most versatile artists in the United States. This was shown at no time to better advantage than in "Frisky Mrs. Johnson."

Miss Block and Miss Starr shared the honors in their respective parts, and Miss Block's acting, in the parting scene between herself and brother Jim (Mr. Durkin), was a sample of some of the very high order of emotional work this lady always has at her command. She suffered from a frightful cold, which, was scarcely perceived by the audience, and through the whole week she held herself right down to her fine acting. Mr. Conness was at his best, and it is a relief to know that he can play the good man as well as he can the villain. There was but one rift within the lute, and that was the Dindeau of Osbourne. There is a soupcon that Osbourne's French pronunciation was acquired at a young ladies' seminary. He pronounces French words with the fluency and correctness of a Pomeranian peasant.

At the Alhambra, "His Royal Nibs" scored a great social success on Thursday evening and last night. It has been arranged to give Maud Adams a big reception in Salt Lake City on the arrival of her special. CORRESPONDENCE INVITED.

The Minister of Foreign Affairs

The Science of Lying.

Russian diplomatists have always been considered astute politicians and masters of the art of statecraft, and for a half a century the war establishment of the Empire has stood at the front of the European nations for ability of management. But for all that, neither Russia's diplomatists nor her war ministers have failed to see that the multiplicity of facilities for the transmission and distribution of current events have enlightened the world so much that all attempts to play upon the credulity of the public and mislead by deliberate falsehood resolve themselves into boomerangs. In the face of scores of able and critical newspaper correspondents, and their graphic descriptions of current events, which are promptly flashed over the wires to every commercial center in the world, St. Petersburg Government officials occupying the highest places in the State persist in falsifying every report of conflicts in the war zone. To such an extent has this practice been carried that even the truth is discredited when coming through Russian channels. Immediately after every clash on land or sea, an overwhelming defeat of the Japanese and a great victory for the Russian is claimed and announced. Already more Japanese warships and boats have been sunk, according to Russian reports, than Japan ever possessed, and several land engagements have been fought in which the ground was covered with dead and wounded Japanese, and all the wonderful events happening without the correspondents or even the Japanese soldiers knowing anything at all about the happenings. Such deliberate lying is not only belittling to the St. Petersburg Government, but it is sure to disgrace it in the estimation of decent people the world over. If it be true, as is intimated, that the public mind in the Czar's empire is in such a state of unrest and dissatisfaction that the people have to be bolstered up with greatly exaggerated reports of Slav victories, to prevent a revolution, the moral sense and patriotism of Russians are at a very much lower ebb than was supposed. A wise Government would know that sooner or later the people would get all the facts and know how unjustly they had been deceived, which would be likely to incite them to acts of violence that might end in the overthrow of the empire. But likely the fault lies mostly with the officials on the ground, who purposely falsify the situation to deceive St. Petersburg. Certain it is, no field commanders ever took more pains to have "favorable mention" or "puffs" of themselves in the world's newspapers than the Russian Generals at the front. At the beginning of hostilities the News Letter pointed out how lying reports and self-puffed generals was likely to become a weakening process which would pretty well demoralize the Russian soldiers in the field and the Czar's subjects at home. Thus far the campaign of the Russians has been one of boastings and altogether amateurish.

Instead of countermarching out In Thibet for of Thibet for good and all as ordered by the Llama, Great Britain is re-inforcing the Thibetian army of observation from India, the viceroy undertaking to garrison Thibet from details from his own contingent. And since only mild protests from the other powers have been lodged against England's intentions north of the Himalayas, it may be accepted as a practically consummated fact that for all time to come British influence will be behind the Thibetian Government. In this connection it may be of interest to know that the area of Thibet is nearly six times that of California, and that the country is adapted to grain growing and stock raising; that in those respects it is superior to Canada, and that the country offers rare advantages to white home-seekers. And since the present population is only about 7,000,000, mostly worthless religious fanatics, immigrants will find plenty of room for farming and stock raising on a large scale. No doubt the London Government will see to it that a satisfying tide of immigration is headed that way. There is some surprise at the Kaiser's acquiescence in Great Britain's policy to add more than 800,000 square miles of Asiatic territory to her Indian possessions, but it is not believed that Germany has any promise of British moral or any other kind of support should she attempt to enlarge her own territory in the Far East. It seems to be a case of "can't help it" with the Berlin Government; besides, the reorganization of the British army by doing away with the army corps and putting the entire military force upon the divisional plan of organization, may be engaging so much of the Kaiser's attention that the Thibetian affair has escaped his notice, for the new basis of England's army organization means that there has been an awakening in military circles to the necessity of complete preparedness on all possible lines of the science of war for any eventuality.

Our Own Affairs. Our own outlying possessions are in a fairly good state of peace, but not so much can be said of their commercial or moral prosperity. All of them, however, are clamoring for so much of a modification of the Chinese Exclusion Act as will permit them to rely upon China for plantation labor under contract. Labor union organizers have reached most of the island territories, and planters as well as merchants are fully aware of the fact that it will be merely a question of time until they will be face to face with organized labor and all that it implies. Hence it is that they are anxious to take time by the forelock and be prepared to meet the tyranny of organized field labor by a sufficient force of Asiatics who will contract their service for a specified number of years, thus making it impossible for organized labor to take advantage of the pressing needs of matured crops and advance wages beyond the ability of the products to pay. In our Porto Rico Island the crop-devastating hurricane continues to make farming an uncertain business, but barring that the island gives promise of large and profitable crops of all kinds of ground products. A good many Americans are already there, and driving ahead in agricultural ventures, and it is they who are demanding of Congress a modification of the Exclusion Act. Hawaii is gradually increasing in population, individual wealth and civilization, but it is a good place to keep away from unless one has capital to invest, or to risk, rather. The Philippines are still in a state of unrest because the natives are not over anxious to be "beneficently assimilated," but Americans and the better class of Filipinos are gradually placing the agricultural and mining industries upon a reasonably strong basis, and on the whole, the outlook is fairly promising, but the entire products of the Archipelago would fall very far short of paying the expense of the maintenance of the military establishment that is required to keep the "old flag" flung to the breeze. There is hope in Washington, however, that the time will come when the wisdom of buying the Archipelago will appear in a more convincing way than it yet has, although Spain's books show that 400 years trial by the Madrid Government failed to show anything but an annual deficit for the islands. Our Panama Canal venture is still a perplexing problem. A clear title to the franchise and right of way is by no means assured, which, together with the enormous steals already provided for and the great annual cost of military and naval protection that will be absolutely necessary in the event of the canal being constructed, are cooling the sometime canal enthusiasm of our people. Still, the syndicate is powerful in political influence, and the project will be a fact sometime.

Flo Adler, the mezzo-soprano who toured with Remenyi, the great violinist, for two seasons, and who has also sung with many noted opera companies in the East, will make her first appearance at the Chutes the coming week. Bowers and Curtiss, presenting their farcette, "Where is John," and Huston, the comedy juggler, will also be new. Alberta C. Hadley and Helen Archer will introduce specialties in their comedy sketch, "The New French Maid"; little Ruth Roland, the talented child, will change her songs and dances, the three Malverns will continue their graceful and daring acrobatic exhibition, and the animatoscope, showing the latest novelties in moving pictures, will conclude a varied and attractive programme. The amateurs will appear on Thursday night, and an electric May pole dance will be given Saturday, Sunday and Monday, April 30th and May 1st and 2d. Many rare animals have recently been added to the zoo.

Melbourne McDowell, who is said to be a changed man and a much improved actor, will open on May 1st at the Grand with a support headed by Constance Crawley, of Ben Greet fame. This clever woman will be remembered by theatre goers as one of the "Everyman" Company. McDowell will give us a batch of Sardou plays.

The "Still Alarm" should fill the Central all of next week. It is a melodrama that has always drawn crowded houses, and while there are many of the hypercritical and the blase who would not enjoy the "Still Alarm," there are thousands of others who will gladly hie themselves to the home of melodrama and come away thrilled and satisfied. The Central is the Mecca of the seekers of strenuous actioned denouements.

The Tivoli will give us a week's season of "When Johnnie Comes Marching Home." It is more than probable that there will be a large attendance. This opera, if it may be so called, was immensely popular in its former long run with the patrons of the beautiful Eddy street house.

* * *

"The Runaway Girl" will succeed "When Johnnie Comes Marching Home" at the Tivoli.

* * *

"Chow-Chow" will have but a brief run at the house of Fischer, as the intention is to close soon for improvements.

* * *

Caroline Hull is to succeed Miss Russell at Fischer's.

Next week the Roger Brother's advance sale of seats will open at the Columbia. The date has been changed from Thursday to Wednesday. This company travels by special train, and it is a very large one.

Lew Sully, fun-maker extraordinaire, has been dubbed "President of the Laugh Trust." It is said he can spread contagion in his audience by cracking a smile.

At the St. Francis, the bell hops have been living on the fat of the land since Anna Held came to town. Miss Held regards the bell boy institution as one of the glories of the American Republic. Her Secretary extended an invitation for two nights to the boys for the front row of the orchestra. It is needless to say that the hotel Mercuries appreciated the compliment. Anna gave a dinner on last Saturday to her entire company at the Saint Francis.

The four hundredth consecutive week of the Alcazar stock company will begin Monday, April 25th, with "The New Clown" as the attraction.

Irene Palmer, under the direction of Hugo Mansfeldt, gave a highly enjoyable piano recital at Steinway Hall on Thursday. This child gives wonderful promise, and it is to be hoped that an undoubted genius will not be spoiled by the necessary overwork to develop her into a professional child prodigy.

The Kolb-Dill-Blake-Bernard Combination are playing to large houses at the Grand. "Fiddle-Dee-Dee" will hold the boards until Wednesday night; then comes a change to a double bill, "Whirl-i-Gig" and the "Big Little Princess."

Frederick A. Gower, brother of the Duke of Tacoma, Nordica's first husband, escaped the bonds of matrimony by the balloon route, and was not heard from again until last week, when he is said to have turned up in Paris. Mr. Doehn, the diva's present husband, whose name is strangely like a swear word, with a Belgian twist, is seeking a divorce, and the suggestion is made in one of the daily papers that he will use the re-appearance of number one to influence the court. This is an "unfair shop," and there should be a statute of limitation as regards gents of a roving disposition who take aerial flights. It is decidedly uncomfortable for women of a domestic tendency, doehmed if it isn't!

HOW OLD IS ANN?

If it has taken the laboring element about 8 years to find out that three dollars and a half and an "open shop" is more than four and a half under the union, Schmitz, Ruef and Casey, how long will it take him to get back to a condition where he can save a little money for his wife, his children, and his old age?

BY THE AUTOCRANK

Now comes the news that the Automobile Club of California will give a race meet and show next month.

This will be a very important event, as it will have a great bearing on the future of the pastime and sport in California, especially in and about San Francisco. There is no doubt but that the automobilists of the Southern part of the State will make a success of their part of the automobile races. But last year showed the local men that they will have to look to their laurels. They tried Barney Oldfield out last year for a record, money spent, nothing doing! The South raised the price and Oldfield made the world track record for Los Angeles. So it is up to the officials of the local automobile club to retrieve the name of San Francisco from its worthy competitors of the lower part of the State.

Considerable comment has been caused by the suggestion of the continuation of the great highway south to Half Moon Bay. It is one of the things that the Supervisors of this and San Mateo County should give considerable consideration. What could be suggested in the way of a road that would be its equal.

American Darracq Automobile Company is considering several applications for the agency of this machine, but have not as yet decided upon who to bestow the privilege of representing the famous machine.

The Darracq, with King of Belgium tonneau, is one of the handsomest and most satisfactory machines ever built.

The Locomobile Company of America has just been advised of some excellent work done by a four-cylinder touring car owned by M. E. Gaines of New York. The car was shipped to the Pacific Coast, and a tour made in Lower California, covering 2,600 miles. During this entire distance, absolutely no attention was given to the machinery, except to substitute a few clean spark plugs, and at no time on the tour did the engine stop once of its own accord.

The Mobile Carriage Company reports the sale of a Pierce Arrow touring car to Mr. Jafet Lindeberg. Mr. Lindeberg was one of the first discoverers of the great gold fields in the vicinity of Nome, and since his return to business he has taken an active interest in automobiling.

Mr. G. A. Boyer of the National Automobile Company has just returned from the South, and reports the following sales of four-cylinder Pope-Toledo mile-a-minute cars: George M. Pullman, Tracy Drake, Michael Cudahy, E. W. Davies, Mr. Aler-ton, M. A. Gunst, George P. Fuller, E. E. Peabody, L. P. Lowe, Marshall P. Harris, and James L. Flood.

The great garage of the Mobile Carriage Company is nearly filled with machines, the company having made provision in order to give the owners first-class service. The company permits no novices Permission to hold the English elimination trials for the international cup automobile race on the Isle of Man has been granted to the Automobile Club of Great Britain, and the fifty mile course will be covered six times by the aspirants for the honor of representing Great Britain in the trying speed test over the German course.

The Mobile Carriage Company has just sold a Stanhope, through its Los Angeles branch, to Mr. A. P. Fleming, secretary of the Los Angeles Automobile Club. Mr. Fleming is touring Southern California, making trips as far north as Santa Barbara. He reports satisfactory results, and is delighted with his new purchase.

A Pierce Stanhope has also been sold through the San Francisco house to Mr. Jeffries of Fresno. He is in the fruit shipping business, which requires him to make daily trips through the country, calling on farmers who have goods to sell. There are in Fresno now about forty Stanhopes.

The Mobile Carriage Company furnished the automobiles for the Prince Pu Lun, the nephew of the Emperor of China, and his routine of servants. By special permit, the automobiles were run on the Mail Dock, from where the visiting party was escorted through Chinatown, the trip ending at the Chinese Consulate.

Mr. and Mrs. Heber C. Tilden have spent several days touring in their Pierce Arrow, in the vicinity of Byron Springs. The trip from Oakland, a distance of 75 miles to the Springs, was made in a little less than three hours.

The Mobile Carriage Company has just received another carload of two-cylinder Arrows. These are finished in royal blue, and provided with Mercedes hoods and Whitlock radiators. Orders for these cars are increasing, and this shipment will soon be sold.

The Bullet No. 2 is unquestionably America's greatest and most successful racing car. It won 26 track races last season, broke every world's track record from 1 to 15 miles, won the world's mile straightaway championship in competition from Wm. K. Vanderbilt, Jr., and lowered the world's one mile straightaway record, also in competition, to 43 seconds.

During the past week Buckboards were sold to the following: Mr. J. Craig, Woodland; Mr. J. S. Miller, Dayton, Oregon; Mr. F. E. Baker, San Mateo, a one-time yachtsman; and Mr. E. C. Schnabel, San Francisco.

A. C. Aiken, the attorney, has just purchased a White touring car. Mr. Aiken will be remembered as having been one of the first to take an automobile into the Yosemite.

Dr. E. E. Kelly, President of the State Medical Association, has purchased from the Mobile Carriage Company a Pierce Stanhope. Dr. Kelly has a large practice which calls for the use of several horses. After carefully computing the expenses of an automobile such as the Pierce Stanhope, and the time saved, he has come to the conclusion that he could not afford to be without an automobile.

A telegram was received by the Pioneer Automobile Company, from its Los Angeles Branch, to the effect that a carload of the curved dash Oldsmobile runabouts had arrived there; consequently there is great rejoicing at the home office. A carload of these runabouts is due to arrive in San Francisco Tuesday or Wednesday. The 1904 machines have several new improvements and an increase of two horse-power.

Mr. E. J. McCutcheon made the trip from San Francisco to San Jose and return last Sunday in the White touring car, taking the road on the Alameda County side, and going over on the nine o'clock boat. The trip was taken in easy stages, and yet the party made the four o'clock boat on the return.

Alexander Winton has again demonstrated his loyalty to American motoring interests by announcing his willingness to enter the Winton Bulletin No. 2 in the Gordon-Bennet cup race. When Mr. Winton was told that the Automobile Club of America had decided to re-open the Gordon-Bennett entries, because the American team remained incomplete, he immediately expressed his willingness to supply the deficiency, notwithstanding his earlier determination not to have Winton racing cars compete abroad this year. If the A. C. A. accepts Mr. Winton's entry, the Bulletin will be manned by Harry Owsney, who has succeeded Barney Oldfield as Mr. Winton's racing representative.

During the past week the Pioneer Automobile Co. have received orders from their country agents for Oldsmobiles as follows:

Stockton Automobile Co., Stockton, Cal., three curved dash Runabouts and two tonneaus.

Hanford Agricultural Works, Hanford, Cal., one curved dash Runabout.

P. J. Steiger, Petaluma, Cal., two curved dash Runabouts.

F. S. Jacks, Napa, Cal., one curved dash Runabout and one tonneau.

George H. Osen, San Jose, Cal., four curved dash runabouts.

Three Stevens-Duryeas were shipped this week into Oregon, and orders have been received from Washington for two 1904 Winton touring cars, which will go forward the latter part of this week.

Dr. C. B. Brown, of Portland, recently shipped his White touring car from that city to San Francisco, and has been touring in California. After a few preliminary lessons in the operation of his car, he went out unassisted, and ran from San Francisco to Los Angeles, touring the country in the vicinity of Los Angeles.

President E. P. Brinegar, of the Pioneer Automobile Company, makes the following announcement, viz: "The company has purchased from Mr. L. E. Lee, at a valuation of $95,000, the real estate on which their new garage is situated. They have also purchased the business of the Oldsmobile Company of Southern California, which embraces Los Angeles and all surrounding territory. The business in Southern California will be in charge of Mr. John F. McLain and Mr. Leon Shettler. Mr. Shettler has purchased a substantial interest in the Pioneer Automobile Company. Under this new arrangement, the company will have the Pacific Coast agency for the Winton touring car, Oldsmobile, Locomobile, Stevens-Duryea, the Georges Richard-Brasier French cars, and the Vehicle Equipment Company's Electric Trucks, etc.

The international cup race is for a challenge trophy offered by James Gordon Bennett for an automobile race over a distance of about 300 miles. Three cars from each country are allowed to start, but the cars must be manufactured and every part of them made in the country that they represent. The country winning the trophy keeps it until the following year, and has the privilege of having the next race on its own grounds. Last year it was won by Jenatz of Germany, and the year before by Edge of England.

America's trials will take place at Ormond, Florida, and the tremendous strides in manufacturing automobiles here warrants the belief that his country will secure high honors in the contest abroad, albeit we don't bring back the cup. The French trials will be held over the Ardennes Circuit during May.

INSURANCE

The insurance world, at least that part of it which is engaged in life insurance, knows of Mr. Gage E. Tarbell, the author of monthly letters to the agents of one of the companies among those known as the "three giants." He, not content with writing on insurance matters, has climbed over the prosaic fence which is supposed to confine the domain of cold-blooded life insurance business, and has run riot in the orchard of poetry and drama. He has lugged dear old "Parsifal" into the insurance business. Here is what he writes during one of his recent monthly attacks: "The American public have heard much of Richard Wagner's great music-drama, "Parsifal," recently. Even those who have given it the most superficial study are impressed with the fact that it was a tremendous undertaking, but few probably know that it was only by indefatigable industry that Wagner scored the work in three years, notating with his own pen about one million three hundred thousand characters. Think of it! Think of the labor involved in any great task that comes to your own mind, and then ask yourself if there is any reason why you should be an exception to the universal law." Shades of Wagner, "think of it," "think of it"—think of any man desiring to point a moral and adorn a tale of life insurance by citing the career of that guileless fool (parsifal).

Mr. Stanley Forbes, the General Agent of the Mutual Life, is on a brief trip to Southern California.

Echoes caused by the Conservative Life Insurance Company's field day convention have reached as far as San Francisco. It lasted for almost a week, was largely attended by the leading managers and agents of the company, and so far as heard from, it was a brilliant success. The company is advertising California and itself by these annual gatherings. It gave a trip to the Catalina Islands, and the glass-bottomed boats were used by the guests as well as other glass bottoms not boat shaped. The leading citizens of Los Angeles met the visiting guests, and the banquet given by the company as a finale to the convention is reported as having been among the most prominent social affairs ever known in Los Angeles. A round dozen of the San Francisco leading agents of the company, headed by Mr. Fred Bennion, were present, and the northern part of the State held its own in oratory and courtesy with that of the Southland.

Mr. Flitcraft, editor of the Insurance Courant of Chicago, passed through San Francisco to attend the Conservative Life Insurance Company's convention at Los Angeles, and Mr. C. D. Drew of the Denver Insurance Report was also a passing visitor pilgrimaging to the same Mecca.

It is understood that a solid fire insurance company, hailing from some place near Chicago, contemplates securing the services of Mr. Hall, who was so prominently connected with the Thuringia. Another rumor is that the re-insuring company has recognized the value of his services, and made overtures to retain him in its employ.

* * *

It is said that Mr. J. G. Conrad will decline the offers made to him by other fire offices to take a company to replace the Thuringia and that he contemplates retiring from the active representation of any fire insurance company whatsoever. This will be a loss to the fire underwriters, as Mr. Conrad's counsels and diplomatic ability have helped to smooth over more than one rough place, and this within the memory of those who are nearest to the workings of the inner circle of the leading managers.

The new fire insurance centre, Pine and Battery, begins to take on an air of business which leads to the supposition that, after all, the business follows the company, and that more than a good office location is needed to get a good business.

The Austrian Phenix is to move into the new Board of Trade building as soon as it is completed.

* * *

It is understood that Mr. Stovel and Mr. Bates went East to secure the agency of the Rossia, and it is further rumored that they stand a chance to get it. The Rossia deposited with the Insurance Department of New York and with its American trustees, United States and New York city bonds of the par value of $500,000, and the market value of $564,000, and complied with all other necessary requirements and was duly licensed. The company is one of the leading insurance corporations of the Russian Empire. Mr. Carl F. Sturhahn is its United States manager. The United States trustees of the Rossia are Mr. Hugo Schumann, president of the Germania Fire, Mr. Hubert Cillis, vice-president Germania Fire, and Mr. Isaac Seligman, the well-known banker.

The fire extinguisher fake is exploited by an insurance journal as follows: "A form of fire extinguisher now extensively sold under various fancy names substitutes for the solution a dry mixture of salts, usually in a long tin tube. The contents generally consist of common salt and bicarbonate of soda, of course in their cheapest commercial forms. Such a fire extinguisher, making a liberal allowance for the cost of the tube and the brilliantly colored wrapper with the picture on it, probably costs the manufacturer about fifteen cents; it is sold for two dollars, although if you work hard you can beat the agent down to twenty dollars a dozen. The mixture is, of course, fairly effective for extinguishing a fire if thrown directly on the burning material, and at a reasonable price such extinguishers are good things to have around." The News Letter, however, holds to the idea that a hose attached to a faucet and properly used, is better than any extinguisher as a sort of ad interim fire killer pending the arrival of the fire department.

If you ask ten persons where their nearest fire alarm box is located and where to find the key to open it, maybe you would be surprised to find that not one of the ten people to whom this query was propounded by the News Letter man knew anything about it, and the whole ten of them were in the fire insurance business, and eight of the ten said call the policeman.

Baltimore fire—Yes, Baltimore did have one, but it, like the Rochester fire, is forgotten.

Considering that San Francisco is now discussing the advisability of furnishing an auxiliary salt water system for fire protection, it leads to the conclusion that there is nothing new under the sun.

Relations of Capital and Labor

It is the opinion of many of the leading financial and business men that the present strained relations between capital and labor are a menace to the continued prosperity of the country. A very clever and interesting treatise dealing with both sides, is printed in the Bankers' Magazine, by Charles N. Chadwick. This able writer says:

"The terms capital and labor must be understood to mean combinations of capital and combinations of labor in their restraint of trade. In other words, they relate to the industrial situation of the country; and the question must be viewed as a whole, not from the standpoint of capital alone, nor from the standpoint of labor, but from the standpoint of the body-politic.

"Capital and labor as such, are instruments in the development of the industrial resources of the country; good and proper instruments and capable of doing good work, if handled understandingly, wisely and well, but destructive instruments when used by an ignorant, careless and indifferent hand."

"The tendency to consolidation and centralization of power is marked and rapid. From the trust, or combination of individual firms, through various stages of consolidation, pooling and lease, we now have what is known as the holding corporation, organized to acquire and hold stock. It does not deal in stocks, it holds them, and is an effective method of controlling several corporations. It can perpetuate control of corporations through the minimum expenditure of capital for maximum control. In other words, it controls the company which controls the corporation, and the flower of this plant is the controlling director, as destructive a force to the industrial world as the walking delegate of the trades union.

"The particular evil flowing from this rapid, evasive and changeable form of combination of capital from corporations through trusts into holding corporations is the tendency to the destruction of free institutions, and is repugnant to the instincts of a free people, and contrary to the whole scope and spirit of the Federal Constitution. It is doubtful if free Government can exist in a country where such enormous amounts of money are allowed to be accumulated, to be held and to be used by the few against the interests of the many. It is destructive to the fundamental rights of the individual and to that free competition which is the life of business.

"The power of the State to make, ordain and establish all manner of wholesome and reasonable laws, statutes and ordinances, is adequate, and wild-cat corporating, like wild-cat banking during the early history of our country, can be domesticated under Federal supervision and control. Quasi-public corporations can be made to be rid of the water in their stock and to put on a sound financial footing, and the public thereby be protected, not only in the investment of stock, but also be benefited by the proper operation of public franchises.

"The shortsightedness flowing from the greed and avarice of capitalistic monopolies has, on the other hand, encouraged labor organizations of various kinds throughout the country to come into existence and adopt various methods of organization, some responsible and some irresponsible, in the attempt to create another great monopoly to secure the control of that monopoly which has already been brought into existence through and by means of capital.

"Combinations of capital have sought to secure their ends through finesse, evasion of the law and intellectual acumen, while combinations of labor, on the other hand, are seeking to secure their ends through physical violence and the application of brute force.

Methods of the Labor Unions.

Unionism claims the right to dictate to the employer regarding the matter of employees. It declares that non-unionism shall have no place in the field of labor. It asserts that the non-unionist secures the benefits of all that is accomplished by organization, but pays nothing and contributes nothing for the welfare of the union. Therefore the non-union man should be deprived of the right to earn his living.

"The Anthracite Coal Strike Commission declared that no person should be refused employment or be in any way discriminated against on account of membership or non-membership in any labor organization.

"Under date of September 30, 1903, the executive council of the American Federation of Labor, Samuel Gompers, President, in an address to the Organized Labor Union of America, states: 'That the right of the non-unionist to work when, where and how he pleases, carries with it the logical right of the unionist to work or refuse to work when, where, for what he pleases and when he pleases.' Will this claim of the Anthracite Commission and the admission of the American Federation of Labor stand against the order of the walking delegate?

"If the labor union is to solve within itself the problem of labor, it must take into consideration two facts: First, that it has become a destructive force in the industrial world; and, second, that it might be a constructive force.

"Intended through organization to secure amelioration in the conditions of the laboring class by means of higher wages and better hours, it has degenerated, except in some notable instances, into a great machine governed by a bureaucracy dominated and controlled by the walking delegate.

"As a unit, it has found that it can control legislation, and, conscious of its power, it crushes obstacles with brute force. Unreasoning and unreasonable, it requires an immediate acquiescence to its demands. Incapable of sanity of judgment, it cannot view the problem as a whole, but sees in part and demands all.

"The socialism of Germany, the anarchism of Russia, now being interpreted by the Southern European mind that does not understand the institutions of our country, is slowly but surely dominating the labor situation.

"No longer the Puritan and Cavalier who founded this country and established its institutions upon settled convictions, are in control; no longer the sober common sense of the American character, at the front so long, is dominating. The new element that has come to us during the last twenty years seeks to substitute a socialistic labor organization for our civil government. Strikes, direct or sympathetic, boycotts, unfair lists, picketings, bullying and blackmail are tools of force; while inferior, careless and indifferent work are the results of a standard whose measurement is the labor of the slave, and not the capacity of the free man. Greed and avarice of the grasping monopolist are elements of destruction; while a scared and weakened conscience is a fruitful cause of decay in business integrity.

"These causes, added to an inordinate desire for wealth and power, now hold the American character in solution. Is it not, then, high time with the passing of the walking delegate, to leave to him all things that work for destruction, and to turn the power of the labor union toward the construction of the industrial life of our great commonwealth? The thinking minds of the labor union, the men of courage and conviction, must come to the front and take upon themselves the burden of responsibility."

"In the matter of education, the labor union should draw into its ranks the youth of the country. It should throw down the barriers and open the doors to all who desire to learn trades and become artisans. It should devote its surplus funds to the establishment of training schools for these young men and women. It should insist upon it that boards of education should establish technical schools, so that the young women may be trained into a knowledge of the theory and practice of the trade that they have elected to pursue. No longer the guilds of the Middle Ages, with the apprentice, the journeyman and the master, can solve the problem of hand work. Machinery has changed the industrial condition of the country. The man who enters the shop to-day becomes attached to it and is part of the machine, learning to do one thing well, but with no opportunity for learning the business as a whole. Therefore, he must obtain a knowledge of his trade beforehand in a school established for that purpose, and the certificate or diploma granted by such school should be sufficient to guarantee to him the right to practice his trade without fear of molestation. The diploma of the lawyer or of the doctor, with the license to practice his profession, is sufficient to insure to him the undisturbed practice of his profession, and no combination of professional unions of lawyers or doctors would be for a moment tolerated which insists that unless he joins this or that particular organization he cannot practice his profession. This same liberty should hold good for the carpenter, the engineer or the artisan, whatever his trade.

"And particularly the labor union should take into consideration in its educational work the necessity for practical training schools in the technique of trades or arts. To-day, in almost all trades, specialization begins at once, and the result is a one-sided man incompetent except in that one thing in which he has been taught. Piece or section work makes this unavoidable, and unless he has mastered the theory and practice of his trade before entering the shop, he never will. Hence the necessity for the all-round training of the artisan school. Will the labor union eliminate the walking delegate and turn its attention from the destruction of the industrial resources of the country to their upbuilding and reconstruction?

There must be a constitutional solution of the industrial problem. The fact that labor unions are not incorporated does not necessarily prevent a jury from holding them responsible for injuries to a third party when the injuries complained of are the result of the act for which the union is responsible, for the law will assume that where responsibility exists compensation be made, as stated in a recent decision of the United States Circuit Court of Indiana."

And offset the haughty ones reckoned above them.
All of them gentlemen, winners or no,

The Outlook of New York tells a story of two church workers from a small town who came to New York on a slum hunt, and were more than satisfied. One of them was asked by a friend on her return where she and her husband had been. "In the slums of New York for a day and a night," she answered, enthusiastically. "My dear, it was hell upon earth. We had a splendid time!"

Kate—Charley and Bessie are very fond of each other. Bertha—Rather say they are both very fond of Charley. It is a case of two souls with but a single thought, you know.

There was no doubt of it; Mr. Hunter had lost the "field." He had searched for his companion fox hunters long, but vainly, and now he was reduced to asking the aid of a chubby little lad of three whom he met in a lane. "Hallo, Johnny! Which way did the hounds go?" he queried. Johnny sucked a finger and dropped his gaze. "Come," coaxed Mr. Hunter, "don't be afraid; here's a penny for you. Now, tell me, what way did the hounds go?" The youngster took the coin and then fell upon all fours and bow-wowed. "Dat way," he said shyly.

Scene—A musical instrument shop. Master (who is going out to branch shop, to boy)—Now, my boy, if a customer comes and wants to look at a piano, flute, banjo or mandolin, you know what to show him? Boy—Yes, sir. Master—And if a customer should want to see a lyre— Boy (interrupting)—I'll send at once for you, sir.

"Do you smoke cigarettes?" asked the business man. "I don't use tobacco in any form," replied the applicant for a job. "I didn't say anything about tobacco," exclaimed the business man, testily.

NO MINERAL DRUGS

A speedy and positive cure for RHEUMATISM in all its forms. This remedy was given to Mr. Tom Threlfall upon one of his visits as mining expert to the country inhabited by the Cocopah Indians and he was shown how to compound the remedy from native herbs. He was cured of his rheumatism and has cured several prominent citizens of San Francisco, who have been on crutches for years.

The Political Situation

Both sides in the Democratic camp continue to make claims of how many delegates they will control at Santa Cruz, but really nothing will be known until the primaries in the cities on May 3d have been held. The State outside of the cities is overwhelmingly against Hearst; but he will certainly carry a majority of the delegation in this city, and Mayor Snyder, having publicly joined his camp, is doing all he can for him in that locality. Unless Hearst wins out, Snyder does not go to St. Louis, and if he is defeated for candidate at large there is no hope of his looming up as a Gubernatorial possibility two years hence. The rest of the "push," who rather foolishly, as they now admit, came out for Hearst at the State Committee meeting, are in the same fix, and they recognize that it is Hearst or oblivion for them. Either Governor Budd or Maguire will preside at Santa Cruz if Hearst wins the majority of the delegates, and Cammenetti is to be chairman of the Committee on Platform. Ed. Leake expects that honor if his side is successful, and Barry hopes to be in the Convention, too, though he cannot get in there on a proxy, and Tarpey is going to do all he can to defeat him as a delegate at the polls. Barry will undoubtedly have the fight of his life at the primaries.

George Hatton tells me that the Oxnard boom is looking most encouraging. There is absolutely nothing in the rumor that the Southern Pacific and other influences are opposed to his man, and think of switching to Bard. "They would not have Bard under any circumstances," Hatton says, and he ought to know. He does not think there is any danger of Judge McKinley coming out as a candidate, and he is not afraid of General de Young. As for General Otis, his opposition, Hatton feels assures Oxnard's election. Oxnard is expected home very shortly, and then he will issue a pronouncement and open headquarters and begin his campaign in earnest.

I hear via the Examiner office that Livernash will not be a candidate again for Congress. If Hearst is nominated and elected, he will have a far more exalted place, and if the Chief goes down to defeat, the smaller fry will devote themselves to journalism and stirring up discontent. Of course, there is another side in this latter part of the programme, and that is the ability of Hearst to keep his papers going after the Presidential contest is over. He is spending money like water, and one Washington correspondent estimates that he has already spent $2,000,000, although I am inclined to think that is an exaggeration. He is, however, making most elaborate preparations for his delegations and hangers on at St. Louis. He tried to rent the whole Planters' Hotel for the time of the convention, but could only get three floors, and has rented two more floors and a half at another hotel at a cost for both hostelries of $3,500 a day. He is to bring a very large clique with him from all parts of the country, and any one of position or influence and weight in Democratic or Labor Circles can get to St. Louis free of cost if he will agree to work and shout for Hearst. Special trains are to take delegates and shouters to St. Louis, and their bills are paid while there. It is estimated that Hearst's expenses at St. Louis will be over $10,000 a day, and that with the other expenses he is paying, that convention week will cost him half a million. While it is understood that he is receiving some family assistance, his expenses are so enormous that a collapse is predicted by those who are in a position to know what his resources are; and a gigantic financial failure may follow the political catastrophe.

It will be necessary, if these rumors are true, that he and his followers devote themselves more to business and less to politics, and that is the explanation of Livernash's retirement. But if he wins out, then everybody will be taken care of, which leads to the inquiry: "How can any man expect to recoup himself for the expenditure of $3,000,000 out of the Presidency and do it legitimately?" Evidently this country would be a second Russia with Hearst in the White House and Livernash, Long Green Lawrence and Carvalho handling the financial end. Carvalho, by the way, is the head of the new corporation which has possession of the Hearst papers. He is a portuguese who practically owns Hearst and who controls him in every particular except that so far he has not succeeded, notwithstanding his utmost efforts in making him break with Lawrence. The name of the corporation is the Star Publishing Company, and it is nominally the owner of the Hearst New York papers. All those particulars are of interest as showing how Mr. Hearst does politics and the class of men who surround and control him, and who would rule him if he were elected.

I may mention incidentally that the news from the East received by the anti-Hearst Democracy does not point to Judge Parker as strongly as it did last week. Undoubtedly the indorsement which he received at the hands of Grover Cleveland has hurt him in the South, and if there was any one else who had a chance to carry New York, Parker would not get the Southern vote. Those who fancied that Cleveland would have been elected if he were nominated must be convinced now that they were mistaken. The hatred of the only Democrat who has sat in the White House since Buchanan is so intense in the South that it would probably bolt and nominate some one else if he were to get the nomination at St. Louis. While Cleveland would carry New York possibly with the help of the Democrats and Wall street, he would lose Southern votes if any other Democrat were put up against him. Hearst could beat the ex-President in the South beyond doubt.

It is this uncertainty that makes Lane, and those opposed to Hearst, prefer an uninstructed delegation to St. Louis. They argue that California should be free to avail herself of the opportunities that will arise when the delegation reaches the convention, and that to tie the hands of the delegates is suicidal. Leake is now spoken of as one of the delegates at large on the anti-ticket, and he favors no instructions. If Hearst is defeated at Santa Cruz, Lane will be once more the biggest man in the Democratic party of California, though he will not be a candidate for vice-President, as the Brooklyn Eagle avers, for the simple reason that, being a Canadian, he cannot be.

Charley Shortridge is announcing everywhere, in a voice that can be heard far and near, that he expects to get the Republican nomination for Congress in the Fifth District, and that he will conduct another cyclone campaign, with traveling choruses, perambulating pianos and other side-show attractions; I learn from other San Jose sources that there is not the slightest chance of his being allowed to exhibit himself in the character of a Congressional candidate this year, and that Santa Clara has about all of his services as a representative anywhere that it desires, now that he is a State Senator. There are the two sides of the story and you can choose which is the most likely to prove correct.

The Second District has not yet gotten into shape so that it can be definitely settled who will get the Republican nomination; Bell of course gets the Democratic. The chances of the Republicans winning are much better than they were, as Bell made a bad break in the interests of the saloon vote in Napa County. For years there has been trouble at the Soldiers' Home at Yountville, with the old soldiers who would go to the neighboring saloons and get full, and were abused and badly treated. The death rate rose alarmingly, and the management of the Home put in a canteen to suppress the disorder, and furnish good liquor at reasonable rates, and under proper restrictions on the grounds. That change has entirely broken up the local saloon business, and the saloon keepers appealed to Bell, who put a proviso in the bill appropriating money for the Home that it should receive nothing from the Federal Government if it kept up the canteen. The Grand Army has taken up the matter, and recently at its Los Angeles meeting denounced the Bell amendment and has appealed to the Senate to defeat it.

The Veterans are going to do all they can to defeat Bell, whom they say cares more for the saloon vote than for the health and lives of the old soldiers, and a very strong movement against Bell is already on foot, and will make it very difficult to re-elect him.

RAFTS Furniture

"Simplicity is the one thing needful in furnishing, of that I am certain."

WILLIAM MORRIS

Furniture to be of that true use for which it is intended should be remarkable for its simplicity, fine proportion, honest material, sound construction, and harmonious colorings, and whether much adorned, or severely simple, it should have all that old excellence of design and execution so marked in Medieval craftsmanship. Besides which the lines should be natural and frank, clean and secure, dignified and convincing, rhythmic of strength in every part, superlatively excellent, and combining rare brilliancy with true expression, and having nothing of that lifeless and monotonous touch, so peculiar to the machine-made kind of to-day. Such furniture too has both moral dignity and sanctity, and yet withal a modest spirit of self-approval, being of both plainness and boldness of spirit, speaking frankly and standing for what it is. It has a strong subconscious influence upon the character, teaching lessons of simplicity and strength, and so advancing the general culture of the community, and strengthening that appreciation of art which ever makes for happiness. It is as the spoken word of a text.

CHARITY AS AN AID AND ABETTOR OF CRIME.

A noble institution is the Fabiola Hospital in Oakland. It is excellently conducted by a group of women about whose goodness there has never been and never can be any question. And yet every year this institution is the beneficiary of "Fabiola Day" at the Emeryville race-track. Every year these good, God-fearing women are the patronesses of "Fabiola Day." If they do not know that the money which comes from this annual benefit to their hospital is blood-money, the wages of sin and shame, then they do not read the newspapers; they must shut their eyes and stop their ears to what is going on about them; their ignorance is not to be excused. But if they do know what devil's mint mark is on the coin they take from the California Jockey Club, and knowing, square it with their consciences by complacent sophistries, then theirs is an easy religion and theirs are comfortable consciences. We believe that they do know a part of the truth, and that they hold to the theory that money has no morals—"no dirt sticks to a dollar" is the vulgar way of putting it—but we cannot think that they understand fully the real nature of the bargain. In cold truth, when this ring of race-track gamblers hands over a day's net earnings to the Fabiola Hospital, it is paying for protection—paying these good ladies, their husbands and all their associates and friends to keep silent when outraged public decency complains of the iniquities of race-track gambling.

Fabiola Hospital is mentioned here not because it is the only institution thus dragged in the bloody ooze of the racetrack, but because it is the most conspicuous. Every other charitable concern that accepts the money of the California Jockey Club is equally censorable, equally a participant in this carnival of debauchery. All these institutions are managed by the women whose lives are given to caring for the sick and succoring the needy, women so blameless in deed and thought that the spectacle of their alliance with the monstrous evil of turf gambling is one to sicken the souls of thoughtful men.

To-morrow, doubtless, many of the good women who control and conduct the Fabiola Hospital and the kindred establishments which accept race-track benefits, will sit in their pews at Church. While they search their hearts, let them think how their names have been blazoned as "patronesses" of this or that "day" at Ingleside or Emeryville; let them think what they have given or tacitly promised to give in exchange for the turf-ring's bright pieces of gold; let them think how the gamblers got the gold, how it was stolen from the cash-drawers of trusting employers, filched from the hard-saved hoards of wives and mothers, squandered in gambling where it should have bought clothes for naked little bodies, shoes for naked little feet, food for hungry little mouths. Let these good women think, as they pray for the erring and the unfortunate, of the men with shaven heads and striped garb in San Quentin and in Folsom. Let them think of the young man at San Jose whom race-track gambling converted from a good citizen, husband and father into an outlaw, shot down by the police for his desperate crime; for it is not impossible or improbable that some of his last dollars are among the $3,500 netted at the last "Fabiola Day" at Emeryville.

THE POWER BEHIND THE THRONE.

Refusal by the Superior Court to let the Police Commission act as a collection agency, calls to public attention again a semi-judicial body which ostensibly regulates municipal matters of minor importance, but really is the point of application of corrupt pressure upon the largest sources of "graft." Controlled absolutely by an administration which overlooks no possible penny of tribute money, the Police Commission is a most important factor in the game which Mayor Schmitz and his associates are playing. Its actions with regard to the granting and revocation of liquor licenses are theoretically reviewable in the courts, but practically its powers in this direction are autocratic. The dive-keeper or saloon keeper who would go to law over a license refused or revoked would thereby stamp himself a fool. He might enforce his rights, but they would do him no good. As a matter of fact, nobody has been found foolish or stubborn enough to "kick against the pricks" when the Police Commission has issued its fiat.

And vice does not flourish in brothel or gaming den, or saloon or "restaurant," or anywhere, without the adjunct and stimulus of whiskey and beer. The primrose path is poor walking without irrigation. So, holding the license power, the Police Commission constantly has Vice up against the wall, and Vice either pays or quits. It is whispered constantly, and it is often audibly charged, that the Commission gets a direct "rake-off" for every red light that twinkles in the tenderloin, but the indirect tribute is the preferred method. Thus we see Police Commissioners who were laborers a little while ago, men of no means and no credit, breaking into prosperous business—insurance, for example—such as other men win only after years of effort and expenditure. It would be a stupid "red-light" proprietor who would not hasten to insure and over-insure with a Police Commissioner just launched in business.

To complete the "squeeze," it is necessary to have policemen both discreet and honest—discreet in knowing when to be blind and when to see, honest in being able to collect and pay in the tribute without losing any of the "change." It would be possible to secure such discretion and honesty by giving the patrolman his little percentage, but it would be expensive, so there is another method for that. Recently three down-town policemen were charged with negligence in being off their "beats." They were promptly dismissed. The next week two residence patrolmen were caught similarly offending. They were fined in small amounts. Obviously this is a cheap and effective method of securing a discretion and an honesty up to the Police Commission's requirements.

And this is only a lifting of the lid. The pot bubbles merrily, and soon the lid will be off altogether, and we shall have the "widest open" city in the United States, so prosperous, withal, that Police Commissioners will be owners of rows of flats and fat bank accounts. The weather signs indicate the approach of a severe storm of scandal which will soon be central over the Hall of Justice.

THE STRIKE AND THE LAW.

At this writing, the street carmen of this city are on the verge of a strike. They have rejected the proposals of the United Railroads, and have asked for a conference, but the outlook for peace is very gloomy. The General Manager of the road says the corporation has nothing more to offer; the men say they have not received proper consideration; the probabilities are that when this issue of the News Letter is published, the men will be on strike, transportation will be greatly impeded, if not stopped temporarily, the entire city will be inconvenienced, and stories of lawlessness will find their way into the daily press. This article is not concerned with the rights and wrongs of the controversy between the railroad company and its men; both sides have presented to the public long and able arguments, and the people have made up their minds on the matter. Incidentally, it is public opinion that the men are in the wrong; that they have asked too much; that they are inconsiderate of the rights of the company; that they are arrogant in their treatment of the public, and that their strike (if they strike) will fail because it does not appeal to the people. But the News Letter is concerned far less with the success of either contestant in this controversy than with the maintenance of law and order during the conflict. The recollections of the teamsters' strike are yet too strong in the public mind to view without alarm the arising of conditions which, it seems certain, will lead to many crimes of violence. In saying this, the law-abiding course of the carmen during their strike two years ago is not forgotten. But at that time their grievance appealed to the people; they had public sympathy, and they went about the business of gaining redress in what was apparently a fair-minded spirit. But now their leaders, flushed with the success of yesteryear, have lost their wisdom; they have led the men into a morass in which their struggles will only make more certain their own destruction. As the case becomes daily more hopeless for the men, some of them will attack the non-union men and the property of the company. To prevent destruction of property and danger to life, all the forces of the city Government will be needed. That brings us to this question: If necessity should require the protection of the property and of the lives of the employees of the United Railroads, what would the Police Commissioners do? Would they extend the protection of the Police Department to all citizens, irrespective of political affiliations or class distinctions? In brief, do the Police Commissioners stand ready to uphold the law?

We would not be alarmists, nor do we wish to intimate that the carmen will resort to violence, but observation has shown that the Carmen's Union is controlled by a few daring spirits, who may have among their more intimate supporters more than one man who believes in resorting to war measures during a strike. These men should remember that this is a law-abiding community, and that the day of the thug has passed in San Francisco. The people expect the street cars to run for their accommodation whether the union men strike or not; that the cars will run, and that the public will ride on them goes without saying. It is also certain that if the city officials find themselves embarrassed between their love and their duty, when it comes to the enforcement of the law, a way will be speedily found to relieve them of the terrors of the situation by calling upon the State or the Government for aid and protection. It is to be hoped that the Police Commissioners will not be untrue to their oaths of office.

MENDOCINO IS LIVERNASHED.

The people of Mendocino County have been Livernashed. Because of the envy and malice which fills what he may consider his soul, Hearst's personal representative, by the lifting of his raucous voice, has prevented the consideration in Congress of the bill introduced by Representative Bell, opening to homestead settlers a tract of 63,000 acres carved out of the Round Valley Indian reservation. This bill is fraught with importance to California. It is acceptable to the Indians, to the settlers, to the people of Mendocino, who see in it a means whereby their county may gain immediately a large increase of desirable immigrants, and to everybody concerned in its passage. So well had Representative Bell presented its merits to the House Committee on Public Lands that it had reported unanimously in favor of the bill. To facilitate action upon it, Bell had obtained the permission of Speaker Cannon to call up the bill out of order. Now, to consider a bill out of order requires unanimous consent. Bell had the support of the Speaker of the Committee, and of the members of the House, with whom he has gained a large measure of popularity because of his earnestness, modesty and common sense. He did not doubt that unanimous consent would be granted, and that, in consequence, he would be able to secure the passage of the bill before adjournment. When Bell called up the bill, for a moment no protest was made. Livernash was waiting for some one else to object; but no objection came, and the Speaker was about to announce that unanimous consent had been given, when the voice of Livernash was raised in objection. Under the rules, that one objection, animated by envy, jealousy and malice, and uttered with an intended disregard for the welfare of the people of this State, prevented consideration of the bill.

The question naturally arises: Why did Livernash object to the consideration of this beneficial measure? He, like Shylock, can give "no plain reason," except "a certain loathing and a lodged hate," he hears Bell, that he "carries thus a losing suit against him." Livernash hates Bell because the latter possesses those characteristics which commend him to his fellow men, and the absence of which in Livernash sets Hearst's man alone and apart. Livernash proudly hoped to be the leading light from California, but Bell so easily outshone him that the Fourth District misrepresentative went wild with envy. He announced that he would not vote for any bill introduced by Bell. The latter submitted a bill for the building of a collier at Mare Island. Livernash promptly opposed it, but the bill was passed, and the collier will be built, notwithstanding the opposition of the "eccentric" self-styled friend and champion of labor.

The actions of Livernash in Congress are at least consistent with his course in this city before his election. While posing as the friend of the union men, he was caught by the union pickets making purchases in boycotted stores. It then took all the influence he could gather to save him from the condemnation of the unions.

But Mr. Hearst's assistant recently gave forth one evidence of good sense. He said he would not be a candidate for re-election. Of that there is no doubt. Even the subservient part of the Democracy or the frequently fooled labor men will draw the line at his renomination. If he should, by some hocus-pocus get a nomination, the people of the Fourth District will attend to his case. As an exhibit of the wonderful freaks of nature produced in California, he easily takes the prize.

Scratch a Russian and you find a Tartar. Scratch a Japanese and you get your nose punched.

IF HEARST SHOULD BOLT.

It must be very evident to those who indulge themselves in the delectable occupation of reading Mr. Hearst's local paper that that great man is preparing to bolt the Democratic convention at St. Louis if he does not receive the nomination for the Presidency at its hands. There would, of course, be nothing strange in the distinguished plagerist taking such a course; indeed, it would be more remarkable if he did not attack the nominee and platform of the party he pretends to belong to. Fidelity to party or obedience to the decision of a party majority, whether expressed in convention or elsewhere, has never been characteristic of his methods. It is a policy of rule or ruin with him, always and usually it has been a policy of ruin.

But the distinguished citizens who are clamoring so loudly for his endorsement at the hands of the California Democracy should not lose sight of the fact that in asking that Hearst be given the delegation from this State to St. Louis, they are asking their party to put a premium on party treason, and are placing a party in this State in a position where it may be formally taken out of the party entirely. If the delegates to St. Louis are pledged to Hearst, will they walk out when he gives the signal? And if so, in what shape will they leave the Democracy of California, who still believe in fidelity to a party organization? If the Democrats nominate their national leader without any votes from California, will not that cause a split in the party in this State which can never be healed?

A delegation to St. Louis pledged to Hearst will mean that the Democrats of California are for him first, last and all the time, and that if Hearst is not nominated and he leaves the convention, California Democracy has repudiated the party and left it. No other construction could be placed, nor will be placed, on the attitude of the Democrats of this Commonwealth if they sent Hearst men to St. Louis and the delegation walks out of the Convention. The men who go to St. Louis are supposed to represent the entire, or at least the majority of the Democrats of the State, and if they take part in the Convention, which Hearst evidently proposes to hold to organize a new party with himself at its head, will it not mean that the majority of the Democrats of California have joined the new party?

But more than this? If the Hearst men get control of the Convention at Santa Cruz they get control of the party machinery, which means that they will have it in their power to so manipulate things that they will nominate the Presidential electors. The anti-Hearst faction will then be forced to put up a ticket by petition, if they can get the necessary number of signatures, and they cannot put the names on the official ballot as the "Democratic Ticket," because under the primary election law, the Hearst ticket will be able to claim that name and place. That would mean an immense loss of votes to the anti. It would practically wipe them off the political slate in this State, and they would be at the mercy of the Hearst wing for years to come.

THE CORRUPTION OF UNION OFFICIALS.

It is no secret that many of the labor bosses are corrupt, that they sell out and defraud not only the firms, with whom they are supposed to have agreements, but the very men whom they are supposed to represent. The following story of the happenings in one particular union recently will illustrate this fact: Local 19 of the Painters' sent delegates to the Building Trades Council. The delegates of this union were opposed to the boss of the Building Trades Council, McCarthy, an individual who had been frequently compared with the notorious Sam Parkes of New York. The delegates of the union in question made themselves obnoxious to McCarthy by insisting upon the books being expeted, proper account being rendered of money, investigation into the actions of the officials, and of McCarthy in particular. This sort of thing did not suit the boss. Investigation is not in his line, and he took steps to destroy the opposition.

His creatures formed a clique in the union, and on the evening preceding the election of officers on December 28, 1903, issued a defamatory letter, then proceeded to stuff the ballot-box, and in spite of the protest of the decent element, elected three officers.

This action met with such opposition that on January 4th, 1904, a meeting was called to protest against the action of the McCarthy element, and a special meeting was arranged for January 11th. At this meeting two squads of police were introduced by the McCarthy faction, but the police, seeing who were the real aggressors, and that they were being used for factional purposes, withdrew, and the faction of the boss was beaten by majorities running from one hundred to two hundred.

Subsequently a general mass meeting of all the painters' unions in the city was called and attended by over a thousand men, and this meeting decided by a unanimous vote NOT to accept the McCarthy faction.

Now, one would imagine that the ordinary boss would have been content to have accepted conditions, but he had arranged beforehand with the General Executive Board at Lafayette, Ind., that the delegates of the faction opposed to him should not be seated in the Building Trades Council, and a letter from his creatures in this city bearing date January 16, 1904, says: "Should the neutral faction sway to their side on the 18th, they will elect the delegates to the D. C. of P. and the B. T. C. We are safe in the B. T. C., for that body will not seat those delegates."

Of all the perils to the well-being of the State, there is none greater, as a matter of fact, there is none so great, as the labor-boss, for he combines all the vices of the mere boddler, with the more dangerous and destructive powers of the politicians who use their strength for unholy purposes.

LIBRARY TABLE

A few years ago, a very few years ago, probably not more than ten, the name of a leading firm of publishers, printed on the title page of a book, was sufficient to give that book a certain place in the literary world. It might be a popular success or not; it might make money for the publishers and the author, or it might go into the limbo of forgotten works, where it would have plenty of company. But whether it was destined to play a conspicuous role, or to sink into obscurity, the name of the publishers was a guarantee that the book was at all events grammatically written, that it obeyed to a certain degree the canons of literary art, that it was not crude, amateurish or absolutely worthless and without skill.

This has all been changed now. The publishers, even the best of them, even those whose names have become famous through the distinguished writers they have introduced, and the standard of literary achievement which they have maintained, have joined the mad rush of the more adventurous, and produce books, as one presses cheeses, so many per day. There is this difference, however, The cheesemaker must keep a standard or lose his trade; the publisher, on the other hand, debauches the public taste, and actually thrives by doing so.

This melancholy condition is partly the result of the machine for type-setting, which has made the mechanical side so much easier. A machine which is not employed is eating its head off, and the linotypes must be kept going, turning out the fodder for the asses called the public. Who knows what book may catch on? Who can say whether that which appears to be the trashiest may not find the largest sale, and a large sale means many dollars, and publishers are very human. Again, there is an increasing tendency on the part of publishing firms from whom better things might reasonably be expected, to publish at the expense of the author. When once this is done, all standards are thrown ruthlessly to one side, and the reader, the only protection which the public has against the attempts of the ignorant, is victimized. The result of this deterioration in the standards of publishing firms is that the name of the publisher now means simply nothing as a guarantee of the excellence of the work, and the critic's desk is littered with a pile of trash, bearing the names of publishing firms whose reputation was formerly simply beyond question.

Life in a Garrison Town.

There is a translation of the title of the work, "Aus einer kleinen Garnison," by Lieutenant Bilsle of the German Imperial Army, which book resulted in six months' imprisonment for the intrepid young author, his dismissal from the service, and no end of scandal, punishment and trouble for the people whose names figure in the work. Lieutenant Bilsle is only twenty-five years of age. He joined the army with an enthusiastic desire to make the career of a soldier his life work, and gave every promise of being a useful and able officer. He was sent to a garrison town, Forbach, on the French frontier, and there he discovered the material out of which he has formed his book, and which so disgusted him with military life that even before the authorities visited their displeasure upon him he had sent in his resignation and decided to have done with soldiering. The book, which is in fictional form, is not so remarkable for the fiction as for the facts upon which the story is built. As a story, it is not by any means an artistic success, although for a first novel by so young a man it contains not a few evidences of literary ability. The glaring fact is the utter brutalization of the German army in the frontier posts under present conditions. The military life throws the officers back upon their own resources, and unless they are unusually intellectual men, all sorts of intrigue and vice soon prevail, and drunkenness and adultery become every-day happenings at the post. The non-commissioned officers, on their part, tyrannize over the men, resort to all sorts of low speculation and dishonesty, and by the driving of honest privates from their ranks by unjust punishment, swell the army of the social democrats, which a disgusted people opposes, to the army of the Kaiser. It is a strong indictment of the conditions in the Kaiser's army, and in spite of his six months' imprisonment, Lieutenant Bilsle should feel very pleased with the work which he has accomplished.

The Vineyard.

John Oliver Hobbes, known in private life as Mrs. Craigie, if it is not an impertinence to allude to the fact, has at last written a novel. Her former works were remarkable more for their skill in the handling of the conversation of the cultured, and for that elusiveness of treatment of which Mr. Henry James is past-master, too much past, in fact, for he occasionally passes the understanding of the intelligent and careful reader. John Oliver Hobbes was always readable, now she is more than that—she is actually fascinating; one could always be sure of entertainment at her hands, but she gives us in this book more than entertainment, and succeeds in the task which the really serious novelist always undertakes, of making her readers do some independent thinking and form personal judgments. The theme is a somewhat bold one. Given a handsome and eligible young man, attractive and personally charming, who has been a soldier, moreover, and won the most coveted of all distinctions, the Victoria Cross. Such a young man fails and proves himself a poltroon, and all for lack of moral force and consistency. It is a true story and a virile one, though not without its faults for the same tendency to over-elaboration and psychological analysis which was the distinguishing mark of her former work, still hangs about it. If prophecies go for anything, her next novel should be a landmark in modern fiction.

Ore Selling at a Discount.

If any one outside of some market manipulator can assign any intelligent reason why Ophir should sell for $5 with fluctuations in advance of a few cents, with the mine looking better than ever before in its history, now is the time for him to arise and speak. It is satisfactory to realize, however, that ore is bound to tell in the long run, and that no one ever gets something of value for nothing. At latest accounts the ore in the 2,000 level in the N. E. drift is improving all the time, the grade being even higher in that extracted in opening up the drift than that found above in the ground now being stoped on the 1850 level. The 3,000-foot level drift is now extended to within 125 feet of the Mexican lines, the 1850 level being within 300 feet. Work is now about to begin in the Northeast drift from 2500 level of Con.-Cal.-Virginia to tap the ore found above on the 2150. From the way things look now it should not be long until the fact is determined whether or not the same body of ore now running through Ophir goes into Mexican. From all appearances it should be safe enough to say that it does, but it is safer to await developments. It does seem strange, however, upon comparison of mining and market conditions, to find that values intrinsic and speculative are not appreciated by people, the modern representatives of a class that in the golden days gone by would have gambled on the drop of the hat, and would have simply gone wild over present appearances in Ophir. It must be remembered that the same people not so long ago let the mines of Tonopah slip through their fingers, so that one need not be surprised at anything they may do after that.

Peace Reigns at Last.

Chief Miller of the opposing clans in the San Francisco Gas and Electric Company, have won out, and, backed by two of his partisans, Mr. Miller will have a representation in the Board of Directors. It will not be a very heavy one, to be sure, but at the same time it is large enough to carry a good many reforms in behalf of shareholders. There should be no difficulty in cutting down the salary of the president and other officials. Five hundred dollars per month is enough for the President of this or any other corporation where he is virtually a figure-head. The only man worth paying in a concern of this kind is he who can either devise plans to make money for the company, or he who can inaugurate a plan of economy which is calculated to make money by saving it. All these propositions, including the manufacture of something else than the fitful yellow glare now on exhibition under the misnomer of gas, on dark nights in this city, and the extension of some civility to consumers, can be evolved through the benign influence of Mr. Miller and his associates, if they are so disposed.

A Mine Inspector Wanted.

From all over the Western country comes the demand for an Inspector of Mines, for an official who can be called upon by shareholders for reliable information upon properties which may be owned by them for the moment. The promoters of worthy mines will not fear the actions of an official of this character, as they will only be too desirous of having a report upon whatever mine they may be handling, and upon him will rest the responsibility for mistakes or exaggerations. Nearly all the mining regions of the West have suffered severely of late from the actions of thieving manipulators of mining stock. It has grown so bad now that it is almost impossible to raise money upon the very best class of investment. Once bitten, twice shy, seems to be the motto of investors, and the only salvation now is to have an official of this class appointed to supervise things generally and put a stop to, or a check, at least, upon the rascality which has been going on without any interference for a long time past.

Local Stocks and Bonds.

While there has been quite a movement in bonds on the local Stock and Bond Exchange during the past week, the demand has not been what it should be at this season of the year. Sales of stock have been light and in remarkably small lots. The strength seems to have kind of given out in Gas and Electric, the campaign movement having evidently ended. The funny way the stock has acted for some days past has been quite suggestive, the small short interest which was put out after each advance looking very much like "hedging" in an effort to play even financially by some one who seized the opportunity to sell some stock by lifting it, at the same time covering any possibility for eventual loss in speculative investment of coin by a small short interest. The California Gas and Electric Company did pretty well last month, according to its latest financial statement, the net earnings over all expenses and charges, including sinking fund, being reported at $27,912.60. There is room for improvement in the business on this board, and there is no reason why times should not be better with the commission brokers, as money never was more plentiful in San Francisco than it is at present.

Campaign Issues and Financial Conditions.

People interested in financial propositions are naturally discussing the possible action of markets of the country in view of the approaching election. While it is true that in many of the former presidential years a reference to statistics will show that the average quotations of all the leading stocks declined as the result of opening the campaigns; that bank clearings declined in 1888 and 1900 with less than normal conditions in 1892 and 1896, and that in every presidential year since 1860, except in 1880 and 1888, gold exports exceeded the imports, nothing so far has given any indication of trouble this year. AS OTHERS SEE US.

The San Francisco News Letter in its issue of today pops it to W. R. Hearst, the Democratic aspirant for Presidential honors, in a manner that would indicate that the aspirant is better suited as a candidate for Town Bull than a candidate for the office highest in the gift of the American people.—Angels Echo.

Now that Davenport, the cartoonist, is no longer in the employ of the yellow journalist, his pencil is playing hob with the Hearst personality. If one look at the current issue of the San Francisco News Letter this week doesn't make Willie weep—or swear—it will be because he is no longer a baby or because he fails to find language sufficiently lurid to express himself. He thought that work would bring him fame
That toil would give him money;
He worked, and found things just the same—
His creditors were funny.

He persevered, and worked again,
His debts were past concealing;
He threw off work, and toil and pain,
And took to clever stealing.

Mark the result: He paid his way,
His foes were filled with fury;
Indictments never came to stay—
He always bought the jury.

And when his earthly course was run,
And daisies o'er him waving,
The preacher spoke of him as one
Who throve by honest saving.

The Board of Public Works has been busy, very busy. Some of the members, it is alleged, maliciously have been busy buying property, and the whole Board has devoted itself with an energy which Boards seldom show to the piling up of expenses. Mr. Michael Casey appears to be what in the language of the street is technically called "a bird." We need never despair of Irish-American enterprise. Take Mr. Casey's case. Only a short time ago he was driving a team, not a very dignified team either, and three dollars a day steady would have represented the sum total of his mundane aspirations. To-day he plays with the thousands of dollars of the rate-payers like a Monte Carlo croupier, and like the croupier he represents an institution which always wins. There may be depression in the streets, but there is not even a hint of depression about the fortunes of Michael Casey. The sewer system may be imperfect, but Michael the Merciless is always sure of his own system. He has paraphrased and adapted Wolsey and made his motto, "If I had but served the city as industriously as I have served myself I should not see anything ahead for my old age."

Theodore Lowe, of the "Raven," has had two more charges of felony embezzlement placed against him. It is only a short time ago that he was charged with the same offense and acquitted. He may possibly be acquitted on these charges also, but I submit that for a young man who is unjustly accused, the accusations succeed each other at too short intervals, and he is putting too great a strain upon the indulgence of his friends. A maleficent fortune appears to pursue unremittingly certain men. In spite of their protests of innocence, a censorious and uncharitable world will persist in imagining them to be guilty, and it must be confessed that the ungenerous world has a peculiar faculty of making good in the long run. Therefore, Mr. Lowe had better make up his mind that it is not well that the run should be too long, and the best way in which he can do that, as well as the most comfortable for all concerned, is that he should try the effect of a change of climate.

In days to come, it will be written down that San Francisco was inhabited by a race of men who were in all probability congenital idiots, upon whose natural idiocy softening of the brain had supervened. Then the existence of the Examiner and the Carmen's Union will be cited as irrefutable proof of the proposition.

The recent hold-up of clubmen in San Jose, coming so soon after a similar occurrence in this city, raises the question of why clubmen should be such an easy mark. One man goes into a room in a club and holds up ten men, extorting from them about two thousand dollars. True, it was about one o'clock in the morning when the hold-up took place, and the solution naturally suggested is that the clubmen were too torpid to resist. All married men have a grievance against these San Joseans, for heaven knows, it is hard enough to get permission to stay at the club under the best of circumstances. What is the poor man to reply when his wife says: "You can't go to the club, Joe. You'll be robbed." He won't dare to plead poker and that being robbed is no new experience.

Funny town, Oakland. It is a church-going community, and its inhabitants have a peculiar habit of raising questions of casuistry. The particular point at issue is as to how far the Mayor's secretary is justified in renting typewriters to the city. When the facts are sifted out, it appears according to the secretary's statement that he only rented one typewriter, and then he adds somewhat naively that this was an old one. The question, therefore, naturally arises: Is a secretary justified in entering the typewriter renting business with the employing municipality, and if so, how does the fact that the typewriter is old affect the moral proposition. I understand that the matter is having the serious attention of the Y. M. C. A. and the Home of Truth. Father Yorke has refused to preach on it, as he is too busy blacking his face for another minstrel show.

Dr. Hobdy, the United States Marine Hospital Boarding Surgeon, is reported to have knocked down a British army Captain who failed to report in time for inspection upon the America Maru. The agility which our local officials show in getting the best of globe-trotting Englishmen is one of the most charming features of our local life, and it is hard to say whether the physical prowess of our officials or the imagination of our reporters is the more to be applauded. Any one who believes this story and has seen Dr. Hobdy must believe in the physical deterioration of the Briton or the subjugated captain is a mere invalid on sick leave. Anyway the incident is gratifying as tending to offset the wholesale failure of our local competitors for the Rhodes scholarship.

The police raided a lottery place in the city this week. This is gratifying, for it shows that a certain portion of the force has for a time abandoned the business of robbing grocery stores. It was a small lottery place, moreover, which was raided, and, there being nothing small about the police force, of course they would not allow it to exist. The proprietor complains that the tickets which he sold were not those of the particular lottery favored by the Department. Such negligence on his part was simply inexcusable. He should have consulted the Police Captain as to his favorite brand of lottery ticket, and taken a bunch up as a sample. Small lottery ticket sellers and poor unfortunate women cannot be too careful.

CRIMINALS AND FOOD PRODUCERS.

In 1897 the News Letter, in common with other reputable journals of the State made a combined attack on the adulteration of food products. As a direct result of this crusade a label law was enacted. This law is to-day a dead letter. Feeling secure in their criminal practices and with a desire to flaunt evasion of the law in the face of the public, an "Exposition of Pure Food Products" is being held in Mechanics' Pavilion. The public is lured by the title into a belief that the foods exhibited are all pure, when, as a matter of fact, the exposition is simply one of "Food Products," and the question of purity is not considered by the management. Any food product can be exhibited if the makers pay for the floor space. So there are pure foods and impure foods side by side. Here are a few sample exhibits:

We have spices adulterated with cocoa shells; honey with glucose; jams, jellies and preserves with starch, apples and coal tar coloring substances; baking powder with alum and ammonia and terra alba; olive oil with cotton-seed oil; vinegar made out of shavings; molasses (black strap), pure cider and wine vinegar out of grain and burnt sugar; pepper out of the refuse shells from confectioners; coffee with extracts, chicory and artificial coffee; molasses with glucose; maple sugar with glucose and molasses; all drugs are adulterated. Tomato catsup, as made by nine-tenths of the manufacturers, contain salicylic acid and not one iota of tomato. The pulp is apple parings and the coloring matter is coal tar. Tomato catsup is the most injurious of the adulterated foods.

The Board of Health should visit the exhibition and remove a sample from the different grocers' exhibits, analyze them, and then, after giving the result to the public, the offenders should be arrested, heavily fined, and if possible imprisoned. The News Letter knows whereof it speaks; it has had samples analyzed and the conditions to-day are far worse than in 1897, and while the associated offenders and criminals have their wares on exhibition the authorities should pounce on them and make public their crimes against the community.

CONTRACT LABOR VS. FREE LABOR.

The far-reaching influence of the labor leader was never better illustrated than in the vote taken by the carmen. They (the carmen) voted to reject the very attractive terms offered by the company, and they have placed a new construction on the term known as "recognition of the union." They now demand that this be construed as more than treatment with their leaders, that it shall mean absolute starvation to free and untrammelled labor. The free laborer must starve and none but contract or organized labor be hired. It is high time this matter be brought to a head, a fight made, and the contest be kept up all summer, if necessary, to bring the anarchistic foreign leaders to a full appreciation of their powerless condition. In the meanwhile let not the public blame the men—they are swayed by fear. The individual in the labor union is to-day governed by a despotism that is worse than that of the Czar of all the Russias.

The House of Crafts and Arts

Out on Central avenue, overlooking the blue waters of the bay, and the green hills which surround them, stands a house dedicated to the use and cultivation of the crafts and arts in their various forms. The inspiration which saw the rich promise on this Pacific Slope, the motives which impelled the furtherance and encouragement of that promise, have resulted in the establishment of an ideal workshop, where skilled handiwork and artistic ideas have every opportunity for tangible expression.

San Francisco is a city of many phases, cosmopolitan yet provincial; progressive, yet slow to appreciate her own inheritance. She has yet to waken to the fact that within her own gates her gifted sons and daughters struggle for even a meagre recognition and support, which becomes renown and advancement, are they fortunate enough to be able to take their gifts elsewhere. Verily, the prophet is not without honor save in his own city of the Golden Gate.

It has remained for a stranger coming in our midst to see the material here and provide a place for its development. Dr. Orlow, with his artistic perceptions, his broad-mindedness, which looks for the greatest good to the greatest number, saw and appreciated the wealth of possibilities awaiting recognition and assistance, and forthwith fashioned a building where the crafts and arts should find a home. In the big house, from whose every window an inspiration may be gained, are evidences of what can be done when artistic ideas are worked out by skilled craftsmanship.

In the workshop downstairs, where the pungent fragrance of the pine and redwood fills the air, busy fingers are fashioning the furniture for the San Francisco house at the St. Louis Exposition. This unique furniture is on display this week, and should be seen by lovers of artistic furniture. One floor of the house will be fitted entirely by furniture designed and made in this shop; the second floor will be partially furnished from the same place. Mrs. Hearst has given an order here for dining-tables and chairs, which in design and finish suggest the dining-halls of the horsemen of old. One room is used entirely for the making of picture frames, each made expressly to suit the demands of some one canvas, because Dr. Orlow declares that pictures have individuality, as well as people.

The main hall, with its charming side gallery, is a fine and spacious apartment, used for a picture gallery, as well as an audience room for the weekly receptions. This, as well as the smaller rooms adjoining, are furnished with a simplicity which is refreshing to the eye accustomed to the multitudinous carvings and elaborations of modern houses. The tables, chairs and settle are severe in outline, but harmonious and restful as well, and every piece has come from the room below.

In the rooms on the upper floor one finds a collection of beautiful productions. Embroideries on textures of various kinds, from heaviest satin to softest gauze; graceful shapes in porcelain show the skill of the china-painter. In a small room is a mass of glittering bead-work, so perfect in its way one wonders what Indian tribe has yielded up its treasure. Beautifully illuminated scrolls and parchments next claim the attention, and nearby are evidences of the bookbinder's art.

To every question of "Where" and "How," Dr. Orlow makes the same reply: "All made here."

The house is indeed an ideal workshop. Where the actual work may be done, or having wares for sale, the worker may bring them here, and place on exhibition.

It is open to all, the requisites for admission being skilled workmanship, an ability to do the chosen work in a perfect manner, and originality of design. The entire scheme is practical and conducted on a thoroughly business-like plan. The order and system which must exist to properly conduct such an undertaking is evidenced in every direction. It is an undertaking which calls for every encouragement and appreciation from the community fortunate enough to have such a place in its midst.

It is the beginning of greater things, the nucleus of an art center which opens to limitless possibilities. To the man who has conceived the idea and put it into practical working is due a hearty co-operation in his endeavors to carry on his ideas, which reach farther than one can imagine, and an assurance of good will in their development and execution.

SOCIETY

Dear Bessie: Royal Princes are becoming quite a drug on the market. First came his Royal Highness from China, and this week we have had Prince Louis of Savoy, who returned to us again after an absence of several years, when he was quite a noted guest in the halls of the wealthy and at Burlingame, then in its infancy, and has expressed himself as pleased to be here again. His ship, the Liguria, is to remain here while the Prince pays a flying visit to St. Louis, but from all I hear there is to be something done on board of her as well as at several places ashore directly he returns. But, my dear, Prince Louis is not the only notable guest the city has had of late. Think of the richest bachelor in the United States having been within our gates this week in Robert Walton Goelet, who arrived with the Harriman party last week in time for the horse show at Burlingame, and perhaps he wasn't feted there and in town during his brief stay! Mr. Harriman himself had a dinner in the Palm Garden on Saturday night for the members of his party and several of our San Francisco notables.

Again there is a lull in weddings, but think of all there are to come off in June. The only one of moment this week in town was that of Hattie Currier and Walter Hale last Thursday at noon. It was a comparatively quiet affair; I mean there was no large reception, the ceremony taking place at the Curriers on Pacific Avenue, with only just a few outside the relatives to witness it. The flowers were lovely and such lots of them; Dolores Wilkins was maid of honor, Mary Nichols and Jane Barry the bridesmaids. There was another wedding on Thursday at the Unitarian Church over in Oakland, where Miss Minnie Wilson and William Olney were the high contracting parties; it was quite a swell affair, I believe.

It seems as if all the excitement of the week was crowded into Thursday, for beside these two weddings there was the launching of the new man-of-war, the California.

The expected has happened, at least to all those who were at Del Monte during the recent polo tournament, in the formally announced engagement of Miss Cora Kirk, who has been on a visit to Hattie Pullman Carolan at Burlingame, to Paul Clagstone, who represented Southern California among the polo players. I intended going down to the Burlingame horse show last Saturday, but at the last moment had to give it up; Helen tells me they had a splendid time and that she didn't know which attracted most attention, Cora and her fiance, young Goelet, who was there with the Martins, or Birdie Fair Vanderbilt, who is here on business connected with the settling up of the Fair estate. I hear that Tessie Oelrichs will be here next week, but if she does, her stay will be of the briefest possible.

Gay doings in town are commencing to be rather few and far between. Mrs. Henry Dodge gave one of her pleasant luncheons last Saturday, inviting ten guests to meet her niece, Mrs. Hodgson, who is here on a visit from the East. Emily Wilson had a little tea on Monday afternoon—just a few girls; on Tuesday the Spinners gave a tea in honor of Miss O'Ryan, at her studio on Pine street, and you know how common they always enter into anything they undertake. Grace Buckley has got the bridge fever, and had a pleasant little set of her friends to play it last week; Ethel Cooper had a bridge party on Wednesday of this week, and Emma Breedon has had two bridge parties within the last ten days. I wanted very much to go over to Edna Barry and Philip Clay's wedding, which comes off at St. John's Church in Oakland this afternoon, but, you see, the hour is four o'clock, so that I should never have time to do it, as I promised to go over to Ross Valley for the dance which the Lagunitas Club is to give at its club-house to-night, and I expect it will be lots of fun.

You never saw any one more pleased to be what she calls "home" again than Mrs. Roosevelt, who has been over at San Rafael with Judge and Mrs. Morrow almost ever since her arrival from the Philippines.

Mrs. Southworth gave her a very pretty tea the other day, at which she shared the honors with Charlotte Moulder and Winnie Mackintosh, and how every one did talk over old times when Eleanor was one of the most popular girls in the swim. The Roosevelts leave very soon for Washington City, where Captain Roosevelt is to be stationed for the next two years. It is too bad when we have pleasant people that we cannot keep them, but that is the penalty of army life—one never knows how soon one is to lose them. Another case in point is the Overtons, who are the most recent to be ordered away, and they are going to Fort McKinley almost at once. Mrs. Overton's sister, Kathie Kline, as her friends call her, who has been here all winter, has already gone, much to the regret of those who met her during her visit. In the other branch of the service, Lieutenant Horne has been ordered off to Samoa, so Alma will remain here with her mother for awhile, at least, as Mrs. McClung and Gladys have returned from San Diego, where they have been all winter, and as soon as Horne sails, the whole party will go up to Napa to stay with Mrs. Cole, who has such a pretty home in that lovely vale.

I hear that the Jim Floods will soon be off to the big house at Menlo Park, to stay there all summer, and it is surmised that they do not intend to keep closed doors. Sausalito is full of glee over the acquisition of the J. D. Spreckels, who are having their recently purchased abode done up in fine style against their taking possession next month. The locale is a lovely one, and it is said the girls will do no end of entertaining this summer.

Helen and Constance de Young got off last week for New York, where they will make some little stay, "shoppin', you know," as Alice says. I understand there are to be gay doings at Meadowlands when they return.

The O'Connor girls have departed with Mrs. Blair, and Mrs. Stubbs and Helen have gone to their Chicago home after a pleasant visit here. Kate Dillon talks of going to the St. Louis fair, and of then prolonging her journeyings across the big pond, and spending the summer in Europe, but promises to be back again for the winter season. The rumor is that Kate Voorhies Henry is also going abroad, though she may stay here all summer. Louise Harrington that was, Mrs. Leahy that is, who came down from Vallejo last week, will remain with her mother till the return of the Tacoma from its trip north, and then it will be time enough to make plans for the future.

The Walter Deans have gone to San Rafael for the summer. I have not heard what Alice and Ethel Hager intend to do—have not yet decided, I believe; the Eells are also at their home in Marin, and Mrs. Smedburg and Cora have been spending some time at the Hotel Rafael. The Loughboroughs are coming home, I hear—have had all they want of European travel for the present; Mrs. Stanford will be here from her trip to Australia and China next week, but is going off again to Europe in a few weeks. The Blandings are going to spend the summer at Belvedere, but may go to Tahoe later in the season for a short time. Margaret Newhall is down visiting her uncle Walter in Los Angeles, and having an exceedingly good time from all accounts; Edith Chesebrough has been up at the Navy Yard on a visit to Mrs. Miller; Jessie Dorr and Georgie Lacey have both returned from their visits to Honolulu.

But what did I tell you? The idea of the Burlingame set fancying Mrs. Peter Martin would content herself there all summer! They—she and Peter—will be here a couple of months longer, that is all, for early in July, at the latest, off they go to the beloved Newport, where they have taken a cottage for the season. Gossip has it that Mrs. Eleanor is going with them, as she enjoyed her former visit so much, and just then it is so woefully dull hereabouts. So we shall see when the time comes.

The finish to a beautiful gown is a cunningly and fashionably made hat, and nowhere in San Francisco can this desired result be better obtained than at the studio of Miss Sweeney, 121 Post street. The woman who desires to be up to date in headgear will select an establishment such as Miss Sweeney's because of the special study made there of the demands of each case. Arthur Brisbane is writing letters to the Hon. (?) Willie Hearst and signing them "A Broken Hearted Mother." In the Hearst newspaper offices this is called "human interest business," and in other newspaper offices it is called "damned lies." The other newspaper offices are right. It is good stuff to fool the public with, however, and there is many a lowly home in which bitter tears will be shed over the magnificent fabrications of the cunning Brisbane. It is said Mr. Hearst occasionally sheds a tear himself. On one occasion he is said to have remarked to Brisbane: "Arthur, you are (sob) the most (sob) touching (sob) liar (sob) I have (sob) ever (sob) hired," and then he slid down to the middle of his back in the Morris chair, elevated one knee in the air, and, touching a button, asked if there were any new chorus girls at Weber & Fields who could be induced to spend the evening in his company.

THE LOOKER-ON

He had just come back from Paris
 And he talked of all he'd seen—
 Of the galleries he had visited,
 And the dinners in between.
 Till a friend asked him discreetly,
 With a most mysterious air,
 "Do you like the things in Paris?
 Do you like the pommes-de-terre?"

He smiled the smile that's knowing,
 And he winked the other eye.
 He seemed to be as wicked
 As a man can be, and try.
 "No!" he answered, with regretful tone;
 "Those things I did not see.
 I had no pommes-de-terre at all—
 My wife was there with me."

Mayor Schmitz now has another name "bracketed" with those of Mershon and Parry. The latest candidate for ill-repute, whose graft in the Emergency Hospital was exposed in the News Letter weeks ago, has had all the benefit of an investigation by a friendly investigator; he has been able to secure denials from those, who, from all accounts, accused him until his head was in danger, but all the pails of whitewash in the City Hall could not save Dr. Brackett. The Mayor found that he was "too indiscreet." Of course, he took money in connection with an Emergency Hospital case, but it seems his offense was not so much the fact of taking the money as the indiscretion in using his official position to extract it. That distinction gives much food for thought. Brackett may now retire into that obscurity from which he was dragged by the Mayor's favor, and in the course of human events, if he takes his lesson to heart, he may rehabilitate himself in the good opinion of those who knew him as an honest man before he sought a political position. Why any professional man should accept a minor job in the City Hall is one of the mysteries of human nature. If he is a competent physician or surgeon he can only injure himself by becoming known as a politician; if he is not competent, his reasons for taking the place are apparent. The conclusion is that most of the City Hall doctors are either foolish or incompetent. And that is not very far from the facts.

* * *

Mayor Schmitz has suffered more than most Mayors from his appointees. Mershon was a bad one; Brackett may not be corrupt in the worst sense, but he is of too small a calibre to be a success; Parry has been a thorn in the Mayor's side ever since that colt incident, and if his resignation as Fire Commissioner were presented to-morrow, it would be tidings of great joy in the Mayor's office. Schmitz has done much to clip Parry's wings, for which some measure of approval is due to the Mayor. Parry has been deposed as chairman of the Department of Electricity, and he has been side-tracked to one of the minor committees of the Fire Commission. For some time past, he has kept comparatively quiet, for the idea has evidently forced itself in upon him that his resignation will be demanded in a prompt and summary manner as soon as he makes his next break.

Captain Harts, U. S. A., a soldier by profession and a smuggler by preference, is indignant. He has raised his voice with words of rudeness, and his temperature has increased greatly in the vicinity of his collar. The Captain has much reason for his indignation. He arrived the other day from the Orient, and that minion of the Government, Chauncey St. John, had the temerity to search the Captain's trunks, and to seize a choice collection of dutiable goods therein discovered, neatly tucked away in places where the Captain, honest man, thought no one would ever find them. Now, Uncle Sam, abetted by this same officious Mr. St. John, demands a fine of over $1,000 from the Captain; your uncle has also seized the Captain's goods. Now, if that is not enough to raise the ire of a professional soldier, what is? What! risk your life for your country, and then not be permitted to take in without duty a few hundred dollars worth of trumpery, and all because some old curmudgeon from nowhere made a law to that effect! Well, Republics ever were ungrateful.

And now the School Principals are making laws to suit themselves. Principal Bush, of the Polytechnic High School, suspended six boys last Tuesday because they refused to pay a fine of $20 levied by him against them, because, in a hurry to enter the school, they kicked the front gate and dislodged a few inches of paint. Of course, the boys should be punished; first, for being late for school, which is against the rules; secondly, for kicking the gate, which was very rude. They must not expect to kick and smash things until they go to Berkeley. But when was Mr. Bush, or any other principal, empowered to levy a fine against any pupil? Whence does Mr. Bush obtain this judicial authority? The thing is farcical. Even if he had the power to levy a fine, the amount he demanded was excessive. School principals should attend to their own particular business, and leave the punishment of misdemeanors to the Police Courts.

Senator Perkins has secured an appropriation of $15,000 for the adornment of the Presidio. This money will be available immediately. The Senator also has in hand a bill appropriating $35,000 more for Presidio improvements, making a total of $50,000 to be used during the next two years. With this money much will be done to make greatly needed improvements at the big military post. It has always seemed to me that the people of this city do not make enough of the Presidio. It is the largest military post in the country, and it has always been the favorite post with both officers and men. For years past, ever since the Spanish war, thousands of troops have been stationed there; every incoming transport brings home warriors from the Philippines; every out-going troop ship carries away detachments. The men are always kept in good shape by drills—not prosy, tiresome drills—by battle exercises, sham engagements, with rattle of small arms, boom of cannon, and call of bugle. These are held frequently, and are as entertaining to the onlooker as they are instructive to the men. Then the cavalry exercises are something to put the best circus stunts in the shade. In addition, there are athletic field days, when all the strong soldier boys show what they can do by power of lungs and arms and legs. The Presidio should be cultivated by the people.

The Abruzzi and his warship have arrived, wherefore some tremors of excitement have agitated the Italian colony. The most notable incident connected with the Prince's arrival was the accidental loss of Consul Serra in the midst of the plan of congratulations. The Consul thought the Prince would come in his boat to the Vallejo street dock, and there, serene in his official dignity, the Consul awaited him. But Luigi pulled in at the Clay street dock, and then had to elbow his way through the crowds of the curious until he found the Consul. But the Prince is a good fellow, and he doubtless cared far less for the misunderstanding than did Serra. The Consul is an unhappy man, for his position here is not conducive to his peace of mind. Some years ago some of the Italians said he was unsociable; that he did not extend to them that hospitality which they thought they had a right to expect from their country's representative. Serra replied that he could not be expected to entertain the entire Italian colony. Not long ago he made a trip to Europe. During his absence it was said he would be transferred to some European city, but he came back to San Francisco. His ambition, it is said, is to get a mission upon the Continent.

A younger brother of Eddie Hanlon, the prize-fighter, the "Pride of Telegraph Hill," has been sentenced to six years' imprisonment at San Quentin, after conviction on a charge of burglary. After his arrest, Hanlon was released upon $500 cash bail deposited by the prize-fighter. The burglar jumped his bail and fled to the East. He was captured in Colorado, brought back, pleaded guilty, and now he is a convict. Can any minister, or any Supervisor, find in the conviction of Eddie Hanlon's brother a text for a sermon upon the evil effects of the prize-ring? Is this case alone not sufficient to prove the arguments made by this journal that the prize-ring, like the race track, leads young men into crime? I do not wish to moralize, but who is the greater offender against society—the unfortunate youth now in San Quentin, who fell into evil ways because of the opportunities presented in the prevalence of prize-fights in this city, or the Supervisors who make these opportunities possible? True, Supervisor Brandenstein says the Supervisors are not the keepers of the public conscience. But, has a Supervisor any conscience of his own?

Mrs. Marion B. Foster sued the members of the Women's Press Association last week, and now comes Mrs. Mate H. Cartwright with another suit against the same defendants. Mrs. Cartwright's complaint relates a long tale of woe. She wanted to be elected something in the club, and the mean things wouldn't elect her. She was pained, shocked, aggrieved, sore, indignant, and, briefly, "all broke up" by her defeat. She knows the unkind women who write things just defeated her out of pure spite, and now she wants to get even. So she has sued them and their combined unhappy husbands for $100,000 damages. Now, wouldn't that keep you waiting! One hundred thousand simoleons! Newspaper writers—and women newspaper writers at that—sued for one hundred thousand! Why, ladies, it's a dream.

Mme. Perrier, one of the most charming ladies of the French colony, while visiting at a friend's house two weeks ago, dropped dead. She was buried from the French church. The funeral was attended by many representatives of all that is considered the most select in local society, for Mme. Perrier was sincerely mourned. She was past the prime of life, and for many years had been a widow. Her married life had been very happy, and frequently did she speak to her intimates of her husband, whom she loved sincerely. Of late years, she had made her home at a private hotel. There, two days before her death, she told this story of a dream.

It was at luncheon on a Sunday. She sat with two lady friends. She said that during the night she had dreamed a dream which had made upon her a deep impression.

"I dreamed," she said, "that I was walking slowly along the banks of a beautiful stream. I was alone. Now and again I stopped to pluck a flower, for they were plentiful and beautiful. I mused upon the wonders of the glorious sky, the sparkling waters, the delightful flowers, and within me there was a sense of rest. But, withal, I was not happy, for I was alone. Suddenly, I heard a voice calling my name. At first, it was faint, as though far away. As I listened, it grew stronger; it seemed to come nearer. Yet I saw no one.

"Who calls?" I cried.

"Again came the voice, but now louder than before. And then, opposite me, upon the other bank of the stream, I saw—whom do you think? My husband! It was he—just as he had been twenty years ago. He looked at me. His eyes were filled with love.

"Come!" he said, "I want you!"

"Then I awoke. It was but a dream; I am no believer in dreams, but this has impressed me strangely."

Mme. Perrier told of her dream on a Sunday. Upon the following Tuesday she dropped dead.

PLEASURE'S WAND

A TRUSTY TIP ON THINGS THEATRICAL.

MAJESTIC—Isabelle Irving—A masterly production.
COLUMBIA—The Four Cohans—Amusing comedy.
GRAND—Fiddle-Dee-Dee and Big Little Princess—Highly enjoyable musical farces.
ALCAZAR—The New Clown—An entertaining innovation in comedy.
ORPHEUM—Lew Sully and a half dozen others that are good fun makers CENTRAL—The Still Alarm—Realistic melodrama.
TIVOLI—When Johnny Comes Marching Home—Fine production.
ALHAMBRA—Sembrich—Matinee this afternoon.
MECHANICS PAVILION—Food Show—Pure and Impure.

The absence of Mr. Durkin from the Alcazar stage was a feature that called for regret from many of the regular attendants at the popular O'Farrell street house. It was manifestly impossible to place that gentleman in the "New Clown," and the piece went very smoothly without him. Miss Starr, Mr. Osbourne, Mr. Maher, are deserving of special mention, and the play, generally speaking, was well carried by the company. San Franciscans are terribly partisan, and there were many who felt keenly Miss Block's assumption of a minor role. Miss Starr, however, was easily the star in the "New Clown." She is pretty and artistic and never once forgot her quaint patois. Osbourne was a very good John Baker, and the Lord Cyril Garston of Mr. Maher was a finished piece of work, as is all of the work of this conscientious young man.

* * *

The Orpheum has a splendid show on this week, and Sully is one of the king fun makers of the world. The four Mortons are still with us, and there is no end of other attractions that keep one's wits going from the rise to the fall of the curtain. A good show to drive away the blues.

* * *

Mr. Charles W. Strine has been made assistant manager of the Tivoli. I wish to congratulate Mr. Leahy on the acquisition, for I believe it means additional and successful efforts to popularize the big Eddy street house.

* * *

At the Columbia we have the hold-overs, the four Cohans, fun-makers, and they are pleasing fair-size houses.

* * *

Kolb and Dill, Winfield Blake, Amber and Barney Bernard are doing very well at the Grand. To-morrow night will see the last of these artists on an American stage for many months, and the house is sure to be packed by their admirers.

* * *

"The New Clown" is something entirely new in the line of plays, and it is drawing very well at the Alcazar.

* * *

Sembrich called out the usual quota of admirers at the Alhambra, and the advance sale for the matinee this afternoon is a good one. The prices are rather too high to ensure good houses, and the theatre is out of the way.

* * *

The Central is doing a good business with "The Still Alarm," and Eugenia Thais Lawton is winning fresh laurels. Herschell Mayall is again a great hero and there is joy south of the slot.

* * *

The Chutes has a good bill all the week, and there have been additions to the Zoo, and other attractions.

The Pure Food Show, which, by the way, is a show of foods of all kinds, pure and impure, is on at the Mechanics' Pavilion.

* * *

The Majestic continues the admirable bill, "The Crisis," until to-night, with a matinee this afternoon. The play has drawn a little larger crowd each night to the unfinished theatre. Miss Irving is a capable and sweet little woman, with a splendid support.

The Majestic has taken a straight leap into the good graces of the culture and refinement of the city, and it is a pity that the house is not in a better condition to entertain its patrons. When finished, the Majestic will be a thing of beauty and a joy forever.

* * *

"When Johnnie Comes Marching Home" draws the usual old-time crowd at the Tivoli, and there is rejoicing at the box office. There is but one element that needs suppression, and that is Dora de Filipe. She is simply impossible in any role.

* * *

For the last night before closure, there is all probability of a large house at Fischer's. The chorus is good, and Roy Alton is a host in himself.

* * *

At the Alhambra, last week, Shafter Howard and Harry Clifford gave evidence of great ability in the operetta of "His Royal Nibs." The music and the lyrics are good, and had the piece been put on as was originally intended by the Fisher Company, with Bernard, Dill, Kolb and Amber as the principal portrayers of the hero and other characters that go to make the play, it would have taken like wild-fire. The amateurs who presented it at the Alhambra did the best they could, but that best was not anything at all wonderful.

* * *

"Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" is to be the bill at the Central for the coming week, and there is sure to be a great attendance.

Pinero's powerful drama, "The Profligate," is to be put on at the Alcazar for next week, and the full strength of this remarkably good stock company will be employed. There is a thread of romance running through the entire play, two love stories and a problem, not an Ibsen problem, however, and the gloom is lifted. It is a four-act play, which will allow much swing in the matter of scenic adornment.

The repertoire for Richard Mansfield, beginning May 16th, is as follows: Monday, May 16th, he will be seen as the Tzar Ivan, in the production of Count Alexis Tolstoi's Russian tragedy, "Ivan the Terrible"; Tuesday, May 17th, first time here of Wilhelm Meyer-Foster's play of German student life, "Old Heidelberg," Mr. Mansfield as the Prince Karl Heinrich; Wednesday, May 18th, a revival and only time of "A Parisian Romance," Mr. Mansfield as the Baron Chevrial; Thursday, May 19th, a revival of "Beau Brummel," Mr. Mansfield as Beau Brummel; Friday, May 20th, "Old Heidelberg"; Saturday matinee, May 21, only matinee of "Beau Brummel"; Saturday night, "Ivan the Terrible." The second week Mr. Mansfield will appear in the following plays: Monday, May 23d, "Heidelberg"; Tuesday, May 24th, the last time of "Ivan the Terrible"; Wednesday, May 25th, last time of "Beau Brummel"; Thursday, May 26th, "Old Heidelberg"; Friday, May 27th, only time of "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," Mr. Mansfield as Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde; Saturday matinee, May 28th, "Old Heidelberg"; Saturday (farewell) night, in a scene each of five plays of his repertoire.

Some time last year, one of the San Francisco theatres gave us what purported to be a Rogers' Brothers show. This was essentially disappointing. The performance was only mediocre. We are now to be given the real thing, with Gus and Max Rogers in the cast. They open at the Columbia next Monday night. They are under the direction of Klaw & Erlanger, which is in itself a guarantee of flawless production. Lottie Uart and many others of the best will interpret musical specialties and features. There are sixty-six pretty girls in the chorus.

The Sardou season will open at the Grand on Monday night with "La Tosca." Melbourne MacDowell will appear as the Baron Scarpia. This is conceded his greatest impersonation. He will be supported by Miss Ethel Fuller, who is said to be exceptionally fine in emotional roles. The scenery has been designed especially, and is said to be wonderful. For the second week, Mr. MacDowell will give us Sardou's "Cleopatra," and it is expected that this will be a gorgeous treat. Mr. MacDowell will appear as Marc Antony and Miss Fuller as Cleopatra.

Hal. Davis, Inez Macaulay and a strong supporting company will present at the Orpheum this coming week, "An Episode in One Act," by Edmund Day, entitled "Pals." Briefly told, the story is one of unflinching love. A young man and his wife are visited by an old college pal of the former, who has been an unsuccessful suitor for the hand of the latter. The young husband is called away and returns to discover his wife hysterically fleeing up a flight of stairs to escape the proposals of love from the friend, and what ensues in the way of action is sensationally stormy.

This coming week, which marks the third successful year of the Chutes in its present location, will find a capital list of attractions at the popular pleasure resort. To-day, to-morrow and Monday, a May Day Festival, a feature of which will be an electric May Pole Dance, will be held. Queen, Stowe and Diamond, comedy acrobats and dancers, promise a lively act; Ted McKenna will introduce his $5,000 performing dog for the first time here, and Bowers and Curtis will present their original farcette, entitled "Where is John?" Mildred Manning, a sweet singer of illustrated songs, will make her initial appearance at the Chutes.

Interesting Developments.

Perhaps the most interesting developments in the Far Eastern question the past week are only indirectly related to the war, but diplomatically and politically they may be considered almost sensational. It seems that Russia is already preparing for the settlement of her differences with Japan through neutral powers, two of which are supposed to be quite friendly to Japan. But this diplomatic strategy does not mean that peace will be sought before a few great battles have been fought. It is simply laying the foundation of a basis upon which Russia may build hopes and expectations that when she can honorably invite a conference with certain nations for the purpose of intervening between herself and Japan with proposals to not only stop the war, but to do so with reference to such an adjustment of differences as will insure peace for many years, and the surprising, if not amazing thing about it all is that Germany is ignored almost insultingly, and the United States, Great Britain and France made Russia's confidants and attorneys. Of course, the Kaiser is furious behind his mask of indifference, and the three nations that Russia is relying upon, as well as Russia herself, would give a good deal to know what the German war lord is likely to do in the premises. It is conceded, however, that the Kaiser has so angered the Asiatics by calling them the "yellow peril" that as one of the arbitrators his very identification with the purpose in hand would be a serious stumbling block; hence his name had to be scratched off the list of Russia's "friends in need." This diplomatic strategy is being handled by the anti-jingo party in Russia, and the Czar himself is said to be the prime mover of it. The people generally, as well as court circles, of Russia realize that the jingo statesmen and war establishment officials conspired to force Japan to declare war, and that had the Czar not been fooled by falsehood as to the real situation, Japan's demands would have had favorable consideration and war averted. Then, again, the unpreparedness of Russia for war has disgusted the Czar and his honest friends. On paper the nation was amply prepared for war, but when war actually came it was found that although appropriations for the war establishment had been ample for years, there was very little to show for the vast expenditures. It was the same kind of treachery and rascality that gave Louis Napoleon one of the finest and best-equipped armies of Europe, with vast stores of munitions of war all ready for use, on paper, which was revealed in humility and shame when the Emperor threw down the gauntlet to Germany. It was very different in Japan. For several years large appropriations were made to better the war service of the Empire, and every dollar was honestly expended. There were no "paper" items, and when the movement against Russia was undertaken, the army and navy moved forward like a mighty machine with every cog in every wheel a perfect cog. This was almost as great a surprise to the Czar as was the treachery and rascality of his jingo confidential advisors. But an "honorable peace" must come after a few great battles, for Russian pride demands "blood letting" first and diplomatic strategy afterwards. But meanwhile the jingoes will not be idle. The Czar's Eastern Asia venture is no longer a pleasing theory. It is a hard, cruel and perplexing condition set in cold realities.

Strange and mysterious rumors are coming from the Latin-American States. The Hague award in the Venezuelan case made it quite clear to all the South American Republics that when European capital accepted their pressing and flattering invitations to come over and invest millions of dollars, capital did not intend that its millions should be considered a free donation, but that it should expect ample remuneration and perfect safety for investments and interest money. But the Republics did not so understand it, and now rumor has it that they have formed an inter-Republic league, or are about to form one, to resist as one nation any and all efforts of Europe to collect these debts by seizing custom-houses, or by any other measures of force. Hundreds of millions of dollars of foreign capital are invested in public improvements in South America, and nearly every debtor is not only in arrears for interest, but is making no provisions to pay the principal. This kind of impudent indifference has been flung in the face of creditors so long that they are appealing to their Governments for protection. England, France, Germany and Italy have "intimated diplomatically" to those delinquent Latin-Americans that they propose to go into the collection business with warships and marines if their subjects are not settled with. It is to resist these collectors that the League of South American Republics has been formed, or is forming. Hitherto, they have concealed their ultimate purpose behind the Monroe Doctrine, believing, as they did, that the United States would stand between them and any foreign power that attempted to seize either their customs or territory for debt, but now that the Washington Government interprets the Monroe Doctrine to mean that temporary occupation of territory or seizing customs to collect debts is permissible, the Republics have concluded to "stand together" and meet with armed resistance what they are pleased to call "invasion by foreign States." But nearly all the Latin States have been so injudicious and prodigal with their borrowed millions that seizing their customs is the only remedy their creditors have, and they may be sure that, League or no League, the debts will be collected.

Our New Possessions.

The United States has again expanded their colonial possessions. A strip of land across Panama, together with a railway and a canal franchise, has been deeded and transferred to the United States, which, among other advantages conferred upon the powers that be in Washington, opens up a way for the appointment of a brand-new corps of territorial officers, from Governor down. The $10,000,000 that goes to Panama from the United States treasury comes in the nick of time. The patriots who carried Panama out of the Republic of Colombia and established a new nation with themselves holding down every public office, started their venture without a nickel, and are very hungry for a little ready cash. The other first, but by no means the last disbursement, by the United States Treasury, $40,000,000 goes to the syndicate that secured the stock of the old Panama Canal Company. When the Canal is finished the United States will own and operate two "public utilities," a waterway and a railway, which Golden Rule Jones says is the beginning of Government ownership of all the transportation, telegraph and industrial establishments in Uncle Sam's dominions, and labor unions will then be the Government.

SAN JOSE'S DEFAULTING TREASURER.

The McGeogheghan scandal in San Jose grows worse as the time passes. The defaulting treasurer had formerly been an army officer and came to San Jose with all the glamor of shoulder straps and brass buttons attached to his person. He was pushed to the front by the McKenzie and Oneal gang of corporation plunderers and was elected to an office, to maintain which he had to spend about three thousand dollars a year, and he received as pay the paltry sum of $1500. The total shortage as revealed by the city's expert was, in round figures, $8,700, and it was further claimed by the city authorities that the shortage occurred in the months beginning the 4th of January, and continuing until the 8th of March, 1904.

Now comes the revelation of the expert hired by the bonding companies. It is conclusively shown that the stealings began systematically with the second month of the Treasurer's incumbency, and continued at the rate of about $800 a month, and that in January, 1904, the total peculation for that month amounted to $3,000.

All this has been shown by the report of Expert McLaren, and the grand total is made out to be $9,800. The city charter calls for an experting of the books of the Treasurer once every year. The Mayor failed in his duty, and it is suspected that the experting was purposely delayed to give McGeogheghan enough rope to hang himself. In January the Treasurer made his report, and Mayor Worswick refused to sign it because of a knowledge of conditions, and yet this Mayor, in the month of February, in answer to a letter from the American Bonding Company of Baltimore wrote as follows: "... no reason to think there is anything wrong with our Treasurer."

The deduction naturally follows that as the election was coming off in May, and as the city was amply protected against loss. Worswick, Oneal and others, who were cognizant of the thefts, would let them go on and then at some critical time just before the casting of the ballot, explode the bomb in the McKenzie camp in the hope of destroying that unworthy gentleman's prestige. Thus it was that the politicians gambled with the money of both the American Bonding Company and the United States Fidelity and Trust Company.

Fischer's Theatre will close on Sunday night for a short time to allow the builders, carpenters, painters and an army of other workmen to make the necessary alterations that will transform this popular house into one of the most commodious and safest of modern theatres. The expectation is to open up again in May. The entrance will be widened by forty feet, and there are to be two new stairways, which will empty the balconies directly on O'Farrell street.

One hundred more seats will be added in the body of the house. Upon re-opening, all new faces will greet the audience.

PROMOTION OF CALIFORNIA.

Regarding the splendid work being done by the California Promotion Committee in advertising this part of California, it must be noted that this movement was the outgrowth of suggestions made by Isidor Jacobs, President of the California Canneries Company at the Convention of Fruit Growers held December, 1900, also in an article contributed by him to the San Francisco News Letter for the Christmas edition of 1900. In this article Mr. Jacobs pointed out the necessity of accomplishing something for advertising Northern California. The result was that a meeting was held shortly thereafter in the rooms of the Manufacturers and Producers Association in the Mills Building of a committee appointed from the different counties around the Bay. At this meeting Mr. T. H. Goodman of the Southern Pacific Company, was asked to be present, and he delegated Mr. McCormick to attend the meeting. Mr. McCormick stated he was about to go East in reference to the establishing of rates from Eastern sections of California, and would see what could be done to put into effect a colony rate. It is unnecessary to mention the fact that this colony rate was put into effect, and has resulted in great good to the movement. The outgrowth of this committee, of which Mr. Isidor Jacobs was chairman, was the formation of the California Colony Association, of which Mr. H. D. Loveland was appointed President. This committee accomplished considerable, and finally yielded to the formation of the California Promotion Committee, which now deserves the support of every citizen that has the good of this part of the State at heart.

In the same article written for the News Letter in 1900, Mr. Jacobs outlined the necessity of the commercial organizations of this State having a personal representative at Washington to take up on behalf of our commercial interests, matters of importance requiring national legislation or action. From this suggestion came the appointment the year afterwards by the Chamber of Commerce of William M. Bunker to locate permanently at Washington to represent the Chamber of Commerce in all matters vitally effecting this city and State.

Tickling the palate of the epicure with all the viands and the best vintage the market affords is the business of the Moraghan Oyster House in the California Market. This restaurant has earned a repute that is as broad as the United States and as long as a line drawn between San Francisco and New York.

BY THE AUTOCRANK

The Race Committee of the Automobile Club of California, composed of L. P. Lowe, chairman; Samuel G. Buckbee and Charles C. Moore, have settled on the dates for the race meet and show.

Saturday, May 28th and Monday, May 30th, are the days scheduled. This will practically give two holidays for the event. It is impossible to give any races on Sunday, as the National Association, under which they are racing, does not allow of Sunday racing.

* * *

The show will take place under the grand stand at Ingleside in the space now occupied by the betting ring. The area has been divided off into forty sections, which will be rented to the different representatives.

The show should be a great attraction, as it is the first time such an event has been held in San Francisco.

* * *

The programme for the races has not as yet been made out, but the Race Committee has guaranteed that it will be so completed that there will be interesting finishes in every event. The races will be worked so as to illuminate processions. Besides, the purses will be of an amount that will attract the crackerjack drivers of the East.

* * *

The Sunday intervening between the two racing days will undoubtedly be used by the club for a run about the city on the many drives. Like last year, many automobilists will be on hand from all over the State, and a "squadron" run would make a very pleasing feature of the occasion.

* * *

It has been suggested that the Park Commissioners might be prevailed upon, on this occasion, to throw open all the drives of the Park for the day. There will undoubtedly be many visiting automobilists, and to enforce the present rules and regulations would bar many visitors who would prove, by their attendance, their ability to comply with the rules, but who, on account of the limited time they would have in the city, would be unable to take an examination to get the right to use the Park drives.

* * *

The suggestion made in the News Letter some weeks ago of having the great highway south extended down to Half Moon Bay, has met with approval, but as yet no attempt has been made to interest the Supervisors of San Francisco and San Mateo Counties. If these officials do not look with favor on the proposition, it would be in the power of the local club to build a speedway some three miles long over the proposed route.

Los Angeles is building such a speedway, and San Francisco should not allow the southern part of the State to hold the honors for progressiveness, although they did capture the world's track record on a track not the equal of Ingleside.

* * *

A general meeting should be called by the Automobile Club of California at the time of the racing meet. It will be the one occasion during the year when an enthusiastic gathering would take place. Such a meeting is important, for California is shortly to hold an election, and the way the county officials have been passing ordinances demands that in that locality the automobilist must ignore party lines and work to elect men who will stand for good roads and uniform rules and regulations.

We will come to it sooner or later. It will be but the repetition of what has happened in New York State. So we might as well strike now as later.

The motor-cyclists and the representative wheelmen might be requested to attend. They are interested in good roads and control a vote that alone would elect or defeat. The former are experiencing almost the same trouble as the automobilists.

James D. Phelan has purchased a high-power French machine, and has it at the Pioneer Automobile Company's garage.

The Darracq car is the favorite of two continents.

L. T. Shettler announces that the Pioneer Auto Co., of San Francisco, with branch office at 420 So. Hill street, Los Angeles, purchased the Oldsmobile agency for Southern California, retaining him as their sales-manager for that territory. The business will be continued as heretofore at the same old stand until the 1st of May, when they will remove to their city branch.

The Mobile Carriage Company finds it necessary to enlarge its garage space at the expense of the classroom. Machines have come in for storage at such a rapid rate that it has exceeded the expectations as well as the garage and locker space.

The California Automobile Company Outing Club enjoyed their initial run Sunday, April 24th. They left the garage at 11 a. m., and after a short run around the city, took the Creek Route to Oakland. After visiting the places of interest in and around Oakland and Piedmont, they proceeded to Haywards, passing through San Leandro. Luncheon was enjoyed at the latter place. Among those who made the run were: Bert Marron, Frank Marron, John McCarthy, Leo. Maxon, Frank Maxon, Theo. Shieve, Perry Minner, George Fairweather, Al. Robinson, William Newbert, Charles Tamany.

Seventy-five per cent of all motor cars imported into the United States are Darracqs.

Winton's entry is made for the International Cup. Bullet II will be in the American eliminating trials. Harry Owensey may drive. No German trial event will take place. The Mercedes and Opel Darracq only entrants.

There is a chance that there will be a Darracq car on each of the French, English and German international cup race teams, this car being manufactured in these countries. What an elegant chance for "team work." Ought to man these cars with old bicycle riders.

The Mobile Carriage Company provided a number of automobiles on Sunday for Charles E. Schwab. The start was made from the Hotel St. Francis about 11 o'clock. The trip included the Cliff House, Presidio, and other points of interest.

J. A. Marsh, president of the Mobile Carriage Co., and Mrs. Marsh made a trip to San Jose on Saturday, returning Sunday.

Probably the best way to note the rapid progress of the automobile industry in San Francisco is to take a seat on a bench along the South drive in Golden Gate Park on a Sunday afternoon, and note the number of machines which are being driven. An interested party counted seventy-three cars passing through the Park last Sunday. They were as follows: Wintons, 35; Whites, 13; Pierces, 3; Autocars, 10; Packards, 4; Peerless, 1; Toledoes, 7; total, 73.

THE PASSIONATE READER TO HIS POET.

By Richard Le Gallienne in The Book Lover

Doth it not thrill thee, Poet,
 Dead and dust though art,
 To feel how I press thy singing
 Close to my heart?
 Take it at night to my pillow,
 Kiss it before I sleep;
 And again when the delicate morning
 Beginneth to peep?
 See how I bathe thy pages
 Here in the light of the sun;
 Through thy leaves, as a wind among roses,
 The breezes run.
 Feel how I take thy poem
 And bury within it my face,
 As I pressed it last night in the heart of a
 Or deep in a dearer place. [flower,
 Think, as I love thee, Poet,
 A thousand love beside;
 Dear women love to press thee, too,
 Against a sweeter side.
 Art thou not happy, Poet?
 I sometimes dream that I
 For such a fragrant fame as thine
 Would gladly sing and die.
 Say, wilt thou change thy glory
 For this same youth of mine?
 And I will give my days i' the sun
 For that great song of thine.

MY GOLDEN SANDS.

By Elsa Barker in Everybody's Magazine

To-day I meditate upon the years
 Whose sands have fallen in the glass of Time
 Since I was flung into this foreign clime
 Out of Infinitude. And it appears
 That the reward of agony and tears
 Is always knowledge; while the masqued mime
 Of mortal life is modeled on sublime
 Experience—to teach all things but fears.
 And though these little grains of golden sand
 Have drawn one thread of silver thro' my hair,
 I would not count them backward. And I swear
 That each to come shall leave to my demand
 Some spiritual treasure in my hand—
 And take no bauble that I would not spare!

THE FIRSTBORN.

By Margaret Bartlett Coble in Good Housekeeping

Into the light of the days to be,
 Out of the dusk of Eternity,
 In the white hush of the fragrant morn,
 God shall give thee my soul new-born.
 Thine be the anguish, mother mild!
 The ecstasy thine of bearing the child!
 Mine the still wonder of life begun,
 The brooding joy of being thy son!
 Into the shrine of thy motherhood
 God sends my soul to be fashioned for good,
 And in thy dream of the man to be Thou shalt fathom divinity.

The recent annual election for directors of the Home Insurance Company of New York made some changes. Mr. John H. Washburn, connected with the company for many years, in various positions of responsibility, and since April, 1901, its official head, declined re-election as President and presented his resignation. The office thus made vacant has been filled by the Board of Directors by the advancement of Mr. Elbridge G. Snow to the Presidency. Mr. Washburn will continue in close touch with the management of the Company, having been elected to the position of Chairman of the Board of Directors. The titles of Second and Third Vice-President have been discarded and that Mr. Emanuel H. A. Correa has been honored by election to the Board of Directors and to the Vice-Presidency, and that Mr. Frederic C. Buswell has been re-elected Vice-President.

The death of M. M. Rohrer, for almost twenty-seven years the chief deputy insurance commissioner for the State of California, died on the morning of the 24th. Mr. Rohrer made amongst the insurance men of San Francisco an enviable reputation for probity, and his death is deeply regretted.

It is wondered who will be appointed his successor and it is feared that the position will be filled by some politician who knows only politics and nothing of insurance. If this be done, the business of insurance will suffer, and it is to be hoped that the enormous interests of insurance as represented by the managers of the various companies of all kinds will take such action as to compel the appointment of an efficient deputy.

The Honor of the Japanese

An officer of the English Navy, well versed in the sentiments and customs of the Japanese as a people, says that the Japanese are "Excellent little chaps"; they were always at it, always anxious to learn. The only thing about them was that when they thought you weren't looking they would pick up things you had not shown them and try to find out the secret.

If those Japanese officers had known it, they would have gone to the ends of the earth to remove so dubious an impression, for in the traditions of the Japanese fighting class, honor is more than life. "Bushido," their code of honor, was the religion of the Samurai. Literally translated, the word "samurai" means military-knight-ways, the path the fighting man must tread in his daily life as well as in his vocation.

All this came nominally to an end with the downfall of the feudal system in 1870. The samurai—the knightly class between the nobles and the plebeians—ceased to exist as an exclusive caste after the edict prohibiting the wearing of swords. They began to intermarry with the plebeians, and to engage in trade. Bushido was no longer the only rule of life, providing for all its shifting changes. Chivalry—which is class privilege at its best—could not live in a democratic atmosphere.

Every Japanese, be he noble or plebeian, must now serve his term in the army. Nor are the officers an exclusive caste, for promotion is open to every man who will take the trouble to earn it. But it happens in the Japanese army, as it happens in the English and the German—while every private soldier is free to become an officer, the great bulk of the officers do, as a matter of fact, come from a restricted section. In England it is in the upper and upper middle class; in Japan it is the samurai—samurai still, whatever the edicts and the constitutions may say.

In the very fibre of their being the traditions of Bushido remain. Those who are not less than 35 years old were taught it at their mother's knee, and many of the younger men, coming of the same warrior stock, are imbued with the principles of the code.

Dr. Nitobe, who has written a wonderful little exposition of Japanese thought, "Bushido, the Soul of Japan," protests against the assertion that Japan beat the Chinese by means of Murata guns and Krupp cannon. "No! What won the battles on the Yalu, in Korea, and Manchuria, was the ghosts of our fathers, guiding our hands and beating in our hearts. They are not dead, those ghosts, the spirits of our warlike ancestors. Scratch a Japanese of the most advanced ideas, and he will show a samurai."

The samurai began his training at a very tender age. Young children were sent among utter strangers with messages to deliver; they were made to rise before the sun, and to walk to their teachers with bare feet in the cold of winter; small boys were taken to see executions, and sent back alone to the place by night, to leave a mark on the decapitated head. Sometimes they were made to go without food, and taught that a samurai should not be ashamed to be hungry. Self-control, courage, fortitude, loyalty were the cardinal virtues.

The young samurai was taught fencing, archery, jiu-jitsu (clutching such part of the enemy's body as will make him numb and incapable of resistance), horsemanship, the use of the spear, tactics, calligraphy, ethics, literature and history.

"He was not to think of money; ignorance of the value of different coins was a token of good breeding. He was taught to forgive injuries, but he was also taught to hold his honor sacred, and to defend it at all times and at all hazards. To win honor and to avoid shame the samurai would go to any lengths.

Naturally, the man with a sword and Quixotic notions of honor was not always as gentle as he might be with those who assailed that honor. A citizen called the attention of a Bushi to a flea jumping on his back. Forthwith the Bushi cut him in two, and afterwards explained his reason by a syllogism: "Fleas are parasites which feed on animals; he said a flea was on me; and it is an unpardonable insult to identify a noble warrior with a beast."

The sword was the soul of the samurai, and the swordsmith worked as if he were performing holy rites. Even the learned doctor feels the spell of his magic. "Its cold blade, collecting on the surface the moment it is drawn the vapors of the atmosphere; its immaculate texture, flashing light of bluish hue; its matchless edge, upon which histories and possibilities hang; the curve of its back, uniting exquisite grace with utmost strength—all these thrill us with mixed feelings of power and beauty, of awe and terror."

Under certain conditions suicide was the plainest duty, and elaborate ceremonies were laid down for the manner in which it should be done. But the glorification of the deed offered alluring temptations. "For causes entirely incompatible with reason, or for reasons entirely undeserving of death, hot-headed youths rushed into it as insects fly into fire; mixed and dubious motives drove more samurai to this deed than nuns into convent gates. No circle in the Inferno will boast of greater density of Japanese population than the seventh, to which Dante consigns all victims of self-destruction."

The women were also taught that death is a better thing than shame. "When a Japanese Virginia saw her chastity menaced, she did not wait for her father's dagger. Her own weapon lay always in her bosom. It was a disgrace to her not to know the proper way in which to perpetrate self-destruction. She must know the exact spot to cut in her throat; she must know how to tie her lower limbs together with a belt, so that, whatever the agonies of death might be, her corpse be found in utmost modesty, and with the limbs properly composed."

Although Bushido, with its fortitude and its punctilio, its odd mixture of the Spartan and the Quixotic, is no longer a recognized system, its spirit remains; and that may be the reason why the unofficial Japs are so eager for war, and so confident as to its result.

It is a Bird

Beside the mighty River Platte,
Beneath the Waning Moon,
I hear a Roar Like Foote in Wrath,
It is the Lincoln Loon.

Nor every Sougning Wind that Blows
Through Whiskers wild in June,
Can hush the awful Sounds that ring
From out that Talking Loon .

Nor Sweetest Song of Balaam's Ass,
Can jar that Tireless Loon,
When late, at Night his Scream is heard
Across the Dark Lagoon.

Then let Sweet Lilies ever grow
Beside the Crystal Streams;
Nor ever think the Loon is Sick;
He's seldom what He seems.

Then cease, Ye troubled Harps of Earth!
Be Still, Oh, Asses! Bray!
Though Silent every other Tongue,
The Loon will have his Say.

For Harmony is working now
Through every Wigwam Chief;
And till Election Day has come,
The Loon will not be brief.

And whether on a Lincoln Stump,
Where beats the Sun at Noon,
Or down in Dixie's cooling Shade,
Will sing that Wordy Loon.

Forever, on Nebraska's Plain
The Weeping Willows groan,
But wilder far is blown to me
The Loon's despairing Tone.

Then blow, sweet-scented summer Winds,
Blow hard from Lincoln Town;
Ye blow this Message drear to me,
"The Loon will not stay down."

They why should Hill or Grover try To Harmonize that Bird?
Its Melody is sweeter far
When all alone 'tis heard.

And so wherever Jawbone sways
A People long oppressed,
Those screams shall raise the Hope in Man,
That Bryan be suppressed.

—Will L. Rogers.

—One goes naturally to Swain's on Sutter street for a good luncheon. There is nothing in town that can compare with this place as a place of rest and refreshment after the toils of shopping. They are always ready to deliver ice-cream and pastry—always the best, and their promptness can be depended upon.

—The Techau Tavern is the place to go after the theatre. It tops off the evening splendidly. The refreshments of all sorts are of the best quality and the price is reasonable.

—Dust soon disfigures your summer clothes. It is necessary now to find some place where the damage may be repaired and an expensive suit saved. Appearances are everything, and Spaulding's Cleaning and Dyeing Works, 127 Stockton street will help you to keep them up. They also clean gloves, cravats, curtains and such articles. Goods called for and delivered promptly.

(Stolen from Thieves)

The husband sits in deep thought—in his hand a huge book of philosophy. On the floor near his chair are other books, in which the world's greatest thinkers have set forth their views on the future life. Across the room, at a mirror, the wife is trying the effect of a new bonnet with her hair done in different styles. "No," says the husband at last; "all these fellows are wrong about the next world." "What is it, Henry?" asks the wife. "I have just decided that heaven is a place where women are always buying spring bonnets and the other place is a spot where the men are forever paying for them."—Judge.

Little George (rushing in)—Oh, mother— His Mother (from the telephone)—Hush! Take off your hat. I'm at church, and the minister has just announced his text.—Judge.

Upstairs "Fifteen two and a pair makes four," said Subbubs, who was playing cribbage with Popley; "what have you in your crib?" "Ah," replied Popley, absent-mindedly, "just the sweetest 'tittle ootsums tootsums girl in the world."

"It is unkind of you to say I may not have ruffles and frills when they are in fashion," protests the wife. The husband preserves a grim silence. Here the wife grows angrier still and gives him a large piece of her mind. "It would not be becoming to to you," argues the husband, after she had paused for breath. "See how you look when even your temper is ruffled." Then she basted him.—Judge.

The Political Situation

As county after county elects its delegates to the Santa Cruz convention, the chances of Hearst controlling the Democratic party in California grow slimmer. One hundred and fifteen delegates so far have been elected, or selected, for in many localities the County committee does the choosing, who are either avowedly anti-Hearst or uninstructed, which in this case means the same thing. There will be 723 delegates to the convention, and Los Angeles and San Francisco will supply 223 of those, so that the country delegations with those from Sacramento and San Jose and San Diego number 500, and one-fourth of those are already anti-Hearst. So far as delegates have been chosen, the Hearst men are outnumbered two to one. In this city a fight will be made in every precinct against Hearst, and while he may get a majority of the 168 delegates, there is but little prospect that it will be a majority large enough to overcome the adverse country vote. Of all the county conventions, the one controlled by Editor Ben Maddox of Visalia was the most pronounced in its opposition to the self-styled champion of the people. It denounced Hearst plainly and by name. The Examiner will soon have to enlarge its building to afford accommodations to its rapidly increasing black list if this thing keeps on much longer.

* * *

Lane's letter to his former running mate on the State ticket, Dockweiler, will help along the anti-Hearst sentiment in the State, for Lane has many friends, and it is the general impression that he would be Governor to-day were it not for the Examiner. In fact, during the Lane campaign in 1902 Caminetti, who was managing the campaign, expressed that opinion, and although he is now imitating Maguire and bowing down to the Hearst shrine, he talked quite differently eighteen months and less ago.

* * *

It should not be understood, however, that because the Democrats of California are not for Hearst they are for Parker. The Parker boom is not in much better shape than the Hearst. Democrats say very freely that they favor a man with a record of some sort, and they fear it will be impossible to elect Parker, especially with the influences that are behind him. The idea is to go to St. Louis uninstructed, and when there to try and find who will win out and give him the California votes. It is understood that Isadore B. Dockweiler will be the anti-Hearst candidate for delegate at large from Southern California as opposed to Mayor Snyder, and that Lane, Ed. Leake and Ben Maddox are the most likely candidates from this end of the line. Will Green and Congressman Bell are also mentioned as possible candidates.

Ex-Senator Bulla practically admits his defeat as candidate for delegate-at-large to Chicago from the South, and is now talking of two Southern delegates-at-large, but that idea does not meet with much encouragement, and is not at all likely to be adopted by the Convention. There are too many Northern candidates to make such a thing as two Southern delegates-at-large possible. The defeat of Bulla means the end of Bard.

There is going to be a lively time in the Third Senatorial District among the Republicans who want to go to the Legislature to succeed Senator Tyrrell. In the first place, the Senator would like to go back himself, and as he has made a good record, there seems no particular reason why his wish should not be gratified, except that John B. Irish of Sierra County would like to be called Senator for the next four years, and so would Senator Lardner, who has been switched out of the Fifth into the Third District, also thinks that his record justifies his return. Then F. M. Rutherford of Truckee would also like to wear the toga, and there are probably others who have not as yet announced themselves. Four candidates, however, ought to keep things from being dull in the Third this summer.

In this city, the list of candidates for the Legislature increases daily. The Senate, of course, is practically settled in some districts. Nelson and Wolfe are both candidates for re-election, and will both no doubt be re-named by their party. Thomas H. Lindsay is likely to get the chance to succeed the late Senator Williams in the Twenty-fourth District. For the Assembly, however, the crop of candidates promises to be very large. A number of them have already been mentioned in this column, including W. W. Allen, Jr., E. D. Knight, and others who have been there before. John T. Graham is a new candidate in the Thirty-third District, Frank Twigg in the Twenty-eighth, E. F. Hunt, who, I believe, however, wants a Labor Union nomination, although he is a "promoter," I. P. Kincaid, J. F. Quigg, and W. H. McMartin, who was in the last session.

In Stockton, or, rather, in San Joaquin County, they are already having a lively time over the nomination for State Senator. Senator Meunter wants to go back, and Assemblyman Dunlap wants to be promoted to the Senatorship. As they are entirely different types of men, the contest will be more than ordinarily bitter, and will last up to the last moment, with no hope of a compromise. C. H. Farrell wants to succeed Dunlap, and John W. Moore will probably go back from the district he represented in San Joaquin in the last Legislature. In Alameda County, John J. Mattos would like to be a State Senator from the Fifteenth District. Senator Flint proposes to be a candidate from his district again, and ex-Assemblyman C. W. Merrett of Santa Barbara wants to be the Senatorial representative of that section of the State.

* * *

The Democrats have not been as much in evidence as their Republican neighbors, but there are some of them willing to serve the State for a consideration. For Senators, Senator J. M. Plunket would like to be returned from the Seventeenth District. C. A. Sweigert is a candidate in the Twenty-first District, and Assemblyman Copus, the only brainy representative that Union Labor had in the last Legislature, wants to go back to Sacramento, but as Senator from the Nineteenth District. He would, of course, expect to be a Democrat as well as a Labor Union candidate, and I presume that the Democracy would be willing to endorse him, as they did before. Joseph Wannamaker wants the Democratic nomination for Assemblyman in the Thirty-eighth District, and Frank Malloy in the Forty-third.

It is practically settled that Duncan McKinley is to be the opponent of Congressman Bell in the Second District. Senator Devlin of Sacramento, who was mentioned for the place, has formally withdrawn, and Deputy Attorney-General Stutevant declines to be a candidate, although Mendocino would be only too glad to give him her vote. That leaves McKinley a clear field, and he will undoubtedly get the nomination. The attack made by Bell on the Soldiers' Home at Yountville has arrayed all the Grand Army influence against him, and McKinley says that although Bell is very popular, and has made a good Congressman, he thinks he can beat him.

In the Eighth District, however, things are not such plain sailing. Daniels is going to have a very hard fight to secure a re-nomination, and besides ex-Senator Smith of Kern and Senator Ward of San Diego he is likely to be confronted by C. C. Chapman at home. The papers in his District, even in his home town, are not for Daniels, and while they do not openly oppose him, they are continually booming some one else for the place. There are rumors, too, that Santa Barbara is looking up a candidate, so the prospect is that there will be as many candidates as there are counties in the district when the convention meets. One curious feature of the campaign for the nomination in the Eighth, however, is the fact that all the papers in the Southern end of the district are urging the Republicans not to cross the Tehachapi to name a candidate, declaring that it is good politics to boom your own community. Any one north of the Tehachapi is persona non grata to the good provincials who live south of that barricade.

The Brooklyn Eagle suggests that every body to be elected from the radical element of the party should be the most able man in the party. It is not a bad idea. The party should be made up of the best men in the party. The party should be made up of the best men in the party. The party should be made up of the best men in the party.

Early Fall to Him
 It is well known that it is the habit of the Brooklyn Eagle and other of language in the language of Mr. Hearst's New York Journal. The Brooklyn Eagle is a paper of the same kind as the New York Journal. It is a paper of the same kind as the New York Journal. It is a paper of the same kind as the New York Journal.

THE BRISBANE DISCUSSION

Clarity in Whistling Him as Other Papers Agree.
 (From the Jacksonville Journal.)
 The Brooklyn Eagle which was first for Parker has published a series of articles and then returned to Parker and began to attack the Brooklyn for President in case the Brooklyn is not of the New York Journal. The Brooklyn is not of the New York Journal. The Brooklyn is not of the New York Journal.

The Eagle's banner is vegetative and if it had possessed a combative life, the President William Franklin Hearst for the President Arthur Brisbane, the average point would have been somewhat different. —Baltimore Herald (1911)

In reply to the suggestion of Mr. Hearst's boss in the New York Herald by Arthur Brisbane Mr. Hearst's article reads: "The Brooklyn Eagle rises to support Mr. Hearst for the Democratic nomination in case of his complete qualification." There are those who believe that Mr. Hearst's other man as the Lord made the world be the word of His power. In the time of His days and all very good of as good as could be expected. Had Mr. Hearst's man agree to be anonymous as he is in all multi-questions. This is already well understood, but it is bound to become even better understood. —New Britain Herald (1911)

BRISBANE TIE DRAKES

The Kettle and its correspondents are right. Mr. Brisbane is the hero of the hour. He should get the honor of the moment. It is for the honor to it. —Knoxville Herald

As the Eagle truthfully says, Brisbane is the Journal and the Herald is Brisbane. The money is the money of Hearst, but the voice is the voice of Brisbane. —Schererville Kalamazoo Star (1911)

His nomination would be an indignity and a humbug. It would be the real thing. The Eagle desires two editorial columns to setting forth the availability of the radical Mr. Brisbane, but as stated, it does not agree to support him. But it evidently considers him better in the real thing than Hearst. —Jamaica News (1911)

Give the Honor to the Man.

(From the Rochester Herald.)
 The Brooklyn boom, launched from the Brooklyn Eagle a few days ago, eliciting much favorable comment, favorable, at least, from the point of view taken by the Eagle in its discussion of the Brisbane campaign. Hearst's plan is to elect Mr. Hearst to the office, in all that the Democracy is to have heard of that form of political lunge. As the Schererville Kalamazoo Star says: "It is Mr. Brisbane whose peculiar style of writing and diverse belief in the extreme doctrine he proclaims has given the New York American its political character and popularity, and all the other Hearst papers are but reproductions of the New York original."
 Mr. Hearst has exploited himself mainly with the talents of Mr. Brisbane, and while Brisbane's writing has not appeared in Hearst's newspaper, it has appeared in the papers of the conservative people. It has made Hearst's paper popular with a large class. Brisbane is a wage earner and a laborer who has written, the father was an aggressive Socialist. If the radical class wish a capable leader, let Brisbane, and not Hearst, who should have their support.

Mr. Hearst himself ought to perceive this plain ethical truth and withdraw in favor of Arthur Brisbane, subject to the will of the Democratic National Convention. Let us see if he will rise to the great moral duty with the situation so clearly transparent upon him.

If we are to have a red-dog revolutionist and Hearst socialist for a candidate the party should be made up of the best men in the party. The party should be made up of the best men in the party. The party should be made up of the best men in the party.

Hearst and Brisbane--or, The Fable of the Lion in the Ass's Skin

There was once a Lion who had, in Early Boyhood, imbibed the Principles of Anarchy, and desiring to teach these Principles to the "Common People" that he might better destroy them through their Unleashed Passions, he found himself face to face with a Problem. He had no Medium. So he sought a Guileless Ass and told him: "Through you shall the Common People be Saved." The Guileless Ass was easily identified through the Inherited Purse, the Society Eye and his Unbridled Lecherous Morality. The Ass agreed, and the Lion is now going about the country wearing the Skin of the Ass upon his back, thereby to fool the People. The Skin is Too Short, however, and the Lion finds it necessary to spend much of the Ass's Inheritance in his efforts to spread the Doctrine of Anarchy.

(The next chapter will be at Santa Cruz, and the conclusion, otherwise known as "finish," at St. Louis.)

EXIT CORNELIUS.

However it has been accomplished, San Francisco is devoutly thankful that she is to be spared the horrors of a street car strike for a year to come, if the carmen keep faith. Mayor Schmitz appears to have been the messenger of peace. Certainly no one desired or needed peace more than he. A strike would have set him down between the devil and extremely deep water. Had he been compelled to the extremity of putting policemen on the cars or of refusing to do, he might have begun figuring on going back to his fiddling, for in either case he would have been politically dead and cremated. Thus he had a motive stronger than his sense of duty to the community or any hope of direct profit such as often goes to the one arranging such a bargain as this. When he pleaded for peace he was pleading for his political life, and in such circumstances any man pleads his best.

It was three days of delay that turned the trick. Mayor Schmitz did not spend this time in persuading the men on the cars, but in begging the United Railroads for some concession, no matter how slight, which he could flourish triumphantly before the mass meeting. The concession was slight enough, as the carmen have doubtless found out by this time—a mere re-phrasing of one clause of the agreement so scornfully rejected by the employees only a few days before, adding nothing to the wages offered, yielding nothing of the company's determination to do its own hiring and discharging of men. But it sufficed for a showing. There was only Cornelius to be convinced. It was he, ruling the union by terror, who demanded a strike. It was his hand that clutched at the company's check-book, his lifted hand that made the carmen crouch and cower. Sometime on Tuesday last Schmitz "convinced" Cornelius—how one may not say—that he wanted peace, and not a strike. It is not hard for a man with money at his command and with jobs to give a promise to deal with a man who wants both or either. At all events, Cornelius, the bully-leader of the carmen crawled back into his kennel and became a good dog. The rest was easy.

There may have been some understanding between Schmitz and Cornelius, but that will not matter much to the public. Almost any evil would be preferable to such a conflict as a car strike would have inevitably brought about. And besides a year's peace, it is probable that this transaction will produce still greater good in the elimination of Cornelius, than whom organized labor never had a worse exponent. After his deal with Schmitz, it is not likely that the few who trusted him will trust him any more, nor that the many who feared him will any longer tremble at his frown. As between Schmitz and Cornelius we should not select Cornelius.

INDISCRIMINATE CLOSING OF SCHOOLS.

We are properly fond of that California fraternity, the Native Sons of the Golden West, and properly proud of the staunch warships built in this harbor, but the fact that one of these vessels was christened "California," and that on this account the Native Sons had charge of her launching, was no excuse for a holiday in the public schools. We are prone to ridicule our Latin-American neighbors, who make the anniversary of almost anything or anybody an excuse for shutting up shop and giving the day to feasting and idleness. Before we laugh at them again, let us recall that we tried to have the launching day of the California made a legal holiday—fortunately Governor Pardee had the good sense to forbid us this foolishness—and that we succeeded in closing up the schools for a day. The absurdity of this appears when it is known that not one in a hundred of the city's school children saw the launching or could have seen it had they desired. It was largely a private function, visible by invitation, and only in a limited way open to those who could afford to pay their way, as nine-tenths of the school children could not afford to do. Closing the schools for an affair not wholly public and of only minor public importance is foolish and worse than foolish; it is an injustice to the people, who pay taxes for the education of their children and an injustice to the children themselves.

We may very well be not too severe in administering that greatest of public trusts, the public school system, and it is far from the News Letter's thought to preach against patriotism and State pride, but we do object to tom-foolery like that of the California's launching. If the affair had been arranged for the benefit and instruction of the children, if they had been the guests of honor and the chief participants in the ceremony, then this sermonette would have no text, but as it was, the School Board merely told the children to run out and play while a few of their elders went out to see a warship slide into the water. The members of the Board simply allowed themselves to forget their duty. They and the young men of the Native Sons should have the grace to be ashamed and to promise themselves and the public that they will not do it again.

LIVERNASH'S LAST HOWL.

One of the memorable incidents that marked the day of adjournment in the House of Representatives was the manner in which Congressman Williams, leader of the minority, took the floor from Livernash, the misfit from this city, and choked him off so effectually that the last howl of Hearst's man was heard in the outer corridors, and not on the floors of Congress. During the absence of Livernash, Bell had called up his Mendocino land bill by unanimous consent, and it was about to be passed when Livernash entered the House and asked time to oppose the bill. This opposition was animated by his envy of Bell's great success at Washington, and was in furtherance of the announced purpose to oppose every measure Bell might introduce. Williams gave Livernash the floor, but within three minutes the minority leader crowded Hearst's man aside, choked him off, and retained the floor himself until final adjournment for the very purpose of preventing Livernash again raising his voice in opposition to a measure which was not only beneficial to California, but which had also been given the support of a majority of the members of the Lower House. The House adjourned without passing the bill, and Livernash thereby gained his point. But it was at great cost to himself and his proprietor, for his conduct proved to the satisfaction of all the members of the House that the estimates given of the Livernash character by those who knew him in this State were by no means overdrawn. Ever since he met Bell at Washington, and learned of the high respect in which that able young man is held, the petty soul of Livernash has been filled with envy. He has taken advantage of every opportunity to work out his spite, and it is characteristic of his nature that he now finds pleasure in the sensation of having satisfied his desire for revenge that arose from his own acknowledgment of his colleague's superiority. He will return to a constituency that long since found out the enormity of the error it committed in electing him, and that is accepting with true contrition and resignation the burden it must bear until his term is over.

How different will be the home-coming of Bell! The people of the Second District are thankful to him for all he did, and for all he tried to do for them in Washington. The enmity of Hearst and Livernash has endeared Bell to his people. They love him for the enemies he has made. The Democrats of his district are with him in his fight against the "yellow fellow" and his hirelings. While Bell was attending to the business for which he was sent to Washington, Hearst's hired man was running errands for his master. On the day that the conference committee reported against the provision in the naval appropriation bill providing for the construction of colliers at Mare Island, neither Hearst nor Livernash was present; but Bell arose to the occasion and saved the colliers, despite the adverse report of the committee. That was another reason why Livernash opposed Bell. The latter met with too large a measure of legitimate success. The people of the Fourth District have only themselves to blame for inflicting Livernash upon the country. With the lesson before them, a repetition of the error is impossible.

MURDER IN THE NAME OF THE LAW.

Oakland, long foremost among California cities in education, religion and all the refinements of civilization, has suddenly and strangely relapsed into a condition of savagery. Last week its uniformed policemen lay all one night about a shanty in which was a demented negro, armed, sullen and defiant. They had him so surrounded that his only hope of escape was in suicide. Oakland's Chief of Police, a mild-appearing, spectacled person named St. Clair Hodgkins, at the head of a squad of police demolished the house and riddled the place with bullets. A little later a policeman brought out what was left of the negro from what was left of the shanty. House and man had been literally shot to pieces.

The next day a Coroner's Jury, composed of God-fearing, church-going, order-loving Oaklanders, found that the police had killed the negro "in the discharge of their duty," and that "said shooting was justifiable and commendable upon the part of said officers."

All this in the name of law and justice, in the enlightened twentieth century and in the pious and peaceful city of Oakland!

The city across the bay is to be condoled with for back-sliding into a degree of barbarism that would have disgraced a frontier town of forty years ago; for the affliction of this Hodgkins, and for such a jury of citizens. All the facts prove this to have been a murder, all the more cowardly and contemptible because it was done under the guise and protection of the law. The scene of this official slaughter was a street which is never crowded, and is not at any time an essential part of Oakland's system of thoroughfares. A dozen or more expert riflemen covered every possible avenue of escape. All the adjoining houses had been vacated. No life but the negro's was in possible peril. A telephone message to the nearest engine house would have brought apparatus enough to deluge the shanty and wash the negro out like a drowned rat. If that had been deemed inexpedient, the street could have been roped off, as is done in Oakland whenever there is a fire. The guard could have been maintained in safe places and at safe distances, and in a few hours at most hunger would have cooled the negro's madness and sent him out to a meek surrender.

Had this "justifiable and commendable" killing taken place in Oklahoma or Arkansas or down in the "black belt," the press of the bay cities would have damned its perpetrators from Gehenna to breakfast as uniformed murderers. But it was done in humane, civilized Oakland, and so, to this hour no editor has criticised it, no citizen's voice has cried out "shame!" against the brutal bungler of a Hodgkins. A man who would do such a thing is not fit to carry a loaded pistol; is not fit to patrol a beat, let alone captain a force of peace-preservers. Knocking mild-eyed sheep on the head with an axe in the stockyard shambles at West Berkeley would be the proper billet for Hodgkins. As for the good citizens who found his course both "justifiable" and "commendable," let them take it to their souls—and we are certain of this as the sober judgment of the decent men in their community—that they are well-nigh as guilty as the butcher they have praised. Oakland has need to get rid of Hodgkins, to draw better citizens on her inquest juries, to wash her hands of the blood that is on them, and to strive by faith and works and repentance for a renewal of the State's esteem.

COOK'S REMARKABLE WRIT.

Superior Judge Carroll Cook seems to be suffering from a misconception of the respect which he should accord to his own rulings. Having issued an injunction restraining the police from interfering with the propagation of vice at the notorious resort on upper Dupont street, he now considers it his duty as an "honest, upright judge" to levy heavy fines upon policemen who have arrested the women who have flaunted their colors of scarlet under the protection of the court's writ. Judge Cook, when a practicing attorney, was noted for the persistency with which he conducted his cases, and particularly for the technicalities upon which he relied for success. He seems to have carried this regard for technicalities to the bench. He overlooks the wide distinction between the practice in criminal courts and courts of equity. A technicality which would estop proceedings in the former should be of but little avail in the latter. Courts of equity are, presumably, conducted on broader plans than others. It is the main business of an equity judge to get at the right of the question before him, and to render rulings based on equitable grounds rather than on technicalities. In the cases before Judge Cook, the question at issue is between the community and these inmates. The latter have succeeded in obtaining an injunction prohibiting the police from arresting them. It is very questionable whether such petitioners should be heard at all in a court of equity. They come into court covered with the slime of their corruption, and actually succeed in getting an order under which they may ply their nefarious business without interruption. It is a most remarkable condition of affairs for which few parallels can be found. It seems to us that Judge Cook would render better service to the community and comply more strictly with the spirit of equity practice, if he would dismiss the injunction, and permit the police to suppress the vile den now protected by his writ. It is sometimes necessary for a court, upon more mature deliberation, to change its rulings. One of these opportunities has come to Judge Cook.

FOR SUBURBAN RESIDENTS.

Suburban residents find much to interest them in a bulletin on annual flowering plants just issued by the Department of Agriculture at Washington. The Department has taken up the subject of the adornment of small suburban houses on estates, and the gardens on city lots. Every lover of the beautiful in nature may obtain the advice of the Government scientists, without cost, by procuring a copy of the bulletin. The plans suggested for adornment have all been formulated with strict regard for economy, for the main purpose of the bulletin is to aid people of moderate means, rather than to assist the wealthy, who may hire landscape gardeners of their own. Every detail has been worked out with great care, with the result that it is demonstrated that most satisfactory effects can be produced with no greater expenditure than now attends the maintenance of many small gardens that are noted mostly for their simplicity. It is the Government's intention to encourage planting home areas according to prepared plans. Model working plans have been drawn, which, with proper modifications for soil, climate, topography and other local conditions, can be adopted by small owners. These plans make provision for the growing of small fruits and vegetables, as part of the scheme of embellishment. Particular attention is given to the great variety of species of flowering plants and decorative vines and shrubs that may be used for adornment. The plans also present photographic prints of homes adorned in accordance with the suggestions of the experts of the Department of Agriculture. Owners with limited means, who may not wish to invest in shrubbery, will find the chapter on decorative annual grasses of much interest. Detailed instructions will assist in the proper development of that very rare charm of a residence property—a perfect lawn. The bulletin tells not only what grasses are best for the various sections of the country, but how to grow them. Much attention is also given to the artistic arrangement of walks, drives and terraces, and the location of fountains, flagpoles and other objects with regard to the best effects. The entire bulletin is replete with matters of delightful interest to those who enjoy nature's beauties. High ideals have been kept in view, the purpose of the Department's scientists being to cultivate an intelligent appreciation of beautiful homes among the people, to the end that all the communities of the country, and the nation at large, may be thereby benefited. Local residents, and owners of homes in Oakland Alameda, San Jose, Berkeley, San Rafael, Sausalito, and other towns, would do well to avail themselves of this opportunity to obtain valuable advice for home adornment. The bulletin referred to is officially known as Farmers' Bulletin No. 195, and is entitled "Annual Flowering Plants." It may be obtained upon written application to the Department of Agriculture at Washington, D. C.

THE PREVALENCE OF CANCER.

A New York surgeon, with an eye for figures, has issued a very remarkable statement regarding the prevalence of cancer in the United States. He says that the terrible disease has had a most remarkable growth during the past quarter-century, and he quotes statistics to prove his assertions. He says that the highest mortality is along the Pacific Coast, where the rate is 51.9 in 100,000, and that among the larger cities San Francisco leads in mortality, the figures being as follows: San Francisco, 112 in 100,000; Philadelphia, 73.6; New York, 64.7; Chicago, 63.3. The New York authority does not state the source of his statistics, and they are probably home-made. Wherever he obtained them, their publication throughout the country will certainly have a tendency to injure the entire Pacific Coast, and this city in particular. Women are supposed to be more prone to cancer than men, and the wives of intending immigrants are certainly not going to rush into a land where, according to the New York physician, one of the most fearful diseases known to mankind is more prevalent and more deadly than anywhere else in the country. We do not believe the figures given are reliable, for if they stated facts, they would not be received with the intense astonishment with which local physicians have read them. They are somewhat in line with the very remarkable statistics which have been published from time to time regarding the prevalence of insanity in this State. California sometimes suffers in the statistical column because thousands of people afflicted with incurable maladies, mental or physical, after trying all the cures known to the East, are sent here by their friends in a last endeavor to bring them back to health. Naturally, many of them are incurable when they arrive, and when their cases go into the statistical tables, California is thereby burdened with the ills of strangers, who have nothing in common with us, and who should not be charged against us. The cancer canard should be run down by the local Board of Health, and by the State Board also, and the correct figures given to the world, so that the city and the State may not again suffer for something that does not exist.

What a dreadfully demoralizing place the Philippines must be! An army officer who contracted a bigamous marriage in San Francisco has been pronounced insane, and his disability is stated to be due to service in the Philippines. We have heard that climate of Manila made accountable for all sorts of speculation and fraud; we have heard it blamed for what the strict would call immoralities, but never yet have we heard it accused of causing bigamy in San Francisco. A trip to Manila seems to be a necessary preliminary to a full enjoyment of life.

People who get their religion by telephone need not expect in the hereafter to listen to the angels singing except by long-distance wire.

How Tyson Came Home. This is one of the best stories which it has been my good fortune to read for a long time. William A. Rideing, the author, whose "Captured Cunarder" showed for the first time what he could accomplish, has followed up his success and has produced in the novel with the above title a really interesting and wholesome tale. Not that it is by any means a perfect story; some parts are, on the contrary, quite hackneyed. He has been unable to avoid the obvious, and in one instance, that in which the villain is discovered to have wronged the sister of the principal character, he has made too evident a bid for the approval of the multitude who doubtless would expect some such denouement. This might pass unnoticed with the ordinary novelist of commerce, but Mr. Rideing belongs to so superior a type that this incident causes a feeling of disappointment and something of regret. It is a little too bad, however, to dwell long upon the blemishes in what is, after all, a fine, healthy bit of writing. Poor Tyson, who dreamt of England in the wilderness, who idealized it in his loneliness, and went home to find what it really was. He came back West and finished his days, small blame to him, and discovered that home is, after all, the place where one's affections are most closely bound up. Strong and interesting the book undoubtedly is, and every one who reads it will look forward to more work at the hands of the same writer.

Three Years in the Klondike. This book is placed before the public at a seasonable time of year. Fortune hunters are about prepared for the summer trip to Alaska, and will appreciate "Three Years in the Klondike." There are twenty-three half-tone illustrations, printed on a fine quality of paper. There is also a map showing the Klondike district. The author carries the reader from San Francisco to Dawson in a well-written description of the varied scenes encountered on the way. Experiences with snow, sleigh journeyings, stampeding, fire, robbery and murder, and then the fortunes and misfortunes of treasure-seekers all lend to the interest of the book. It is not alone of interest to seekers of fortune in Alaska, but is of value to the student who wishes to be informed of the manners and customs of the natives. The author tells us that all necessary vegetables will grow near the main stream of the Yukon, as well as food for horses. A man can now take his family to near Dawson, settle in one of the valleys, and sell all his produce at good figures to Dawson and other settlements that now exist. The rigors of the winter have been lessened by modern innovations, and people who can winter in Montana and Northern Russia would almost enjoy existence on the banks of the Yukon.

In his new story of London life, Anna, The Adventuress. Mr. Oppenheim takes for heroines two sisters, Anna and Annabel, who look almost exactly alike. Annabel got herself talked about when the sisters were living in Paris, and then calmly married Sir John Ferringhall, a prospective M. P., although that astute Britisher thought he was marrying Anna. This is followed by many complications. The subtle study of character, as shown in the two sisters, is masterly. The subordinate characters, Sir John Ferringhall, David Courtlaw, and others, are delineated with almost as much ability. But it is for his power of telling a story that Mr. Oppenheim first made a name, and in none of his novels is this power more manifest. From beginning to end it goes on increasing in interest as it progresses, and sparkles with brilliant conversation and unusual situations.

The book contains sixteen illustrations, including a poster frontispiece of "Anna."

"I" is one of those books in which, as the advertisement says, a woman tells the truth about herself. Experience has taught the reviewer of many books that this sort of book is generally unveracious, and that as a study of real life it is practically useless. This book is no exception to the rule. The writer's point of view is the only interesting, and, it must be confessed, unpleasant, part of the story. As a study in morbid self-consciousness it is perhaps, within certain limits, a success. As a contribution to serious study of human nature, it is an unmitigated and distinct failure. "I" is a neurotic egotist, in which the sex instinct is abnormally developed, and whose self-consciousness is almost hideous in its exaggeration. One does not know whether she is most detestable as a woman who accepts gifts from a man other than her husband, and who shrinks with a sort of unctuous righteousness from the consequences of her own acts, or as a penitent whose overwrought self-flagellation still bespeaks the same prurient self-consciousness as the yielding to her sensuous nature. There is a diabolism of self-denial just as there is of over-indulgence, and the amiable lady who spreads herself for our delectation over three hundred and fifty pages of type is all the way through the victim of diabolism in one or other of these forms. The introduction says that the picture is not one of an ideal woman. If the term ideal be used in the sense of unreal, it is just what the picture is, and it is to the credit of human nature that it is so. One redeeming feature is that the author has wisely chosen to veil herself in anonymity.

The Coming River Convention.

The commercial organizations of the bay, and contiguous to Sacramento and San Joaquin Counties, have called what is known as the River Convention, with the intention of providing some effective remedy for floods which now and then inundate the fertile plains of the Sacramento and San Joaquin. Why in the world they should eternally allude to these vast stretches of territory as valleys is something not easily divined. The convention is called to meet on May 23d at the Palace Hotel. The project is colossal in character, and one which will involve, if it is determined to make the work thorough, an immense amount of time and labor. The $5,000,000 suggested as the likely cost of cutting a new channel to tide water from a point sufficiently high to meet the exigencies of some unusually wet winter, ought for safety sake to be multiplied by ten. Another thing which has never yet been considered in connection with this scheme for handling the overflow of water from these rivers when running bank high, nor has it yet ever been publicly discussed, is the tidal movement which no down current has ever or will ever be strong enough to check when it is on the flow. This, with a normal rise to the height of six feet, must always be a factor to be considered in any proposition to carry off the surplus water from the channel cut in the process of centuries. That the old levee system would answer the purpose better than anything else seems to be susceptible of proof, when the years are taken into account which have passed without the lamentable losses of the winter just passed.

The new method of dredging material for construction work from the river bottom puts it within reach of owners of this valuable land along the river to secure themselves against loss, and the only wonder is that they have not to take the precaution to protect themselves against the possibility of any unusual rise of the river to the danger point. The hope is expressed in local mining circles that the mercantile organizations, which are naturally only too desirous of helping out the farming element of this section of the State, are not being used by the opponents of hydraulic mining to inaugurate a new war on the miner. It is remarked that among the interests invited to attend the convention, the Miners' Association of California does not appear. Some eight years ago, Lieutenant-Governor Neff appointed a committee, consisting of Judge Niles Searles, Marion Biggs, Edward Coleman, Charles D. Yale and W. C. Ralston to attend one of these river conventions at Sacramento. They went according to appointment, but were allowed to cool their heels in the corridor, nor were they asked to take any part in the proceedings. If the anti-debris men are to have a hand in the coming convention, the miners should be represented as well in a spirit of fairness, if nothing else.

Gold First—Then the Farmer.

The gold lost to the State during the ten years which the injunction against hydraulic miners prevailed at the instance of the cabbage growers on the river flats below, is estimated at between eighty and one hundred millions of dollars. Now that the dredgers are at work on the upper stretches of the rivers, the loss is being regained to some extent. Speaking of the good results now being obtained by recovering the yellow metal from ground hitherto deemed sacred to the orchardist and agriculturist, the Call of today says editorially: "Along the Feather and Yuba rivers the modern gold-dredging machine has become a great producer of wealth. The deposits of the precious metal that have been swept down by floods for thousands of years have been discovered. Where orcharded areas have succeeded the yearly wheat fields by the river banks dredgers for gold have come to effect another transformation. The orchards have been pulled up and destroyed." It seems impossible to convince the fanatical disciples of the so-called Anti-Debris Association that it is always time enough to grow grain, fruit and vegetables on gold-bearing soil after its valuable product has been recovered. However, the right always prevails at last, as the work now going on at Oroville and around there proves. The orange growers there were a little too previous, that is all. Now that the golden store has been taken from their soil, it will go to pay in the future for the golden fruit they will now proceed to raise.

A Light which Darkens our Darkness.

The price of the S. F. Gas and Electric Company has not bolted out of sight as a great many thought it would upon the settlement of the differences which existed between the managerial cliques, nor is it likely to in the future. Boosting, for the sake of appearances, may work prices up a few points, but the advance is only likely to continue until some outsiders begin to sell, and then look out. There is one thing dead certain—the higher the stock goes, the more money there will be for the man of means who has the nerve to sell upon each advance and keeps his stock out. It is only a matter of a very short time until a new company will be heard from. There are one or two propositions now in the air, but they need not be taken seriously. The old concern has the means to smother them all right when the encroachment on territorial rights and profits becomes threatening. For the benefit, however, of long-suffering consumers of the sickly apology for illuminating gas that they can bank on relief from a quarter backed with money sufficient to give this city gas works on a scale of magnitude competent to furnish both quality and quantity, which will be required for the rapidly developing necessities of this growing community. So far nothing has been made public regarding a retrenchment in the old company's affairs in the way of cutting down the salaries of the inside office people. Possibly the new material introduced in the Board at the last election will be heard from in time, especially as the position likely to be taken by Mr. Miller on this subject was very clearly delivered before he joined the Board.

The Comstock Market, while quiet, is not a tempting proposition for the short element, which religiously keeps its distance. The outlook in the North-end mines has had wonderful staying powers, the bullion yield of Ophir from the ore discovery made recently showing clearly that no one can tell from day to day what is in store for shareholders in one of these mines which has proved the wonder of the world.

The financial situation here is dull, notwithstanding the quantity of money held by the banks, and the abundant opportunities which could be made here for a profitable investment. Business with the brokers dealing in industrial securities is unusually light even for this season of the year.

OBITUARY.

Judge Charles N. Fox died at his home in Oakland on Monday. Judge Fox practiced law in San Francisco for more than twenty-five years, and during most of this time acted as general attorney for the Spring Valley Water Company. He was made the successor of Jackson Temple on the Supreme Bench by appointment from Governor Waterman. He was a prominent Odd Fellow, and was President of the Board of Education of Oakland. Death came to him through a stroke of paralysis.

Alfred Rix has gone to his fathers, and with him goes one of the foremost figures in California's history. Rix was a stalwart, strong, uncompromising character, one of the builders and doers of things. On his Canadian birthright was grafted the sound common sense and ability of a Vermont education, and this was topped by the experiences of a life in the earlier and more stirring days of California. He was remarkable in every one of his undertakings, and in none more so than in the fight to safeguard the Nobel patents. Rix's genius in patent law protected the inventor of dynamite and eventually secured the millions for the great philanthropist.

The litigation over this patent occupied Judge Rix for years in the courts both of the United States and Europe. He was also general counsel for the Atlantic Dynamite and Giant Powder Company, as well as for many other corporations. His practical bent led him to interest himself in the problem of cable railways in San Francisco, and the solution of this question was worked out with his professional aid. Judge Rix was married twice, but survived his second wife, who was Miss Margaret Tuite, who died in 1894. He leaves four sons—Julian Rix, the mechanical engineer; William Rix, of the legal firm of Bishop, Wheeler & Hofer, and Alfred Shirley Rix of San Jose.

AN INJUDICIOUS MOVE.

In view of the fact that President Roosevelt is cracking the party whip over the Senate in order to secure the confirmation of the appointment of Crum as Collector of the Port of Charleston, South Carolina, it is in order to suggest that the Republican Campaign Committee appoint a censorship to vise the actions of the Executive. The News Letter suggests that Mr. Crum be sent as Collector to the Port of Boston or New York. At either of these places there would be no objection, and Mr. Crum would finally land where he is apparently wanted. Why force him on a community that has no use for him, and where, if he is finally confirmed, his life will be one continual misery. Mr. Roosevelt would find his appointee in his element among the poor white trash of the Hub. They would undoubtedly feast him and fete him, and one of the principal elements of opposition to Mr. Roosevelt in the Solid South would be removed. This is not a joke.

TOWN CRIER

The Methodists who have been holding a convention in this city are eager for the Christianization of Japan. It must be confessed that the nimble little yellow men appear to be holding their own pretty well, and that the image of Buddha seems to be quite an efficient substitute for the ikons which are blessed in such numbers and sent, like patent medicines, as a cure for all the ills from which the Russian generals appear to be suffering. As an addition to Japan's material strength the missionaries would not appear likely to be of great weight. As far as the moral side is concerned, the report of an American woman, a missionary in Siberia, should set the matter at rest. She says that the great obstacle to the Christianizing of the native Atricans lies in the low morals of the visiting Christians, and that the moral code of the natives is much stricter than that of the white men who visit them. The meddling missionary business does not lead to much else than the debauchery of the native population, and our worthy local Methodists could spend their spare funds much more effectively than in imposing on the Japanese a religion which they do not want.

"Sir Harry Westwood" Cooper, the notorious, expects shortly to regain his freedom, and has, by the way, perpetrated the greatest joke upon our San Francisco jail, a joke, moreover, which should make us an object of genial ridicule wherever men know how to laugh. Cooper has succeeded not only in being married in jail, without the consent of the authorities, but his wife is about to present him with that pledge of affection for which all good wives sigh, and of which all good husbands are so inspiringly proud. He is a shrewd man, this Cooper, and they say that the whole arrangement only cost Mrs. Cooper twenty dollars. That sum appropriately expended provided the happy couple with a nuptial chamber. She is an enterprising young woman, and Cooper's sixth wife. It is no small thing to match Henny the Eighth in the matter of wives, and to bluff the prison authorities out of a baby as well. When Cooper gets out, and he and his wife work together, some of us will have to be pretty wide awake.

I have called attention before to the case of Edward K. Clarke, who was drugged into a marriage with Rosalind A. Bower, known as the "Sweet-pea Girl." It is worth noting this remarkable fact, as showing the present condition of the San Francisco bar. Judge Seawell promptly annulled the marriage and Clarke's attorneys are now suing him for nearly two thousand dollars as a fee. The action of the attorneys who took up the woman's case has already been commented upon, and the same comment practically applies here. No one will be safe until we have a strong bar association and fixed fees for service. Unless something is done, every decent lawyer will have to carry the stigma that goes with the behavior of the hyenas of the profession.

It is not often that I feel moved by the spirit to praise the trial judiciary, but the action of Judge Cook in punishing the police who violate the injunction against interfering with the women at the so-called Nymphia, deserves every commendation. We are breeding a pretty crowd of hulking scoundrels in the force, and it is well that the Judges are beginning to recognize it. A fine of fifty dollars deducted from their pay, as the Judge threatens, should help to improve their manners. Their morals are, unfortunately, past praying for.

What a palpitating spirit is this Alfred J. Waterhouse. No sooner has he revisited our shores than his emotional nature shocks our nerves by its crude spasms and, enthusiastic sentiment oozes out of him like fat from a roasting goose. In a recent outburst he refers to Markham's "Man With the Hoe" as a tremendous presentation of truth, whereas it has been shown over and over again to be nothing but a tremendous example of the effect of clever versifying. It is poetry, if you like, but to claim it as truth is mad folly, that only a benighted Hoosier poet could be guilty of it. The verses which the rustic bard gives us as a sample of the music of the spheres breathed through his pipe, are as musical as the whining of a love-lorn heifer. To rank Joaquin Miller with Virgil and Dante, and then to throw hints upon his sanity—he declares that he is "unmaddened by the madding crowd"—should tickle up the Bard of the Sierras, and if he has not lost his old spirit should lead to the effective kicking of the offending versifier.

It is unfortunate that we have not yet succeeded in handling a function effectively. The launching of the California gave every opportunity for a good display. The weather was good, the crowd numerous, everything was propitious for a fine show, and some real enthusiasm. Instead we had a dingy affair that was simply flat. The Governor, with his potbellied staff—it is strange that the Governor's staff should always be too rotund for uniforms—and the entire absence of military discipline or a well-ordered programme, made a dreary farce of what should have been a stimulating spectacle. A French town of half our size would have had more fun out of opening a new pickle factory.

It is pleasant to know that the disputes in the San Francisco Gas and Electric Company are ended; that the President's salary has been reduced, and that harmony prevails. It would be still more satisfactory, however, to know that prices were to be reduced. It is said that the directors at the meeting sang a song, of which the chorus is as follows:

The San Franciscan owns the world
When he goes out o' nights;
But he is only half a man
Because we own his lights.

One of the papers says that the Misses Boxall are psychological studies. That is a mild way of saying that they are the most pathetic figures in recent California history, and he would be a poor sort of a man that did not have the greatest sympathy and the most chivalrous feeling for them. As for their uncle, the man Lloyd, it is one of the most remarkable and at the same time one of the most discreditable facts in the history of the State that he should not have been lynched. The worst of the lynching business is that the wrong man seems always, or nearly always, to be caught.

One of our prominent local orators speaking at the banquet of the Monticello Club is reported to have said: "All wealth springs from the womb of earth, as it is wooed by labor." Labor as a lover is a new and interesting view of the whole industrial question. The boycott thereupon becomes an example of passive wooing; the genial cry of "unfair house" is a lover's ditty, and the failure of a boycott love's labor lost. It is beautiful.

A NEW PASSENGER, FREIGHT AND PARCELS SERVICE.

In automobile circles there is a great surprise impending. The California Auto Express Company is going to spring it. This company has been organized to do a general automobile business and incidentally will introduce the great freight machine, the Fischer System. The vehicles of the Fischer System are operated under the agency of hydro-carbon and electricity. Each truck or delivery wagon is a "moving power house," generating its own means of propulsion, and the Fischer has proven a great success in many of the large Eastern cities. A general freight service will be placed in commission, and a great saving in time and expense effected for the large shippers of the city. In connection will be operated a passenger service from the Ferry Building to several points on Market and other streets, on a regular schedule. The cars of this service will be the style of the "London General Omnibus Company, and are roomy and pleasant to ride in and have the added convenience of dropping passengers at the curb.

The California Auto Express Company will operate a stable system, not a garage, and there are to be innovations here, also. The company will have the agency for four high-class machines, and they propose to protect their clientage to the farthest extent. Machines bought from them will be under a year's guarantee and stabled at a cost of $25 a month. A first-class repair shop will be in operation, and the charge in this department will be reasonable.

The manager of the company has made trips to the East for the purpose of studying existing conditions in the great mercantile centers, and from these trips and with the added experience of the best of the Eastern managers, of similar corporations, a comprehensive system has been evolved. Everything that has been tried and found wanting has been eliminated, and every good feature has been retained. Ideas that have never been tried in other places, but which are applicable to San Francisco, have been incorporated in the general plan. The features that will make the company a great success are the operation of a passenger service; secondly, the freight and parcels delivery service (which has been a long-felt want) and the selling of only first-class high-power machines. The company will only handle time-tested and quality-proven automobiles.

A new building is to be erected for the use of the California Auto Express Company, as the present temporary quarters at 20 Golden Gate avenue are too small.

The News Letter wishes the new venture its inevitable success.

GET RID OF THE PARASITES.

The smoke has cleared away, and now we are telling one another how it happened. But the disturbing element in the Car Men's Union has not been removed. The ambitious man who essayed through the tears of women and the privations of men, the financial loss of capitalists, and through general disturbance, to help his own political advancement, is still at the helm in street car union matters. The car employes should take a microscope and carefully examine all the actions in the past, present and future of this parasite—Cornelius. It may mean greater prosperity and happier times for the union to perform a capital operation and cut off its own head.

SOCIETY

Dear Bessie: Cards are still the chief dissipation this week. There have also been some luncheons, the largest of which was given by Mrs. George Boardman, a style of entertainment to which she is very partial; and there has been something doing in clubland this week. The Sorosis had its annual breakfast at the St. Francis on Monday; the California held its annual election on Tuesday, and Mrs. W. P. Buckingham read "A Winter's Tale" for the Channing Auxiliary that afternoon; the Forum Club listened to a "talk" from Miss Agnes Murphy on Wednesday, and on Thursday the Irving Club had its annual reception at Elks' Hall, when Doctor Stewart delivered a lecture on modern songs. Then besides all this, a new club—the Sequoia—due to the efforts of Miss Edna Robinson, was inaugurated on Wednesday night; and at the Bohemian Club on Monday night Jim Phelan gave a large dinner in the Red Room for the Willie Vanderbilts. Apropos of Mr. Phelan, I wonder if autos are as numerous where you are as they are becoming in San Francisco? In fact, they are no longer objects of curiosity, but are regarded as quite the correct thing, and not to own one is to acknowledge that one is away in the rear. I saw Jim Phelan in one yesterday, and hear he is almost as wrought up about them as was Willie Vanderbilt, and can language further go? He and the Rudolph Spreckels leave for a trip to Europe next week, and it is understood that when he returns he will be the owner of the latest and handsomest thing out in the automobile line.

Lulla Wenzelburger's tea last Saturday was for Eleanor Eckart Hume, Eleanor Warner and Mabel Donaldson—one bride and two fiancées—and was a large affair; pretty flowers and lovely spring costumes in evidence and a pleasant time generally. On Wednesday, I went over to Oakland to Mary Barker's reception, which she gave for May Burdge Miller, and met all Oakland society. To-night there are to be two dances—the one at Century Hall will be a bachelor affair. The other is to be given by Mrs. Campbell and Francis Reid at their home in Sausalito; you have no idea how that place is growing, so many have gone over there to live, and others have their summer cottage in that hilly locale. Let me see who all have had card parties. The largest was given by Mrs. Somers last week at the Sorosis club house, and Kate Dillon had a bridge party the same day; she is becoming quite an expert at the game. The Moultons, Mrs. Irving and Hallie gave card parties on Tuesday and Wednesday, and the clubs which have been in force all winter are now holding their last meetings for the season.

Birthday celebrations among our pioneers have been quite a fad of late. Dear old John Perry held his in the form of a reception to commemorate his 89th natal day—is he not a wonderful old man?—and looked as bright and spry as though he were fully a couple of decades younger. Then followed the supper party given by Burke Holladay to his pater, Sam, he of the flowing locks, on attaining his 81st year. Aunt Susie was telling me the other day of his wedding to Kate Ord, sister of General Ord, away back in the fifties. And next in order, John H. Jewett, a patriarch of 80, celebrated his birthday this week at his Cloverdale ranch. Truly is there something in the air of California to keep men young, for look at the dean of them all, George Bromley, who had his goth birthday breakfast at the Bohemian Club the other day.

I have been hearing a good deal lately of the delights of a visit at Mare Island from a lot of girls who have been there during the past month or two, and Edith, who came back from there the other day, declares she had the time of her life during her visit. The dwellers at the Yard are a hospitable lot, card parties, dinners and luncheons being exchanged among them nearly every day, and the dances, sometimes got up on the spur of the moment, are always delightful. One of the most charming affairs given there in a good while was the dancing reception on board the transport Solacé last week by Commander and Mrs. Bull, who had as their guests of honor their son, Lieutenant Bull of the army, and his bride, who were married the other day in Washington City, and who sailed last Saturday for the Philippines. Apropos of brides, let me tell you of the wedding of Edna Barry and Philip Clay at St. John's Church in Oakland last Saturday afternoon, the Rev. E. F. Gee officiating. Pink and white was the color scheme both in decorations and costumes; Edna wore white satin trimmed with duchesse lace; Jane Barry, her maid of honor, was in white lace over chiffon, and the bridesmaids wore pale pink gowns, big white hats, and carried white flowers. Robert Bein was best man, and acquitted himself, I hear, to the admiration of all beholders.

Where people are going and when, appears to be the chief topic of talk, and nearly every one has perfected their plans for the next few months. Mrs. Martin and Grace, and the Gaston Ashes returned to their Sausalito homes the early part of the week; the Frank Sullivans and their daughters have gone to Santa Cruz, where they usually spend the summer at their handsome home by the sea. San Rafael promises to be in high favor this summer, and every day nearly one hears of some fresh recruit. Mrs. Fred Tallant had not quite decided when I saw her the other day, but I am pretty sure it will be her choice. There will be so many at Sausalito this summer that 'tis said more interest will be taken in yachting and things nautical than for some time past. The Corinthian Club had its opening afternoon dance and evening jinks at the pretty Tiburon club house last Saturday; the San Francisco Club had its jollification at Sausalito the Saturday before. Among others, the Jack Merrills will be there, having taken a house for the season. Jane Willshire has gone East on a visit, and will be away most of the summer.

Mrs. Rogers and Millie have also bid us adieu, and they are well on their way to Europe by this time; Hazel, who has been East, or rather South, in Tennessee, for some time, will join them in New York and go abroad with her mother and sister for what promises to be an extended absence. I have heard three years spoken of as the probable time. Mr. and Mrs. John Landers are also gone from our gaze, but have left Pearl behind them, she remaining with her sister, Mrs. Fred Tallant, during their absence. Rumors get started in the most wonderful way of what people intend to do; one is that the Buckley girls are going abroad after their visit to the St. Louis exposition; and another I told you of last week that Kate Voorhies Henry was on the eve of departure for Europe; but she is not going abroad after all, but will spend the summer here and go East with her mother in the autumn. Mrs. McCalla and Stella went East last week, but will be back again early in June.

Jennie Blair is credited with turning her thoughts towards Clear Lake during the early part of the season, taking in St. Louis later; Nanny Rogers has been over in Ross Valley staying with her brother Henry and his wife, who have taken up their abode under the shadow of Mount Tamalpais; Mrs. Rogers is in seclusion, owing to the death of her step-mother, Mrs. de Santa Marina. We shall soon have an opportunity of judging of the Harney girls, over whom their grandmother, Mrs. Cutter, has been raving, as they sailed for home last Wednesday, and are to be here before the end of the month. They will form part of the Martin colony at San Mateo this summer, where Downey has taken a house, and the eldest girl—Anita—is to be one of next winter's buds. I hear Mrs. Irwin and Helen will spend the latter part of the summer in Honolulu; they did not go last year, and will sail directly they return from their trip East. The Stents have been heard from at Coronado on their leisurely way East, seeing everything in the rosiest hue—at least Frances is. Mrs. Davenport and Eleanor hope to be in their new home on Pacific avenue in a couple of months, and then we shall see all the pretty things they brought home from their recent travels.

Daisy Whitney and Parker have been down again this week from Rocklin to take in the sights of the city—dry goods and otherwise; and in a couple of weeks or so, Mrs. Martin Crimmins will put in an appearance from the North on a visit to Mrs. Cole, and will, I believe, remain in San Francisco the greater part of the summer.

The Ladies' Stringed Orchestra, Miss Rose Brandon, director, rendered some beautiful Italian melodies and Italian selections at the Century Club rooms on Saturday last, and later in the day delighted the participants at the Grunsky tea.

The programme of Dr. H. J. Stewart's concert, which takes place at Steinway Hall on Thursday evening, May 12th, contains many attractive novelties. Several of Dr. Stewart's recently published songs will be heard for the first time in public, and amongst these may be mentioned "Contrasts" and "A Boat Song" (Miss Carrie B. Dexter); "A Winter Love Song" (Mrs. L. Snider-Johnson); "A Little Way" (Miss Ella V. McCloskev); "For Love of Thee" (Miss Camille Frank); "A California Night Song," with cello obligato (Mrs. Wallace Wheaton Briggs); "The Lords of Song" and "The Angelus" (Mr. S. Homer Henley). Mrs. Blanche King Arnold will sing Beethoven's "Adelieda" and "In questa tomba," and Mr. Paul Freidhofer will contribute some violoncello solos. The concerted music includes the celebrated trio of the Rhine-Maidens, from Wagner's "Gotterdammerung."

PURE FOOD AND THE ENTRANCE FEE.

The Food Exhibition at the Mechanics' Pavilion has been a farce and a failure as far as the attendance, and the consequent benefit to the exhibitors, is concerned. A charge of twenty-five cents was made for a show that any one may see at any well regulated grocery store free. A visit to any one of the large general stores of the city would be more profitable. The News Letter has already shown that the exhibit was not in any way a "pure food exhibit," and this element of interest being removed, the interest in the exhibit waned. There is no doubt that some of the exhibits were pure food exhibits, but the main portion of the preserves, catsups, spices and the drugs and liquors, the baking powders and the sweet oil, were, as they are in nearly all our stores, the vilest adulterations. The present city administration claims to have the welfare of the "common people" at heart, and yet, as far as we know, the efforts of the News Letter have not found an emulator on the Board of Health. We have cried aloud against the imposition of adulterated foods, and it has been as a voice in the wilderness. The daily newspapers have had a chance to do something practical; nay, the chance still exists, and yet we have not heard the slightest whisper of condemnation. We have stood alone and told the truth about the falsified preserves, the salicylic acid catsup, and the nut-husk spices, etc., etc. It is possible that the Board of Health has no knowledge of the facts. If the Board does not care to incur the expense of analysis, or if, through laziness, the individual members have no desire to act, the News Letter will furnish the samples and the analyses.

It's up to you, gentlemen of the Board of Health!

The promoter of the enterprise should be made to return the individual grocers the money expended on preparation of booths and for the rental of stalls. In some instances this has amounted to a great deal, and as the crowds did not come and the benefit did not accrue, these exhibitors have a right in equity to demand their money back. It is only simple justice. The exhibitor carried out his part of the contract to the letter, while the other party to it did not. It is doubtful if the promoter of the scheme ever believed in the ultimate benefit to those exhibiting. It has been an expensive lesson, and no one has benefited, while the city authorities have probably lost a splendid opportunity to pounce on the adulterators of food while they were in a convenient bunch for prosecution.

THE LOOKER-ON

May is the month which poets sing
And vaunt and praise, like anything;
When roses bloom, and lambkins skip,
When picknickers on Sunday trip,
Strew dirty paper o'er the land,
And come back, bearing in their hand,
The flowers suburbanites have grown
And hoped in vain to call their own.

Since the Native Sons returned from their convention at Vallejo, tales have been whispered about some things that happened there—and why. The friends of Louis Mooser, sometime treasurer of the Democratic State Central Committee, an adherent of McNab, and until very recently a political opponent of Hearst, are busy explaining how Mooser was defeated for the office of Grand Trustee. Various reasons are given, but behind all of them appears one painful fact which, it is admitted, did more to defeat Mooser than anything else. That is his presence on the political war path aiding the Hearst boom. Mooser did not attend the Grand Parlor, for he was somewhere up in Oregon or Washington assisting Mike Tarpey in capturing stray delegates from the cow counties. Now, though many of the Native Sons at Vallejo are prominent in politics, it is worthy of remark that most of them seemed to consider Mooser's activity in the Hearst campaign as something reprehensible, and unworthy of a man who aspired to be a Grand Officer of the organization. One main object of the Native Sons is to elevate the moral tone of the community. Whether or not Mooser's attitude as a Hearst boomer was considered antagonistic to the principles of the order, only those who defeated the young man at Vallejo can tell. For Mooser was defeated badly; he received only sixty odd votes out of a total of over 300. A remarkable sequel was that in publishing the account of the election of the Grand Trustees, the Examiner omitted all mention of Mooser's name. The names of all the other candidates and their votes were published, but not even a reference was made to the man who doubtlessly owes his defeat directly to his activity in Washington and Oregon in behalf of his unappreciative master. Now that Mooser has assisted in turning Washington and Oregon away from Hearst, and has shown his own weakness in the Native Sons, Hearst will probably have no more use for him.

The Natives are also whispering about the encounter between the fearless Billy Gett and the Admiral at the latter's board, on the occasion of the hospitalities extended the Sons at Mare Island. The conversation was general, and many topics were discussed. It was not until the subject of "expansion" was tossed about that Billy Gett broke loose. He told the Admiral just what he thought about expansion and about the position of the Government on that question, and about other things. The Admiral was at something of a disadvantage, considering the occasion, and the Honorable William easily carried off the honors of the day. "That Billy Gett is a corker," the Natives say.

In defending a mediumistic client, who had separated a farmer from $500, in exchange for stock in an oil well, which exists in spirit land, Colonel Kowalsky told a story of being chased by a bull over in Marin County. Being more agile than his companion, he outfooted the bull and vaulted the fence like a bird. His companion was gored and died from his wounds. Twenty years later, said Kowalsky, he met on an ocean steamer a medium whom he had never seen before. This medium went into a trance as soon as he saw the Colonel. There was nothing else to do. Then he called up Kowalsky's bull-ridden friend from spirit-land, and recounted the adventure in Marin County. The Colonel told the tale to prove the efficacy of spirits. Judge Hunt listened to the story, and promptly decided that Kowalsky's mediumistic friend had buncoed the farmer out of $500, which was an eminently just decision. Now when Kowalsky tells that bull story again he will please let us know what kind of bulls romped in Marin County twenty years ago that one could not catch him in a foot-race. Was that bull of the famous "bull con." breed? The Colonel should also inform a waiting public to what kind of a bird he referred when he said he went over the barbed wire fence "like a bird." Just close your eyes for a minute and imagine you see the Kowalsky vaulting a barbed wire fence "like a bird."

Miss Emma S. Richards, formerly of Los Angeles, who conducted her own breach of promise suit against J. J. Willingham in Judge Graham's court, has raised a new question in legal technicalities. Being asked whether she had any objections to the jury, Miss Richards beamed upon the jurors, and coyly said: "They certainly look good to me." Thereupon the defendant's attorney roared dozens of objections, but the jurors chuckled and blushed. Now, the question is, if the jurors certainly looked good to the fair deceived woman who had builded all her hopes of happiness upon one man, why couldn't she say so? The jurors did not object.

for every day in the month. No one wants to say that this is only another case of petty graft in the Board of Health, but the allowance does seem somewhat excessive. The United Railroads give trip tickets to other departments at the City Hall, for which no charge is made. Doubtless the Board of Health could get such tickets upon application, but then, the two physicians would not get the allowance.

The wardens of the State prisons are on the right track. At Folsom, the order has gone forth that all convicts must be kept clean-shaven and close-cropped. Their privileges have been curtailed in other respects, and the inmates are commencing to realize that they are under imprisonment, and not at a summer resort. At San Quentin the guards have been sent to the rifle ranges, and the men who cannot hit the bull's-eye have been notified that unless they can do so in a month, their services will be no longer required. Stricter regulations have been needed at the penitentiaries for a long time. Convicts are sent to San Quentin and Folsom for punishment, and not to grow fat and saucy.

Coxey, who led the famous Coxey's army to the White House, is now a capitalist. Labor agitation seems to be a good thing for some labor agitators.

The University Club is in its usual dilemma. Some of its members want to branch out on a high financial scale and place the club on a better footing; others, who may be quite as willing to enjoy the benefits of the suggested improvements, look with fear and trembling at the schedule of costs. The discussion has been prolonged and fierce, and the end is not yet. Whatever the outcome of the building project may be, it is apparent that if the club would continue its existence, it must acquire new vitality. Its field is limited, many of its members belong to other organizations, and it cannot expect to retain its hold upon them unless it "gets a move on." No club ever lived on reminiscences and academic discussions alone.

It seems to be the unanimous opinion of our business and social leaders that The Red Lion, recently opened in the S. F. Stock Exchange Building on Pine street, equals, if it does not surpass, the most exclusive of the New York grills. It cannot be denied that the cuisine and service are unexcelled. The spacious dining-room is luxuriously and tastefully fitted up, and Red Lion banquets, dinners and lunches seem to be the sensation of the hour. The manner in which this company has combined luxurious service and the choicest viands with popular prices is a revelation to our bankers, brokers, lawyers and merchants. Both ladies and gentlemen are delighted with the enterprise.

ORPHEUM—A splendid vaudeville entertainment
COLUMBIA—Rogers Brothers "In London"—Extravagantly mounted and delightful extravaganza.
CENTRAL—Herschell Mayall—"Dr Jekyll and Mr. Hyde"—Very good.
TIVOLI—When Johnny Comes Marching Home—Spectacular Military Opera
CALIFORNIA—"Tom's Wedding Gift"—Better if the play had not been written GRAND—Melbourne MacDowell—"La Tosca"—A clever conception of the author's lines.
ALCAZAR—"The Profligate"—An artistic, enjoyable, and finished performance
CHUTES—High class specialties—New attractions in Zoo

"The Land of the Heart's Desire" is a good title to conjure with, and the play was as good as the title. There is a subtle mysticism running through the whole plot, which is a very simple one, and the witchery was catching. The audience drank it in and wanted more.

Miss Wycherly is a fine actress and her powers in pantomime and facial expression are great. "The Land of the Heart's Desire" was followed by "The Hour Glass," and this playlet served to show the great ability of Mr. Charles Lamb, of Isabel Irving's Company, and that of the rest of the actor folk who so splendidly helped entertain the public at the matinee at the "Alcazar," on Friday afternoon. The plot of "The Hour Glass" is a strange one, and possesses much of the weirdness that William Butler Yeats has incorporated in "The Land of the Heart's Desire."

A Wise Man has convinced all the world, but a Fool, that there is no Heaven, nor Purgatory, nor Hell. There is the Fool, but he hardly seems worth the Wise Man's sophistries. Then God's angel comes to the Wise Man and tells him that he must die because no longer do souls from his country pass the threshold of Heaven. He has but the time of the running of the sands once through the glass to live, and then he is damned. He begs for mercy, and the angel finally gives him one chance. If within the hour of the running of the sands he can find one who believes, he will eventually go to Heaven. But the Wise Man can find none; he has convinced all that there is no future, no Heaven, no Hell. He calls his pupils to him, but they think he merely wants to argue and laugh at him; so does his wife. As he dies, the Fool tells him that he knows there are angels, because he has seen them. Then the angel comes once more and carries away the Wise Man's soul.

Melbourne McDowell gives us a fine interpretation of Sardou's "La Tosca" at the Grand this week. His conception of the character of Scarpia is a splendid one, and Miss Ethel Fuller should come in for a great deal of praise for the artistic way in which she renders the characterization of Floria Tosca. She easily conquers a lack of beauty and the limitations of a rough voice. While it is in order to mention that the entire company does its work well, I cannot refrain from saying that "La Tosca" strikes me to-day in the same way in which it struck me some fifteen years ago.

I can praise the playwright for his artistic grouping of characters, his finished study of history, his knowledge of human nature and its passions, but I cannot say that the play is conducive to anything but unrest and disgust. Scarpia is a finished scoundrel and a cruel libertine. The relations between Mario and Tosca are vile, and while she seems glorified by her great love for the artist, she is easily suspected of a very shady past. The play leaves an extraordinarily bad taste in the mouth, but it thrills and to the bottom. It is the equivalent of a horrid nightmare, that it is so attractive that it is willingly and horribly dreamed again.

"Rogers Brothers in London" at the Columbia is one blaze of color, and the principals are clever. Max Rogers as "August Furst" is very funny, and the "Ferdinand Falls" of Gus Rogers is a good second. The deck scene on the "Kronprinz Wilhelm" is a very fine piece of stage setting, and it easily lends itself to elaborate effects. There is practically no plot to the play; it is a hodge-podge of very amusing nonsense and clever dancing. The light effects are good, but not so well managed as was the masterly handling in "Mam'selle Napoleon." Indeed, from a spectacular standpoint, the whole show falls behind the Anna Held aggregation. There are too many girls with large noses in the chorus. The majority of "beaks" is suggestive of the fact that there has been a successful invasion of the stage by the Semitics, and that the Hebrews have captured the Syndicate. There are many very pretty girls in the chorus, though, notwithstanding their noses.

The Lord Harry Hartford of Mr. M. Melville Ellis is easily the best piece of characterization in this show. He is simply inimitable. There are some songs that will be remembered, and are sure to become popular. These are "Queen of the Bungalow," "The American Beauty," and "By the Sycamore Tree."

Klaw & Erlanger may always be depended upon as trying to furnish the public the best the market affords, but when they secured William J. Cale as an Irish comedian they got a badly damaged job-lot. There are hundreds of better "Irishmen" turned out of the various "schools of acting" all over the country weekly. They generally make their debut, and then go back to the ribbon counter or the old farm.

Pinero's "Profligate" gave a splendid opportunity to the Alcazar Company again to please very large houses this week. This theatre is constantly growing in popularity and it is entirely due to the liberality of the management with press and public. There is no department for the making of enemies connected with the Alcazar.

Mr. Durkin was on hand again after a week's rest, and his acting was, as usual, letter-perfect. He took the part of Dunstan Renshaw, the husband, and appeared to great advantage in the third act, where there is a very strong scene. Miss Starr did the best work she has given us since coming to the Alcazar, and Miss Block easily divided the honors with her. Conness was good. Hilliard and Maher are cast in congenial roles, and the performance on the whole is a highly enjoyable one. It is a play that, in the hands of the capable Alcazar stock, calls for vociferous and enthusiastic applause.

Herschell Mayall is giving us some real acting in the dual characterization of "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" at the Central. He has been applauded to the echo every night of the week, and if the enthusiasm of previous audiences is a gauge of success, he will be greeted to-night and Sunday with a crowded house. There are some new faces in the company, James A. Montgomery, as a comedian, and Miss Olive Skinner as soubrette.

* * *

There has been a change in "When Johnnie Comes Marching home," and Arthur Cunningham is taking the part of "Johnnie."

* * *

"Pals," at the Orpheum is a playlet, said to have originally been cast for Corbett. I am told that, in the scrap that takes place between the husband and the villain, some hundred and twenty-four dollars' worth of "props" are carefully broken to bits nightly.

* * *

Dr. Callahan's play at the California is entitled "Tom's Wedding Gift," and it is the most extraordinary example I have ever seen of a miserable plot badly acted by a poor company. I condole with the author on the limitations of the plot, and with the actors I sympathize because of the play. What more can I say, unless it is that the house may be the cause of the hoodoo on author, drama and player-folk. Better combinations have suffered severely by the same token.

* * *

An old associate of Charley Reed and Billy Emerson, who used to raise storms of laughter in the old Standard Theatre, George H. Wood, the "somewhat different" comedian, will appear at the Orpheum next week.

* * *

Three hundred nights is the record of "A Runaway Girl" at Daly's in New York. It has a run of six hundred nights at the London Gaiety. Such a record should fill the Tivoli for many a day. The girl in the play is a ward of Lord Coodle, and she is known as Winifred Grey. She escapes from a convent in Corsica and joins a band of wandering minstrels. There is a love story, a bunch of Italian Brigands, and all the other necessities that go to make a lyrical comedy a scenic and musical success. The Tivoli management will put on a largely augmented chorus for "A Runaway Girl."

* * *

There is to be a prima donna of great repute at the Orpheum the coming week. Her name suggests the crossing of the Yalu by the Japs. Mme. Slapoffski is heralded by the press agent as a wonder. Her home, when she is at home, is in England. This leads us to hope she is a Pole. She is said to be thoroughly at home in sixteen oratorios, a repertoire of forty-two operas, and a voice that is rich in fioritura and the ornaments of vocalization. The selections will be popular and classic, and there will be no room for complaint. The rest of the bill is fine.

* * *

Maude Adams is heading this way. She played an enormous engagement at St. Louis, the receipts running up to $18,000 in one week.

* * *

"When Johnnie Comes Marching Home" is a better card at the Tivoli than was any of the old operas put on lately. There is an improved attendance.

* * *

What the Tivoli needs is a censor that will pick out women with faces as well as voices. I do believe that it is possible to find good looks, a voice and a capacity for acting combined in one or more women. I believe that it would be possible to secure as many as four or five women who would combine these qualities. "I may be wrong, I may be wrong."

Japanese Land Victory.

It took four days of hard fighting, though at long-distance mostly for the Japanese to secure a passage of the Yalu River and establish the advance of their army on the west bank. On the next day (Sunday last) General Kuroki ordered a general attack on the first line of the Russians' entrenched position on the hills beyond. The advance of the Japanese army is supposed to have been about 15,000 of all arms with an unusual allotment of heavy artillery. The Russian force is placed at 30,000 men of all arms, with a large allotment of cavalry. The actual firing line was about four miles long and behind earthworks as to the Slav forces. The odds, therefore, in numbers and position were decidedly against the Japanese, but no doubt a line of reinforcements kept crossing the river and moving to the front after a passage was secured. But whether so or not, the Russians were driven from both of their positions and sent in confusion across the plateau to the mountains miles to the west, but in the direction of their general base. The charge of the Japanese is said to have been with recklessness, and yet with the precision of cogs and fellows in a great wheel. This is the first opportunity that has been given to judge somewhat of applied field tactics and generalship, as well as the marksmanship of the combatants.

Result of First Battle.

The result shows that the Japanese are masters of their profession, and that the Russians are either ignorant of the science of war or are easily "rattled." Certain it is that the Russian loss was greater than the Japanese, notwithstanding the latter had to charge through the open against two to one, and who were protected by strong entrenchments upon which were mounted forty rapid-fire and eight machine guns, together with the number of field pieces that are usually assigned to an army of 30,000. The fact is, the Russians were out-generated in preparation for the combat, and hoodwinked in field tactics.

Russia continues to operate its war lie factory at night and day; besides, the factory report of the Yalu affair is a sample of its products. It denies that there was anything more serious than heavy skirmishing. It says that Russia had only about 5,000 men there, and that they were on the Yalu merely to harass and annoy the Japanese advance. But the factory fails to explain why only 5,000 men should have forty rapid-fire and eight machine guns, together with heavy and light artillery enough to equip an army of 30,000, to say nothing of two lines of fortifications several miles long, with trenches between and redoubts on the flanks, and the whole business under the personal command of not less than four distinguished generals; then, again, the lie exposes its skeleton when it tries to make the world believe that it took 15,000 Japanese five days to cross the Yalu River and defeat 5,000 Russians, at a total loss on both sides of about 1,500 men. Evidently the Russian war office is being grossly deceived by its generals at the front, or is itself a willing tool of the jingo party; but anyway, constantly promulgating stories that all the world knows are base fabrications, is doing Russia great harm in the moral world, and making friends for Japan in all countries. The News Letter's measure of General Kuropatkin, taken when he took his spectacular departure for the Far East, is now verified by the gentleman himself. The Japanese are winning the victories and Kuropatkin is claiming them for his own, and all the world knows it. Kuropatkin is Russia's Falstaff, barring avoirdupois greatness. At least he says the Yalu River affair is exactly what his mysterious and intricate strategy provided for.

The Dowager Empress Takes a Hand.

The Russian ambassador at Peking, abetted by all the generals and admirals in the Far East, is pressing the Czar harder than ever to make haste and declare war against China, and to show her appreciation of his efforts in that direction, the Dowager Empress has ordered that the money intended to be squandered in celebrating the anniversary of her advent into this world be used to equip 70,000 soldiers, and the celebration be omitted. But the Russian ambassador is justified in his effort to secure a declaration of war, for the several little armies the Dowager has near the Manchurian border are a sharp thorn in the side of the viceroy and the generals. They do not know what moment the Chinese will open fire, but they do know that they are enemies of Russia, and they prefer actual hostilities to treachery clothed in the smiles of friendship; besides, public sentiment all over China, especially in the provinces bordering on Manchuria, is becoming more hostile every day to Russia, and the ambassador realizes that delay in declaring war only serves to aid China in preparing for the inevitable. But the Czar is stubborn. In fact, personally he would be willing to withdraw altogether from Manchuria to stop the war, but the jingo party will not let him. Such a move would probably cost him his life, and he knows it.

The Thibetans Want War.

The Thibetan Government has concluded that the British column of observation must leave the country forthwith, and the viceroy of British India, in whose hands the "Thibetan question" has been placed, gives answer by preparations to reinforce the column already there. Thibet has a population of only some 7,000,000, and the Government has the insane notion that 3,000 of its male religious fanatics will be quite sufficient to make Great Britain countermarch out of the country. Strangely enough, the women-folk of Thibet are the influence that is enraging the people over the British occupancy of the land. A large percentage of the women are ultra religionists, living in monasteries and practicing celibacy, consequently polyandry is permitted by the State to those not living monastic lives, and there is great fear that the system of plurality of husbands will be abolished if the British get a foothold. In that event the men of Thibet themselves would demand the abolition of the monastic system for women, and thus two well-defined and religiously-adhered-to forms of social life would be uprooted. Polygamy, too, is permitted, but the scarcity of marriageable women, or, rather, women who refuse to marry for their religion's sake, makes the practice of plurality of wives not at all general. It is these two questions of domestic economy that is at the bottom of the opposition to British influence dominating in the political and social concerns of the empire, but the moral sense of Christian countries, certainly, will agree that to remedy these evils is reason sufficient to give Great Britain a free hand in Thibet, to say nothing of the 800,000 square miles of good grain, grazing and mineral land that would give civilized people good homes.

Pleasure's Wand.

The Central, after scoring a great hit with "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," will put on "The Three Musketeers." Herschell Mayall will essay the star part of D'Artagnan, the brave and reckless "sabreur" who carves his way to fame and fortune. There is scope for splendid acting in this play, and I look to see Mr. Mayall do some very clever work. There is a great chance for scenic magnificence, and it is said the management has not neglected this important factor.

* * *

I wonder when we will see the last of the modern German comedian? What a relief it would be to see a real funny German, one of those flesh and blood creatures devoid of horseplay. Our actors are what we make them. They are simply a reflex of their audiences. They never inaugurate ideas. They simply follow the desires of the public. Any real innovation is dreaded on the stage. The average American audience is superficial and unthinking. Its thoughts touch the high places only. If a play is put on that demands heavy thinks on the part of the public the play is immediately dubbed a bore. By the same deduction it can easily be seen why yellow journalism has subsisted so long. It lives on the unthinking, the unwashed and uneducated.

* * *

The female acrobats at the Orpheum are a very attractive feature this week.

* * *

At the Majestic that splendid little woman, Isabel Irving, continues pleasing her audiences with her fine company of players and "The Crisis." The Majestic, as soon as it is completed, will be one of the most popular houses in the city, and everything an experienced manager can do to make the public enjoy a performance will be furnished. Just now audience and player-folk labor under a heavy handicap.

The first San Francisco production of the French comedy, "The Two Schools," will be made at the Alcazar Theatre next Monday evening. The play is in four acts, and is said to abound in sparkling dialogue and clever situations. The plot is a long series of complications due to the flirtations of a susceptible young husband; his almost equally impressionable father-in-law, and a young woman of the middle class. The situations in which the three are placed are often of a broadly farcical nature.

Barr and Evans, character comedy creators, will make their first appearance at the Chutes this coming week. They offer an original and amusing dialogue, some side-splitting parodies, and a lot of up-to-date eccentricities; they come highly praised by the Eastern press. The three Millards will also be new, presenting their musical comedy, "Willie Green's Visit." Bowers and Curtiss will continue their amusing farcette, "Where is John," and many other attractive features will complete a capital bill. The amateurs will appear on Thursday night as usual.

Richard Mansfield secured architectural drawings of the original rooms and palaces in which the events represented in "Ivan the Terrible" took place, and these were re-produced with fidelity in preparing the production which is to be seen at the Columbia on May 16th. There are five acts and eight scenes in "Ivan the Terrible."

Melbourne MacDowell will appear at the Grand Opera House Monday night and all next week as Marc Antony in Sardou's "Cleopatra." Mr. MacDowell's ability in this role is acknowledged all over the United States. Actors of eminence have played it in the Shakespearean and Sardou versions, and it will be interesting to make comparisons. He will be supported by Ethel Fuller as Cleopatra, and the standard she has set herself as La Tosca will naturally cause the public to expect much. "Cleopatra" will be succeeded by "Empress Theodora."

The Rogers Brothers tried their hand in journalism while they were in New York to play their recent engagement at the Knickerbocker Theatre. They were asked to conduct the funny supplement for one of the great Sunday papers, and they did it with the most conspicuous success. Their original jokes were considered as bright and funny as those which they are so fond of springing on the stage.

"But why," asked the discontented heir, "why are you sure that you can break the will?" "My dear sir," replied the lawyer, smiling patronizingly, "I drew it up."—Cincinnati Times-Star.

THIS WEEK'S CARTOON.

The subject of this week's cartoon is "The Fable of the Lion and the Ass's Skin." The artist has very deftly depicted a curious situation. It is probably new to the realm of politics outside of the monarchies of Europe to have a man pretend to the highest office in the gift of the people whose utterances are manufactured for him at so much a line. This is the age of utilitarianism, and if the Yellow Pest can buy the brains of a Brisbane, an Arthur McEwen or an Ambrose Bierce, bottle them up so effectually that he may use them "on tap," as it were, it is an innovation that may have beneficent results in politics. It is not with this we are concerned. We are concerned through our high regard for justice and the proprieties of the occasion. If it is Brisbane who is the man behind the Yellow Pest, to him belong the honors. We demand justice, simple justice, and an instructed delegation for Brisbane from Santa Cruz to St. Louis. If a man made a fine speech through a megaphone, one would not think of praising the trumpet, but the trumpeter. Brisbane is the logical candidate of the "Insane and Unsafe Democracy." It seems one branch of the party bears the badge of the "Sane and Conservative Democracy."

On May 1st the new schedule went into effect on the California Northwestern Railway, and the special rates for the summer season took effect. There are an increased number of trains and a special fast service to Willits and Ukiah. The extension to Sherwood has been completed, and trains are being regularly operated. At Summit the road reaches an elevation of 2395 feet, and in the Sherwood Valley extends for miles into redwood forests. Two trains daily will run from Willits to Sherwood, thus affording an excellent opportunity to all who wish to view what is said to be the grandest mountain scenery in California. On Sundays, last train leaves Glen Ellen at 6:15 p. m., arriving in San Francisco at 8.45 p. m. The last train from Guerneville branch leaves Camp Vacation at 5 p. m., and arrives in San Francisco at 8.45 p. m.

"Cool in the summer and warm in the winter, health preserving all the time," is the way it is expressed by a wearer of the Deimel Linen Mesh Underwear. Dr. Deimel made a great discovery, one that has preserved the health of hundreds and which is the most powerful agency for the prevention of disease known to modern times. It is a self-evident fact that the pores of the skin inhale and exhale much after the manner of pumps. The exhalations from the skin should have no chance to return to poison the blood. With the ordinary wool underwear the body is constantly re-absorbing these vapors, and apart from the fact that the linen material is a much cleaner and sanitary material to place next the skin than wool, there is the added claim that the mesh of the Deimel Underwear admits of a free and unobstructed circulation of air to and from the body. The various manufactures of the Deimel Company can be had at their new store, 111 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

BY THE AUTOCRANK

Local automobilists at the present time are like a lot of thoroughbreds at the tape waiting for the flag to get away. All the attention is centered in the big meet and show to be given at the end of the month on the Ingleside track. From the present indications, it is going to be the greatest event of its kind ever pulled off in California.

It will be interesting, inasmuch as the show feature may bring out some of the cars never seen on the Coast.

It is to be hoped that when the Race Committee of the Automobile Club of California makes out the programme for the race meet at the end of the month that it will include a run and a meeting for good roads.

Following are the records made by the Darracq cars in America:

Mr. Frank Pressey and party of friends made a trip to Vallejo one evening last week in a Winton touring car. The officers of the town of Vallejo were all taken for short rides, and claimed that automobiling was more fun than traveling in the finest Pullman. In fact, Pressey (who is a splendid chauffeur) was the hero of the town during the time of his stay there.

Mr. H. P. Teichner made a trip to San Jose and back last Sunday in his White touring car, starting out undaunted in the rain. The storm blew over, and he reports a very pleasant run back.

Mr. R. C. Kirkwood last week drove his new 1904 Winton touring car from San Jose to San Francisco, and reports the roads as being in very good condition—not much mud.

Miss Kate Dillon had her White touring car down at San Jose the closing days of last week, and she brought it back to San Francisco last Sunday afternoon.

Mr. S. C. Hammond is enjoying to the fullest extent the pleasures of riding in his 1904 Winton touring car. These moonlight nights here will see him traveling around with his four immense searchlights, turning the night into day before him.

Among sales made by the White Sewing Machine Company last week are cars to Major Russell of Los Angeles, H. D. Rucker, and O. M. Greenwald, both of San Francisco.

A clothing store hired six rigs one day this week from Mr. A. E. Brooke-Ridley. They were in constant use all day.

Mr. C. H. Wall, whose White touring car has not yet arrived from the East, borrowed one of the White Company's demonstration machines last Sunday, and after the rain cleared away made an extended trip through Alameda County, which he reports very enjoyable.

Mr. William Bogen has made several century runs during the past week in his 1904 Winton touring car.

Miss Mary Craig (of Mills College, Oakland, Cal.) has joined the ranks of chauffeuses, having just purchased a Stevens-Duryea automobile from the Pioneer Automobile Company. Her brother, Mr. J. S. Craig, of Woodland, Cal., purchased a Duryea early last season, and the machine gave him such good satisfaction that Miss Craig decided to purchase a car exactly like that of her brother. Mr. Craig last week purchased a 1904 Winton touring car from the Pioneer Automobile Company, and he is now the proud possessor of both a Winton and a Stevens-Duryea.

The girls of the Anna Held Company seem to be expressing a decided preference for White touring cars. While in San Francisco they were taken through the Park in a dozen of these handsome vehicles, and news comes from Los Angeles that they made an extended trip in White touring cars while at Los Angeles last Saturday. Mr. H. D. Ryus, manager of the White car at that point, arranged the party, and through the courtesy of White users there, was able to supply sufficient carriages to take the whole company out.

The Pioneer Automobile Company is in receipt of a letter from Mr. Charles B. Shanks, general sales manager of the Winton Motor Carriage Company,

On Wednesday of last week, Mr. John H. Spring ran his White touring car over into Contra Costa County, going by way of the San Ramon Valley, the road through which, by the way, makes a very delightful run. When Mr. Spring reached Mt. Diablo, its towering height tempted him to try the hill-climbing qualities of his machine. He inquired around, and found that there was a road up to the top of the mountain, and he pluckily tackled it. He progressed splendidly until he got half-way up, when he came to an immense boulder which had just fallen into the road and blocked its progress. Mr. Spring says that he had no doubt about the ability of his car to climb the boulder if it had not been for its spherical shape, which meant that one part of the boulder would strike the bottom of the car before the driving wheels would reach the boulder.

WOOD-SICK.

By Harriet Whitney Durr in Everybody's Magazine

I'm weary for the woods; I want to hear
The lusty rushing of the early spring,
Wind-winged, among the sycamores; the clear
Slow sound of reedy waters whispering.

I'm famishing for scents of forest birth—
Of reaching root and dawning mist of grass;
The smell of wet green lichen and of earth—
Of haw and willow-bud and sassafras.

I pine to see the dogwood's creamy barge,
Clear-cut, against the sunset's orange stain,
Or bent and shaken by a sudden charge
Of silver-pointed bayonets of rain.

My heart is wood-sick—thirsty for the things
That only one who loves the forest knows—
The gracious grandeur of the strong old kings,
The golden fires that cuckoo-buds disclose.

My day-dreams lead me in the dappled ways
Where sunlight spatters down in yellow spots,
And set me revelling in phantom sprays
Of hyacinths and blue forget-me-nots.

WAR.

By Florence Earle Coates in Lippincott's Magazine

In the beginning was I born,
With man from out the dust;
And presently, from Earth uptorn,
Came Cruelty and Lust.
Always, the vassals of my will,
They twain go with me still.

Where'er my flashing sword they see,
Where'er they scent my breath,
Quickly they follow after me,
Bringing despair and death;
Yet still the mighty wear, with pride,
My liveries, crimson-dyed.

Once long ago, in ages gone,
When man seemed as the brute,
I looked with dread to wisdom's dawn,
And virtue's ripening fruit:
Now sages wreathe my brow with bays,
And poets chant my praise.

Peace wore a royal diadem:
And once, in little Bethlehem—
Once only, not again—
But I could trust to men,
And crucified upon a tree,
Peace is a memory!

MY PURPOSE.

By Julia Ditto Young in Good Housekeeping

'Tis only, through life's little span,
To give and get what joy I can,
A simple faith retaining still
In love of God and man's good-will.

INSURANCE

The projected salt water auxiliary system for fire protection in this city has met with but little support from the managers of the companies.

The proposition is not by any means as modern as it appears.

* * *

The J. C. & C. B. of New York re-publishes the following account of a fire in that city, which was printed in a New York paper of November, 1750: Nov. 5. Number 407.

New York Gazette revived in the Weekly Post-Boy With the freshest advices foreign and domestic.

New York, Nov. 5, 1750.

"Last Tuesday Evening, being the Anniversary of his Majesty's Birthday; it is supposed from some Squibs thrown by the Boys. A House took Fire at the Corner of Pearl street near the White Hall Slip, and the Roof was in a light Blaze before it was observed; but by good Providence, it being very calm and nigh the River, it was prevented from spreading any farther, and extinguished with little more damage, that what was done to the House it began in.

"As no doubt you'll advise the Readers of your Weekly Paper of the late Fire in the South Ward of this City; please to add these few Hints for our future Safety. It is well known that the Fires in this Town of late, as that in Duke street, the School House and This, happened to be situate within Reach of the Rivers; by which Means, the Engines could be supplied without great Difficulty; and thus to our happy Deliverance, as those raging Fires were extinguished, I propose that a Drain or Brick Channel may be carried up at Low Water from under the Long Bridge, in broad street, that, at three or four convenient Places opposite to Thwart Street a large pump or two be filled in such Drain or Channel to serve in case of Fires in those Streets or Neighborhood, that the Drain end in a large Well or Basin, near City Hall having three or four Pumps to serve in the Neighborhood about the public Building; and perhaps an expedient may be found to convey the Water issuing out of this inexhaustible Fountain, by some Means or other Parts of the City remote from the Water Side."

There has been more than a few experiments in this line, and infallibly the experiments have proven a failure.

* * *

The salt water has corroded the pipes, and in an emergency requiring extra pressure on the pipes and mains, disaster has followed.

* * *

The city of Brighton, England, experimented with a salt water system for fire protection, and found, after it had given it a fair trial, that it was not satisfactory.

* * *

San Francisco may try this method, and possibly it will be a good thing, but all precedents lead to the idea that it will not.

* * *

Salt water for fire protection purposes is not superior to fresh water, the only thing required or asked by the insurance companies being a plentiful supply.

* * *

In the case of the Ashbury Heights fire, which was a miniature conflagration, there was an abundance of water, but the engines, owing to the height of the hill, could not get there as promptly as might have been desired.

The result was and is a warning to fire underwriters that the same rates as made for a detached dwelling is not adequate for a frame range, and it is a well-known fact that at least one of the burned dwellings was written at fifty cents for three years and the company which got the loss deserved it.

* * *

The Wholesale Grocers recently held a convention in this city. It discussed the several things aside from sanding sugar which pertained to the welfare of the grocery business, and incidentally the following is found in the report of the proceedings: "Mutual fire insurance is becoming a great factor in the insurance field, and of valuable assistance in association work, and has proven wherever tried that it is a good proposition and worthy of endorsement and support by the retail merchants of this country. It is no experiment, but an assured fact; your interests are better protected and your premiums materially reduced."

In connection with this is to be noted that two of the numbers on the programme are an address by E. A. Tyler, Fargo, N. D.—"Why Members Should Interest Themselves in Mutual Fire Insurance," and another address by C. H. Spencer, Seattle, Wash.—"How Our Mutual Fire Insurance Company Co-operates with the State Association."

* * *

The Tyler man is unknown to fame up to the present, and the Spencer person too well known to need comment.

* * *

Grocers, as a rule, are sensible and not inclined to patronize any fad outside the premium trading stamp business. They have been gulled cents by this method where they are or will be gulled dollars by the mutual co-duperative insurance plan.

* * *

It is not so easy to understand why a grocer will not permit an insurance man to assure him that he is charging too much for his groceries, especially if the grocer has any sense.

* * *

The suggestion made by the insurance man would be met with scorn or a club, for the grocery man feels he knows his own business best.

In this light, it is a poor rule that won't work both ways, and the grocery men want to tell the insurance men that they are charging too much for insurance. Funny, is it not?

* * *

The fire insurance men, as a whole, would, it is safe to say, just as soon as not let the grocers unite in the proposition of loaning each other five dollars apiece.

* * *

Mr. Haley Fisk, vice-president of the Metropolitan Life, is expected to arrive in San Francisco about the 15th inst.

* * *

The bankers are different, and when insurance policies are needed as collateral at the bank for a sixty day discount, it is an assured fact that the Grocers' Mutual policies will not be accepted, for the simple reason that the company is founded on wind—hot-air assets—and banks do not care about this kind of policy as collateral.

Mr. Stovel, after his Girard hunting trip, seems content with the spoils of the Eastern visit. The Girard is not a big line writer, and its experience heretofore on the Coast is not calculated to make it any more liberal.

The Girard is notoriously a non-compact, and the success of its venture will be watched with interest by legitimate fire underwriters.

It is safe to say that the Girard, like the Germania, will not cut much of a figure among the non-boarders.

Mr. Cyrus King Drew has returned from Southern California, where he attended the New York Life and the Conservative Life Convention. Mr. Drew is the editor and proprietor of the Insurance Report, and is accompanied by his wife.

Toronto, Indianapolis and some minor fires serve to keep the companies guessing, and to pile up a loss ratio which is appalling.

The Canadian companies are reported to have suffered severely in the Toronto fire, but there is no danger of their doing the Firemans of Baltimore act. The British-America and the Western Assurance are too strong.

WHY EX-GOVERNOR BUDD WENT TO EUROPE.

Homer Davenport, the cartoonist, is rambling over the State giving lectures or caricaturing, and incidentally telling stories about his former employer, Hearst. He was in Bakersfield the other day, and after his lecture amused a party of oil men, including H. Segur, President of the Monarch Oil Company, with a lot of Hearst stories, many of which cannot be repeated in print, at least. Here, however, is one of the mildest: "When Hearst was running for Congress in New York," said Davenport, "he invited ex-Governor Budd of this State to come on and speak for him. After the election the party, including Hearst and Budd, went to Washington on a special train, taking some "fairies" with them. On the trip, as there were no temperance principles practiced, a row took place over the girls, which, however, was eventually settled amicably, and Hearst sent Budd to Europe so as to square things. That is how and why the ex-Governor made his recent European trip."

The Typewriter Girl

By the Private Secretary

Business men are sitting up and taking notice that the "typewriter girl" is really a modern sword of Damocles. She is not the merry jest that the joke-smiths would have us believe. Witness the testimony of Mrs. Belle Curtis in the land fraud case. There are dozens of stenographers in San Francisco who have the secrets of their employers locked up in their breasts, and it is devoutly hoped by the men who employ them that they are very tightly locked and the key thrown away. Mrs. Curtis swung wide the doors to the chambers of her confidences, and that fact is worrying men in nowise concerned in these land cases.

Fancy what a topsy-turvy business world this would be if other stenographers should take their cue from Mrs. Curtis and divulge the methods of their employers for one reason or another. Fortunately for the peace of mind of doctors, lawyers, merchants, chiefs, it is almost without precedent, at least in San Francisco, for a woman to take the stand against her employer. The shock occasioned in this instance may bring the business man to his senses—of the part the stenographer plays in the scheme of things.

The highly-successful stenographer who earns a salary anywhere from $100 to $200 a month is invariably the repository of the secrets of the firm. What about the moth-eaten adage that a woman cannot keep a secret? Of a truth, the average woman cannot keep her own counsels, much less any one else's. But the stenographer who, in terse mercantile argot, is a crackerjack, cannot be pigeon-holed among the "average women." Count them over, and you'll find in every case that they are women who have none of the usual attributes of the witching sex. Their mental machinery works like a man's, their ideas, opinions, and idiosyncracies are all masculine gender. The fluffy-haired, gewgawed little typewriter who rattles like a brass band with jangling bracelets and chatelaines does not enter this discussion. It is the sort of woman who can make herself indispensable to a big firm that is under consideration.

That sort of woman, as stated before, belongs to the class whose mental slant is more like a man's than a woman's. She seldom marries, although she has more opportunities of meeting men than most women. But she is a business woman through and through, and that type appeals to few men from a cardiac standpoint. They admire her business acumen, her keen insight into character, her razor-edged judgment—but they look for other attributes in their wives.

There are between fifty and seventy-five women stenographers in this city who have reached the top-notch in their profession. Their resignations would be taken in the nature of a calamity by their employers. Needless to say, they are not fledglings—they have all said good-bye to the twenties. Four of these experts take their luncheon together in a down-town restaurant—the lowest salaried one receives $120 a month, the highest $180. They are each in the confidence of their employers, and the slightest breach of this confidence would shake the firm to its foundations. Two of the members of this luncheon quartette are working for rival firms, and though they have spent the noon hour together for ten years, they say that they have never once "talked shop." An outsider mentioned the subject of the Curtis testimony to them the other day, and with one accord they denounced the stenographer who for any cause pries open the strong box of confidences entrusted to her.

The high-class, high-priced stenographer is the one who knows that silence is 24 carat golden. She would as soon think of turning her own affairs inside out for public gaze as her employer's. Employers never appreciated this fact as much as they do now that the Curtis incident has stirred up so much discussion.

It is undoubtedly true that the business world is just waking up to the fact that the stenographer is a "mighty powerful pusson." To her credit be it said that she very seldom takes advantage of her position behind the scenes. There are tricks in every trade, and even men whose commercial honor is above par would not want the methods of their firms exposed on the highways. In the nature of her position the stenographer must know her employer's most intimate business secrets, and she should know how to keep them.

Are you tired? Go to the Post Street Turkish Baths.

The Happy Union Man

Oh, happy is the union man,
 He lives his life in clover,
 He works as little as he can,
 And his clothes are marked all over.
 He helps the others of his class
 As much as he is able,
 And meek as any hobbled ass,
 He wears the union label.

His coat can show the union mark.
 His hat and vest likewise,
 His very shirt, the diamond spark,
 That on his bosom lies,
 Is stamped in fashion that displays
 The brand of those who rule him,
 The brand of those who guide his ways—
 Who regulate and fool him.

The union boss smokes good cigars
 And buys them with the money
 He takes to settle union jars—
 He's fat, and smooth, and sunny.
 He sells his union brother out,
 His union brother likes it,
 So greets his mandates with a shout,
 And, when he orders, strikes it.

The union man is bold and free,
 That's what his leaders tell him;
 They rob him of his liberty,
 And, having caught him, sell him.
 The union man is ordered round,
 He's badgered and bulldozed,
 He does not dare to make a sound—
 The shop he works in 's closed.

Oh, happy, happy union man,
 Who has a union ticket,
 They put his shop beneath the ban,
 Then send him forth to picket;
 He pickets hard, he pickets long,
 He does not shirk or quail,
 His leaders put him in the wrong,
 And the police put him in jail.

He takes to politics in force,
 And so elects his Mayor,
 He finds that things are rather worse,
 His prospects far from fair;
 For the Mayor he is a canny man,
 He sees he has a plum,
 He grows rich quickly as he can,
 But the voter's "on the bum."

Oh, happy is the union man,
 He is a man of might,
 The rest may shirk, the rest may plan—
 The union man's all right.
 For though his pleasures may be few,
 His wages far from stable,
 He has one steady thing and true—
 He has the union label.

THE CALIFORNIA CLUB ELECTION.

There are a number of women in the California Club on the verge of nervous prostration, and all because they have just passed through an annual election. The contest has been waged as bitterly as if the officers were fat with emoluments and perquisites, instead of being laden with responsibilities, lightened with a few honors. The election took place last Tuesday afternoon, the polls being open from 2 to 5 o'clock. It was creeping on to midnight, however, before the ballots were counted. During all the evening hours, the cliques were grouped in the different rooms, talking over the candidates and all the animosities that have marked the month of electioneering. With all the avidity of seasoned politicians, they called for bulletins on the count, but when the result was announced the attitude of the two factions was a matter of credit to them. The defeated candidate for President, Mrs. J. W. Orr, one of the most brilliant women in the California Club, was quick to offer congratulations to the successful candidate, Mrs. Aylett R. Cotton, and promise loyal support for her administration.

The manner of election in the California Club is quite different from that in any other. The plan has been in operation for the past two years, and was patterned after that of the big Chicago Club. As many nominations as the members please are made from the floor. These names are mailed by the nominating committee to the members, who indicate their choice, the candidates receiving the highest number in this preliminary vote constitute what is called the "first ticket"; the second highest set of names are placed on the "second ticket," and all the others are dropped from the race—left at the gate. The two tickets are printed and mailed to the members who have a chance to study them over before the election time, a month after the first choice was made.

When the ballots were counted, Mrs. Cotton was found to have received 160 votes, and Mrs. Orr 126. The other officers on the successful ticket were: First Vice-President, Dr. Dorothea Moore; Second Vice-President, Mrs. A. W. Scott; Directors, Mrs. Arthur W. Cornwall, Mrs. Virginia Bradley, Mrs. Charles Warren, Mrs. J. J. Scoville, Mrs. E. P. Schell, Mrs. C. L. Hovey, Mrs. Horace Coffin and Mrs. H. H. Fassett.

These officers will be entrusted with important work, because it is this year that the California Club will begin the building of its new clubhouse on the lot on Clay street, between Polk street and Van Ness avenue. Besides this, every department of the club has big civic, social and educational measures to be carried forward.

There is too much of interest in the machinery of this club to permit the disgruntled members to withdraw or to hold aloof. They will all be at their posts when the club re-opens its work in September.

Some days since a prominent attorney called upon another member of the profession and asked his opinion on a certain point of law. The lawyer to whom the question was addressed drew himself up to his full height and said: "I generally get paid for telling what I know." Whereupon the questioner drew a half dollar from his pocket, handed it to the other and said: "Tell me all you know and give me the change."

SUNBEAMS

(Stolen from Thieves)

A young preacher was recently called upon to officiate at a funeral in the absence of the pastor of the church. He knew it was customary for the minister to announce after the sermon that those who wished should step up to view the remains, but he thought this was too hackneyed a phrase and said instead: "The congregation will now please pass around the bier!"

A certain judge was a splendid lawyer, and could talk a jury out of their senses. He was once counsel for a man who was accused of being a horse-thief. He made a long, eloquent, touching speech. The jury retired and returned in a few minutes with a verdict of "Not guilty." An old pal stepped up to the prisoner and said: "Jim, you are free; and now, honor bright, didn't you steal that horse?" To which Jim replied: "Well, Tom, I've all along thought I stole that horse, but since hearing the judge's speech, I don't believe I did."

A friend of ours tells the following story of a school-ma'am who has a dread of all kinds of contagious diseases. She sent a child home because her mother was sick. The next day the little girl presented herself at school with her finger in her mouth and a little hood swinging by the string, and said: "We's got a baby at our house, but mamma says I shall tell you it's not catching."

An Irish undertaker was laying out the deceased husband of a weeping Hibernian woman. The corpse wore a wig, and it was very difficult to induce it to stay on straight. The bereaved widow was called in to assist. "Go an' git me a pot of glue, Mrs. McGovern," said the undertaker, "so that I may keep this wig where it belongs." Mrs. McGovern set out after the sticking material, and after a time returned, saying with a sigh, "Here is the glue for ye." "Mrs. McGovern, you kin take back the mucilage," said the undertaker, "the difficulty is fixed; I used a tack."

A Hebrew was sitting on the Islesworth porch in Atlantic City reading a paper, when another Hebrew came up and said: "Mose, don't look now, but dat voman sitting next to you is de ugliest voman I have ever seen." Mose replied: "Yes, I know; dat's my wife."

The Political Situation

The number of candidates still continues to increase for every thing in sight, from President to Justice of the Peace. Mark Plaisted wants to go to Congress from the Sixth District, or rather wants to be the Democratic candidate for Congress in that District, because there is no earthly chance of either Plaisted or any other Democrat defeating Needham. I understand that the Examiner's support of Mark's aspirations was the price he demanded for his support of Hearst's candidacy for President, which, if it be true, shows that Plaisted is not near as shrewd as he used to be, for he never would have been able to have made the success he has made of several newspapers if he had attempted to build them up on such unsubstantial support as the Examiner can give. Besides, an editor as a rule should not run for office—he has too many enemies, and he is simply spending his money foolishly in campaign expenses. Mark used to be too careful to make such breaks in the past, and it shows a discouraging condition of decrepitude to see him venture in the political field personally at this time in his life.

* * *

The fight between the Bard and Oxnard factions in Ventura Counties has encouraged the Democrats to hope that perhaps by putting up an exceptional candidate, they may win the district, so they have selected J. Logan Kennedy as their candidate. He is one of the prominent men of the county, and from all accounts should make it very interesting for his Republican competitor, especially if the Republicans split. It is hardly necessary to point out that it would be a very serious thing for either of the Ventura Senatorial candidates if a Democrat should be elected to the Legislature from that county.

Writing of the Senatorship reminds me that Senator Rowell of Fresno, either stimulated by the example of his fellow editor, Plaisted's candidacy for Congress, or seeing the hopelessness of the Bard campaign, has privately announced, so rumor says, his own candidacy for the Senate. Rowell was one of the original discoverers of Bard, and he has been ever since seeking his reward at that Statesman's hands. He wanted to be a member of the Panama Canal Commission; before that he wanted to be Minister to Japan; before that he wanted something else, and Bard, to his credit be it said, worked like a Trojan to get him something, but the cheese sandwich Senator had no influence at the White House, and his efforts at bringing down a big price were, of course, failures. Now Rowell thinks that the best way to get something is to be in power himself, and accordingly he turns his eyes longingly on the toga. But he will not be alone among the Bard men in that ambition, for Flint has been mentioned, and there are others. The chief significance of Rowell's candidacy is that it means that he has concluded that there is no chance of Bard being re-elected.

Miguel Estudillo, of Riverside, has announced himself as a candidate against Frank Lewis as Assemblyman from the Seventy-Eighth District. Estudillo is a very able lawyer, a member of one of the old Spanish families of California. He announces that he is not pledged to any one for Senator, and will not be, a position that the press of Riverside warmly endorses. J. R. Dorsey of Bakersfield, who has gotten married since the last session of the Legislature, and who was declared by sundry susceptible maidens to be the handsomest member of the Assembly, wants to come back again. Henry E. Carter of Los Angeles, who was Speaker pro tempore in the last session, wants to be Speaker next year. J. N. Anderson of Santa Ana wants to be Senator from that bailiwick, but the Anaheim Gazette thinks that although he is clean-shaven to-day, his whiskers will be two feet long before he will be elected, so Anderson will probably not be on the roll of the next Senate.

* * *

In the Nineteenth District in this city there are several aspirants for State Senatorial honors: Senator Robert J. Welch, who is now on the State payrolls at the harbor front, wants to go back, and is trying hard to make a go of it, but he has competitors in the persons of John Heilman and E. J. Lynch, a bright young lawyer who is at present employed as assistant in Abe Ruef's office. Across the bay in Marin, Senator Belshaw and E. B. Martinelli are both candidates for the place that the Senator now holds. Belshaw is likely to find his path to victory rather hard to travel, because of his antagonism to labor unions, which are strong in parts of Contra Costa County, which is a part of the same district. Martinelli is a trustee of the insane asylum in Mendocino County. He was a Gage man, and if the "receptive" candidate for the Senate should put in an appearance at Sacramento next January, Martinelli would undoubtedly be for him, while Belshaw belongs to the Bard faction, and would be for Rowell, or Flint, or Bulla if they were candidates.

A canvass was made last week of the Democratic National Committee men by a Chicago paper, and they were asked how their several States would stand at St. Louis. Here are the answers: Indiana, Parker; Minnesota, Parker; New York, Parker; Georgia, Parker; Connecticut, Parker; Louisiana, Parker; Texas, Parker; Massachusetts, Hearst; North Dakota, Hearst; South Dakota, Hearst; Kansas, Hearst; California, Hearst; West Virginia, Gorman; Wisconsin, E. C. Wall; Nebraska, Parker or Hearst; North Carolina, Gorman or Parker; Delaware, Hearst or Gorman. Since the poll was made, some of the predictions have gone astray, as, for instance, Hearst has carried Connecticut, and has not carried Massachusetts. Illinois is not solid for Parker, nor Kansas for Hearst, and Texas has not indorsed Parker, nor is California pledged to Hearst, but the one thing of interest in the prognostications is that no one has two-thirds of the convention. It might have been added that Missouri is for Cockerell, and that Maryland will be for Gorman. Illinois has a favorite in Congressman Williams, who may at least get a complimentary vote from that State, and Rhode Island is for Hearst, while Michigan is going to give him some votes. Oregon is non-committal, though rather inclined to be anti-Hearst, and Pennsylvania is also on the fence, so that it is very evident that it is still any man's fight and may result in the selection of some one who has not even been named. It is particularly significant that the South has two candidates, and one, Williams, of Mississippi, who may be termed as "receptive," and in this connection I would call attention to a statement made by Congressman Champ Clark of Missouri in a recent magazine article: "It is urged that because Missouri is reliably Democratic the nomination should go to a doubtful State, when the truth is that an outside Democratic candidate can poll more votes in New York than any New Yorker, and more in Indiana than any Hoosier."

The Eureka Standard announces that Major Bull will be the delegate to Chicago from that part of the First District. Mayor Clinch is making it lively for Senator Voorhies in the other part of the district. Senator Devlin would like to go from the Second as one of the district delegates, and as George Stutevant has declined to be a candidate for Congress, and has left the field open for Duncan McKinley, imitating in that respect Senator Devlin, who was also a candidate for the Congressional nomination, it has been suggested that he be the other district delegate. That will give Sonoma the Congressman, and Sacramento and Mendocino the two delegates, so three counties will be remembered out of those in the Second District. If Mendocino takes up Stutevant's candidacy, he will be a delegate.

* * *

By the way, Dr. Lindley, the brother of Hervey Lindley, and the founder and first superintendent of the Whittier State School, is a candidate for the Republican nomination for Mayor of Los Angeles. The Doctor has always been active in politics, though never to the extent of his two brothers, and if he runs will have the active opposition of the Times, which should elect him. Mayor Snyder wants the Democratic nomination again, but his endorsement of Hearst has hurt him with his party very much, and late arrivals from the South say that the present is undoubtedly his last term, and that they do not think the South will demand his nomination for Governor two years hence.

The Fable of the Young Man Afraid of His Record

It so happened in the Era of Unheard-of Prosperity that there arose an Apostle of Discontent, the Man of the Borrowed Brains, otherwise the Yellow Pest. Now, this Yellow Pest became Fired with Ambition and aspired to the Presidency of a Great Country. "The Common People," following an Ancient Custom, asked for Reference, and none forthcoming, they began to Look into the Past. They did not look long. This Record was too Nasty. They said unto the Yellow Pest: "Your Record is Filthy, you cannot cover your track. Where you have tried to Cover It, there is a Smell; where you have left it open to the World it is Naked and Dirty. Get you hence! You are a traitor by profession; you are no Democrat—you are simply The Impossible Filth." And since this time, the Young Man, afraid of His Record, has been making a Swift Run ahead of the Past he has not the Time or the Face to Deny.

Japan goes on making history, while Russia waits.

A young woman of Chicago has proved by nearly dying that raw wheat and cold water will not sustain life.

"Jim" Hill has given $15,000,000 to build a church at St. Paul. This is the largest fire insurance policy ever written on a man's life.

Cattle King Miller is going to raise elk near Watsonville. The kind of Elk we know best is said by some to be raised on the bottle.

A distinguished Russian General has issued an order directing his men to "keep cool." It was not necessary so far as their feet are concerned.

A recent marriage at the Point Loma Home of Theosophy leads us to think that the institution has a pink Cupid as well as a "purple mother."

"Silent" Smith, the richest bachelor in the country, has found his tongue long enough to ask a lady to share his millions with him.

Hearst is accused of vainly offering $250,000 for Indiana's vote in the Democratic Convention. Evidently he has more money and the party more honor than had been suspected.

The Washington woman who arranged the wedding of her step-daughter, aged sixteen, to her brother, aged forty, should be compelled to do their housework for life.

The last of the Cogswell fountains has been pulled down and carted off the streets. If the unlamented donor has received his deserts he would be glad to get a cool drink from any kind of a fountain.

The proposition to stamp the temperature on mail leaving the city is excellent. Perhaps the benighted East will believe the Government more readily than it believes us.

A woman from the country, we read in the daily press, was so "confused by the big city's bustle" that she was taken to a hospital. She should have looked at the city's other side.

Recent research establishes the fact that the reason why Lot's wife looked back was to see what kind of furniture her neighbors were taking out of their houses in the doomed city.

Helen Gould is publicly glad that General Bell of Colorado did not drink champagne at a St. Louis Fair function. Considering the weather, almost anybody would have preferred beer.

Sam Parks, the walking delegate who excelled in blackmailing, has died in Sing Sing prison, but his soul goes marching on, and levying tribute on the building industry of New York.

Mrs. "Bob" Burdette writes that she is not a candidate for the Presidency of the Federation of Women's Clubs. Ladies interested in other aspirants for the place suspect Mrs. Burdette of having taken a leaf out of her husband's joke book.

A married gentleman named Kicks is trying to put down the home-wrecking "progressive euchre" evil among the ladies of Bayonne, N. J., and the ladies have come back at him with a movement against the lodge-going habit among their males.

A North Carolina Judge is frothing at the mouth because he and his court have been boycotted by the county bar. He charges the lawyers with contempt of court, and they charge him with contempt of the law.

Gallant Colonel Pitcher, of the Presidio, is formally charged with having "deserted six young women in the shadow of the altar." Pretty soon the sextette will sing that good old song, "The Pitcher that is Turned to the Wall."

One great newspaper editor, in his padded cell, shrieks "How old is Ann?" Another mumbles "brick-and-a-half, brick-and-a-half," and still another is busy trying to count the dots in his own brain. By these signs we know that the silly season in journalism has arrived.

Astronomer Burckhalter, of Chabot Observatory, in Oakland, has been commissioned by the police to turn his telescope from the stars to the branches in the adjacent park and look for some of the terrestrial transits of Venus about which the neighbors complain.

Oakland's school census reveals a shortage of 515 children. Well, we are not surprised. Show us a community whose males devote themselves to hunting offices, while its women put in their leisure playing cards for prizes, and we will show you a community of empty baby carriages.

A Wisconsin fisherman has discovered a queer beast that has the look and the bark of a dog, long, silky ears, a head like a walrus, six webbed feet, and a fish's tail. Undoubtedly this is the long-sought gascutas, seen heretofore only by gentlemen with the jim-jams.

CITY GOVERNMENT AND UNIONS.

Already San Francisco has the reputation of being the "tightest union town" in the country, and that is not the kind of reputation which brings to a city capital seeking investment, nor men seeking work. That reputation is due primarily to our comparative isolation, our remoteness from other large centers of population, and of industrial activity, making it possible to unionize here trades untouched by labor leaders in other communities, and to maintain here better than elsewhere the solidarity of unions and federation of unions against the undermining influences which are more feared than open attacks. But now, at a time when public feeling on the question of labor unionism is becoming acute, San Francisco's municipal administration has openly and boldly committed itself to the "closed shop" policy; has announced, in effect, that no non-union men need apply.

First came the outrageous conduct of J. George Boyne, a Fire Commissioner. This Boyne has lived long in San Francisco. Up to his recent bad break, he enjoyed a certain standing by reason of his industry, sobriety and thrift. He was, or professed to be, a Republican. Of importance or influence he had nothing. When the moment came, he plunged into Schmitzism. As a "shouter" he was so loud, and as a "worker" he was so tireless that when a Fire Commissioner'ship fell vacant, he got his reward. A few days ago, Boyne, new-clad with a little authority, revealed himself for the wolf he is. The union stablemen struck, and Boyne promptly ordered the city's fire horses out of barns that had declared for the "open shop" principle and were manned by free labor. The poor beasts stood in a chill wind until quarters could be found for them, where the feed and the help were not tainted with the heretical doctrines of Americanism. Boyne is only a small potato, and not a sound one at that. He will be duly remembered if he should ever seek an elective office or an appointment under a decent administration as one unfit for public trust or even for citizenship.

On the heels of Boyne's offense comes a much more serious manifestation of the class Government which Schmitz has so often and so vehemently denounced. His Board of Electricity, composed of the Fire and Police Commissions, sitting jointly, has officially decreed that it will employ none but union men in good standing. This is a plain declaration that the Constitution of the United States, the Constitution of California and the Charter of San Francisco, are not worth the paper on which they were written, and that for them has been substituted the constitution of the labor union. It is a denunciation of Americanism, and a glorification of unionism. It denies and defies the fundamental theory of the Republic that "All men were created free and equal." It makes the union label the city's seal and the union banner the city's flag.

Legally there can be no question about the invalidity of this action; morally, there is no question as to its flagrant injustice. Though every other place of employment in San Francisco be barred to the man without a union card, the City Hall must always and forever be an "open shop." Public employees are paid with public money, and public money is taken by taxation from union man and non-union man alike. What, we wonder, would be said if this Board of Electricity should order that no man be given employment unless he were a member of some Protestant Church in good standing? What would be said if it denied employment to all save Roman Catholics in good standing? What if it put the ban on all but members of the Masonic fraternity in good standing? And yet, any one of these declarations would be as lawful, as just, as reasonable as what this delectable Board has done.

We do not doubt that Schmitz wants another term as Mayor or in some higher office. Whether or not the proved charges of "graft" and other misfeasance shall count against him, whether or not there be truth in the whispers of still other and uglier misdoings by him and his relatives and adherents, it is certain that unless he disavows, fully and promptly, this most shameful act of his most shameless commission, he may as well bare his neck for the axe. This patient and placid people could easily tumble Schmitz from his high place and ride him and his Boynes on a rail until they realized their sins. A little more of this trampling upon the necks of free men and something of that kind will be done.

THE ADVICE OF GOMPERS.

In an address recently delivered at Denver, upon the conditions existing in the Cripple Creek district, Samuel Gompers, one of the foremost union labor men of the country, made the following statements:

"The violation of the fundamental principles of our country has made Colorado the laughing stock of the world. It appears to me that, if the law continues to be overridden, as it has been in the past, the fight will soon develop from a technical legal conflict to a physical one. Force and violence are the doom of union labor. Union labor cannot win by force. It must begin a campaign of education, and business methods must be used in dealing with business men. If trades unionism hopes to progress, it cannot be done by force. Violence will not bring about the right result."

This is as the voice of a prophet crying in the wilderness. Will the union men listen to the voice of this leader among them? He is no visionary; he has had dealings for many years with the business men of various sections of the country; his official position in the ranks of labor has made it necessary for Gompers to study all the various phases of the great problem that now confronts us. He knows the temper of the great American people, and he knows that they will never permit the unions to ride roughshod over the rights given by the law to private citizens. Nor is Gompers alone in his belief as to the insanity of violent means to force a settlement of an economic question. John Mitchell, the leader of the miners, is also unalterably opposed to violence. At all times since his promotion to the Presidency of the miners' great confederation, he has counseled his followers to refrain from violence, and to seek success through peaceable means.

Gompers and Mitchell are men of sound sense. They give good advice. They recognize the harm done the cause of union labor by resort to violence. They seek success for their organizations; therefore, they counsel respect for the law. It is not as if this advice came from young captains in the ranks of labor, of whom the men might say: "They are afraid." Gompers and Mitchell are veterans of many campaigns; they have shown by battling for what they considered the rights of the unions against many mighty corporations that they are not afraid. Fear has no place in their characters; but experience has made them wise.

It is more than a coincidence that the advice of Gompers and the remarks of President Eliot, of Harvard, upon industrial conditions were given to the country about the same time. One would hardly expect to find these two men agreeing on the great question, yet they do, and upon the most important phase of it.

"The unions have been corrupted by selfishness," says President Eliot. "The proscription of non-union men, the strike in sympathy, or support, and the boycott are weapons which angels and saints could not use without being demoralized."

Gompers knows that the unions have become demoralized by the use of these unholy weapons, and being demoralized, he knows they are ever on the verge of lawlessness. Hence his sage advice, and his prophetic utterance: "Union labor cannot win by force."

ALL RALLY TO THE MARRIED MAN.

"Preference will be shown clerks who are married, especially those with large families."

This notice, tacked up in the post-office at Des Moines, Iowa, comes with all the force of a proclamation from the White House. It is an order of the Government, and it foreshadows, also, the rallying cry of the Roosevelt campaign. When McKinley set his lance in rest "to ride the barriere," on his shield was a full dinner pail, argent, on a field azure; on Roosevelt's the device will be a full cradle. "Hurrah for Roosevelt and the full cradle!" will be the shout as a President by accident seeks to be President by elevation.

And it will not be a bad call and countercry for the campaign. What the nation wants is more homes and fewer boarding houses, more husbands and fewer bachelors, more cradles and more babies to put in them—especially more babies. The President's pet theory has made him the target for much cheap joking, and in a mocking age like ours it was only a brave man who would have enunciated it. But Roosevelt, for all his crudity and primitiveness, has grasped one of the larger truths of history, has learned one of the greater lessons of civilization. He has perceived that the nation's safety lies in its homes and its hope in its nurseries. Tables of exports and imports and bank clearings and manufactures and planted acres furnish indices of our material progress and welfare, but by the census and its showing of population increased by births we shall know whether we are to climb or to slide. Marriage is still the thing expected of every man and woman, but maternity is no longer fashionable—that is, maternity of the kind which boasted not until it counted children by the dozen. An English poet, who has failed in popularity because of a habit of truth telling, sang his sermon in a verse which ran:

"Here's to our five-meal, meat-fed men,
To our tall, deep-bosomed women,
And the children nine and ten,
(Stand up!)
And the children nine and ten.

Now the President has pretty much the same idea, and in the eminently practical and direct way which characterizes him, he is setting about it to put a premium on fecund, prolific citizenship. He promises work and wages to the fathers of children, and in truth they are the kind of men who both need and deserve preferment. The man who has a half-dozen little mouths to feed and little bodies to clothe, has something to work for, something to keep him honest and sober and industrious. When he breeds and rears such a family he is doing his part for the present and for the future. Economically he is the best builder of the edifice of his country's greatness, getting him children to do his country's work, to consume its products, to people its waste places and to make them fertile. In lands where living is less complex than in our own, women pray that the gods may send them sons to "fill the fighting tale." There the father of a dozen is honored as one who has done well his part. Perhaps the Roosevelt doctrine will sweep away some of the empty refinement that has made us forget the prime purpose of life, which is to multiply and increase on earth; perhaps his campaign slogan, "Hurrah for the full cradle!" will bring back to us the good, old-fashion of plenteous motherhood and abundant fatherhood, and so preserve the nation from decay and the race from dishonor. At all events it's a fine, frank sentiment, and we subscribe to it cheerfully: "Hurrah for the full cradle!"

THE CITY BEAUTIFUL.

The Association for the Improvement and Adornment of San Francisco is on the right road. This city is entering upon a new era. For fifty years we have been giving exclusive attention to our material development, without regard to the many opportunities for artistic adornment or patience for their consideration. But in this fault we have not been alone, for the entire country has been engaged in a race for wealth such as the world never saw before. Now has come the turning point; our coffers are filled with gold; our trade is increasing; our prosperity is unbounded. We now have time to look around us, and enjoy the beauties of nature. Throughout the country there is a revival of interest in the beautifying and improvement of large cities. In many places, committees have been appointed to formulate plans for the adornment of their respective localities. Even in Paris—that city of wondrous beauty—an official body is now devising schemes for further embellishment. San Francisco's turn has come. In natural advantages she is favored above all other cities in the country. Her hills were intended by nature to be the resting places of so many beautiful works of art, from the contemplation of which one might turn to enjoy the magnificent views of the city and the bay; the Coast Range and the towns nestling in its foothills; the Golden Gate and the calm expanse of the broad Pacific. The visit of D. H. Burnham, of Chicago, will have done much, if his words of encouragement but awaken within the breasts of the people a desire to assist in any plan or plans that may be suggested for the beautification of the metropolis of the Pacific Slope.

First, something practical must be suggested. Therefore, we think the proposition to appoint a general advisory committee a good idea. Such a committee should be composed of men of broad experience, of advanced ideas, and of such standing in the community that their suggestions will receive respectful attention. Again, while reaching out for better effects, let us not forget the work we have in hand. No city with dirty streets can ever be beautiful. Let the Association force that idea upon the Supervisors and the Board of Public Works. Nor can a city lay claim to either progress or beauty so long as many of its main thoroughfares are covered with miserable shanties. The Association should take into its confidence the owners of the shanties on East street and lower Market street. First impressions count for much. Terraces and fountains; statues and flag poles; shrubbery and lawns, are not the only ornaments that make for beauty in cities. They are but the trimmings upon the municipal garment. What we need most are better buildings and better streets. If the Association can secure them San Francisco will be its debtor.

STRIKE PARALYSIS.

The paralyzing effect of continual and senseless strikes is best illustrated in the shoe industry in California. Some six years ago a strike took place which threw out of work nearly 4,000 white shoemakers. There were at that time numerous factories in California, and the industry was promising well. Aside from the 4,000 white people employed, there were about 5,000 Chinese earning a living in the same industry. It is a well-known fact that the best sole leather in the world is made in California, and this, coupled with the high freight charges from the East, enabled the shoe manufacturers of California to turn out a better shoe than their Eastern competitors. The men were paid larger wages than the Eastern shoemakers, and they were content. Along came the Spirit of Unionism and with it the Malcontent and the Walking Delegate of Misfortunate Complaint. And then the strike, with its attendant horrors. The only result of this long strike was the fact that many of the factories went out of business, until now there remain about five hundred white and fifty Chinese as operatives for five factories on the Coast. This is the blight of unionism with a vengeance.

One of these factories is located in Petaluma, and the other four in San Francisco. Some time ago a man employed in one of these factories was discharged for drunkenness, and as a result a strike is brewing. The unions want the man re-instated. Tuesday of this week, the Mogul of the Union, Chief Do-Nothing Good Extraordinary, arrived from Chicago, and he was called upon to make a decision as to whether the strike shall be arranged so as to only include the employers of the discharged drunkard or whether it would not be better to throw out of employment the employees of the other factories and the other four hundred and fifty-nine operatives.

In view of the disastrous results that overtook the workmen as a result of the last strike, it will probably be another case of back-down by the unions, as the makers are determined, and they find that it pays better to buy Eastern-made shoes as middlemen, and then sell these at a reasonable profit. The profit of the California maker is only a few cents a shoe, and the trade will not admit of the least stoppage and consequent loss. There is nothing in shoe making in California. Freights have gradually become lower, and this and the tactics of the Shoemakers' Union have admitted all the prison-made and sweat-shop shoes of the East.

There may be some sound business judgment back of the union, in some cases, but we have so far failed to detect it in a single instance. In the shoe-making trade the city has been deprived of nine thousand artisans and their families, and these same artisans have undergone untold suffering, their babes have gone unshod, their wives have hungered and their children have been at the point of starvation. Families have been deserted by husbands and fathers because of lack of employment. They have had to wander away from the Pacific Coast to the overcrowded Eastern centers, and have had to encounter the opposition of the scab and the sweat-shop and live in surroundings compared to which the condition existing in California previous to the coming of the Walking Delegate of Misfortune, was akin to an undreamed-of Heaven. All this for what? For the purpose of disciplining some manufacturers who preferred to hold the keys to their establishments in their own hands rather than give them up to the anarchist and the labor agitator. The great body of men engaged in the strike of six years ago was opposed to the strike, but the counsels of the unwise prevailed. The manufacturers closed up their shops, with the exception of five factories, and now these are to be closed up by agitators who have sprung up in place of the first crop that inflicted this terrible hardship on their fellows, and this loss on the State. There are no immense profits with which to grease the walking delegate of the Shoemakers' Union in the shoe business, and the factories will undoubtedly close, as a result of the new and unjustified attempt at coercion, and another five hundred delegates for the soup-house are created.

MAYOR SCHMITZ AND HIS FAMILY.

The Schmitz family and their friends should consider themselves lucky, if holding a political position and drawing a salary from the city is to be considered good fortune. Every commission in control of the Mayor is filled with his creatures and a good many jobs are filled by his family. One brother, Herbert, is running the Board of Public Works in such fashion that the city is getting less for more money than the boldest boodler of a Street Superintendent handled in the ante-charter days. Another brother, Frank, is running the Almshouse, with his wife as a salaried assistant, and these two are not losing flesh on the job, nor are the hapless paupers in their care taking on any weight. Other relatives by blood and by marriage are scattered through the municipal pay roll wherever good salaries are paid for little work. The Works Board brother is an important person in the suspected alliance of the Mayor and the material men, inasmuch as that commission will direct the expenditure of every dollar raised by the sale of the city bonds. There is no reason to place brother Herbert above brother Eugene when it comes to appraising the selfishness and the purity of motion and deed displayed by the Schmitz family.

Given such power, by virtue of his creatures in the commissions and his relatives in high public office, the Mayor needs only the whip-hand over the Board of Supervisors to serve his masters and public grafters in their raid upon the city's treasury, and that last and crowning power he has through five boot-licking Supervisors, whose votes are ever ready to back up his veto. They may not be able to give the Mayor an affirmative majority, but they do put it absolutely into his hands to black all legislation which displeases him. Of a truth, things look well for the Mayor's friends.

If the Chinese must stay away, so must the walking delegate.

LIBRARY TABLE

"Dollars and Democracy," by Sir Philip Baine Jones, Bart., is one of the best books written by a British traveler for a long time. Its excellence consists in the fact that the criticism is entirely good natured, and has none of that merely carping quality which is too apt to distinguish the attempts of our trans-Atlantic cousins to interpret our national customs and peculiarities. The sentiments are those of a man of the world, who is accustomed to meeting men and whose notions are not bounded and limited by the borders of his native village. In fact, as far as good healthy cosmopolitanism goes, he could give points to many of our somewhat too provincial New Yorkers. The material has been gathered in a recent visit to the United States, which was of sufficient length to enable him to form some accurate conclusions, on a broader basis than that from which the ordinary variety of globe-trotter is accustomed to generalize. He instances among the three things which he will miss in England after his visit to the United States: "My beautiful, snow-white tub, with its silver fittings and its perennial supply of hot water and cold, my telephone with a friend at the other end; the electric light that really gives light. The bastard product of science and commercial enterprise known by the same name in London bears little resemblance to its trans-Atlantic name-sake. His remarks on his treatment by the yellow press and scurrilous journals are pointed enough and will receive the commendation of all people who are infused with respect to these journals. The illustrations are excellent, and are reproductions of drawings by the author.

Mention has already been made in these columns of the series of reprints of classical and notable English books on sport and out-door recreation which D. Appleton & Company are making. There is no need to repeat what has been already said, and it is sufficient to call the attention of the discriminating reader to the series which combines all the excellencies of type, binding and illustration. Two of the most recently published have come to hand: "The Complete Angler," the old favorite by Izaak Walton and Charles Catton is here found in a form which should please the most exacting bibliophile. It is embellished with engravings, drawings and contains, moreover, a number of notes illustrative of the text which cannot fail to be valuable. It is a reprint of the edition published by John Major, Fleet street, London, in 1824. "Mr. Sponge's Sporting Tour" was a favorite with our grandfathers. It is by the author of the famous and inimitable "Joeroecks's Jaunts." The reprint is founded on the edition published by Bradbury & Evans in 1853. The illustrations are by John Such. Although to a very great extent the humor of the book has become antiquated and it could never again enjoy the wide popularity which once it had, it is one of the curiosities of literature, and no one who is making a collection of notable works can do without it.

"The House in the Woods," by Arthur Henry, is the story of a return to nature, the building of a mountain home, and the conquest of the soil. It is a nature book, with human interest, and in addition to the freshness and charm of the country life and the wood lore pictures in these pages, the story thrills with the humanity which the author has found and depicted with true insight. He tells how the forest cleared and a house was built; how a home was made, and the wild things of the mountains yielded place to their domesticated brethren. He pictures the prowess of the mountaineers, the deeds of the woodsmen, and the influences which made themselves felt in a brighter life for the people of the woods. The beauty of nature in the mountains, the joy of existing out of doors, and the success, not of mere country living, but also of country fellowship, are brilliantly pictured in this delightful story of a new life in a Catskill Mountain home.

A. S. Barnes & Co., Publishers, New York. Price, $1.50.

"A Woman's Will," by Anne Warner, is a story of an American woman's summer on the Continent. It is a good, readable novel, not very remarkable either for literary power or interest of plot. The dialogue is bright, much better, in fact, than the average, and on the whole the book is by no means bad. It should prove a passable companion in the summer months. Little, Brown & Company.

"Kindly Light," published by Henry Altemus Co., is a small affair divided into two parts, and of light reading. Price, 50 cents.

"The Complete Pocket Guide to Europe," published by William R. Jenkins, New York, is an annual publication of useful information to tourists. The work has been revised from year to year, and is the equal of any other condensed guide book.

"The Folly of Others," written by Neith Boyce, is a well-bound and well-printed book of more than usual interest. The engravings are excellent. Published by Fox, Duffield & Co., New York. Price, $1.

FINANCIAL

These Bonds Should be Paid.

So the Montgomery avenue bonds are on the carpet again. A new suit is proposed this time to compel the State to honor its own creation and pay the interest now long overdue. The manner in which this bond issue has been repudiated by both city and State is a standing disgrace to the commonwealth at large and to San Francisco in particular. That this city can have the nerve to go outside of its own boundary line asking financial backing for its future bond issues, with the record of the Montgomery avenue and Dupont street bonds before the world shows what nerve can do. The open repudiation of these bonds may seem a smart piece of business to the class, gradually growing smaller as the years go by, whose main object was to gain money, no matter how, their immoral views on the subject being extended to the transaction of public affairs. The attempt to saddle the Montgomery avenue improvement suggested for the benefit of the whole community upon a special section of the city, was an outrage to start in with, and on a par with the legislation, which ruled here in the olden time where the owners of property along the line of some street were openly robbed to pay for the public benefit of street improvement along some particular block. The Montgomery avenue tax went up before the courts, and after years of litigation got knocked out. The city of course would not meet the indebtedness, and it is doubtful whether the State can be made to do so, law or no law, unless willing to meet the pseudo obligation. The proper way to settle the proposition would be to provide for a tax levy upon all property included within the jurisdiction of the Assessor of the city of San Francisco. The money was invested in good faith by foreigners, and it is not proper that a city of the high standing of San Francisco in the commercial world should ignore the fact that these investors have a right to look to the municipality for the security and repayment of its investments. Both of these bond issues should be met in the spirit of the honorable man of business who, recognizing that his good name is worth more than gold, meets his obligations at all cost rather than shirk his just debts by recourse to the bankruptcy count or by pleading the Statute of Limitations.

Rehabilitating a Bank.

The International Bank and Trust Company of America, which failed here last December, is making an effort to liquidate and re-organize. Its affairs are now in the hands of the California Bank Commission, owing $45,000 to people here, with a few creditors in Kansas City and the City of Mexico. Toward this end it has incorporated the Pan-American Securities Co., under the laws of Arizona, and the Pan-American Banking Co. of West Virginia, the latter to be the active operating company, with stock of $200 a share. This company is to pay all the debts of the old concern. Creditors of less than $500 are asked to accept payment in dividends of 10 per cent. Those who hold claims to a larger amount than this are asked to accept half the amount in Pan-American Banking stock at $200 per share, and the other half in dividends of 10 per cent. Offers are also made to holders of stock in the International Bank and Trust Company to exchange it for stock in the two new companies.

Peace on the Comstock.

The latest news from the Comstock is the settlement of all litigation between the Comstock Tunnel Companies, the Occidental and other mines. This is very satisfactory from a business standpoint, and a unity of purpose and action between the mining and the tunnel people should be of vast benefit to all concerned. From now on both interests will work in harmony, and for the first time in its history the tunnel will be made of use to the mines. Lighted with electricity, with motors for moving the cars in place of an antiquated mule, the ores will now be dropped down to and whisked out of the mines, saving the companies the enormous cost of hoisting 1600 feet to the surface under the old system of work. The ore prospects in the north-end mines are still bright, and it looks now as though they had another bonanza mine in Ophir. Outside of the fine, healthy tone of the mining situation the market is dull, with prices far below what they ought to be in many cases.

Thievery Brings Timidity.

Some of the advertising sheets run as mining papers by and in the interest of promoters, are beginning to preach about an era of activity in speculation in mines. No wonder there is a timidity, and the only wonder is that it is not even stronger than it is. After the repeated experience in the courts of the most rascally conduct upon the part of promoters, and the failure to secure conviction of thieves who win out by an impudence begotten of a supreme and inborn contempt of the laws of God and man. It seems impossible for those victims to secure justice in the courts where the most infamous lies are sustained as facts by false testimony. Things will go on until one of the swindled in desperation takes the law into his own hands and secures a clear settlement by force of arms. The audacity of some of these men is unparalleled, and it

United Railroad Earnings Increase.

The statement of earnings of the United Railroads for March last shows gross receipts of $534,044, an increase of $36,097 over the same month of the previous year. For last January, February and March, the gross earnings aggregated $1,543,357, as against $1,415,934 for the same period in 1903, an increase of $127,423.

The Mechanics' Savings Bank, incorporated in January last, has spent three months in temporary upstairs quarters, during which time it has accumulated $400,000 in assets. Now it has opened to transact a regular savings and loan business at the southwest corner of Montgomery and Bush streets. The paid-up capital of the Bank is $250,000. The officers and directors of the bank are: James O'B. Gunn, president; George D. Gray, vice-president; George F. Lyon, vice-president; Frederick H. Clark, cashier; W. F. Williamson, attorney; F. W. Dohrmann, Jr., F. M. Greenwood, Marshall Hale, G. W. Kline, Geo. M. Mitchell, Charles C. Moore, Henry T. Scott.

The local stock market furnishes no glad surprises of late for the shareholders. San Francisco Gas gets a jolt occasionally up and down to justify the common, everyday statement of activity. The manoeuvres of this extraordinary creation of the promoter raised out West are interesting to watch, and will be more so before long. The water and sugar list rules tolerably firm, under a light demand.

The new Tonopah road, which will, it is said, be completed about June 1st, has made a mortgage to the Land Title and Trust Company of Philadelphia as trustee to secure an issue of $500,000 six per cent 15 year gold bonds, dated January, 1904. These bonds are guaranteed by endorsement of the Tonopah Mining Company. Stock of one call, $1,000,000, has been issued, of which $100,000 goes to the original owners of the railroad charter, the remaining $900,000 being issued, but held for the benefit of the shareholders of the mining company. The par value of these shares is $100. "Issued, but held for the benefit of shareholders" sounds good. Perhaps the intellectual chaps at the head of the concern do not think the shareholders are capable of managing this gift with the string tied to it. See what it is to be small fry.

TOWN CRIER

Wonderful stories the newspapers tell
Of the deeds of the brave Japanese;
Each correspondent is eager to swell
The gale of the favoring breeze.
The Jap is a scholar, the Russ is a brute,
The Jap is a soldier who knows how to shoot;
The Muscovite only is fit for the boot,
Or any damned thing that you please.

There's something in winning, I'm sorry to say,
Which makes one kow-tow to the strong,
And virtues the victor can cabbage away
Which never to him could belong,
Which is why we should take with a small grain of salt,

The story that Russia alone is at fault,
And her people a crowd of the blind and the halt,
That the Japs cannot ever do wrong.

It must be admitted that architect Burnham's ideas for the beautifying of San Francisco appear to be very sane. He has no up-in-the-cloud notions like Charles Keeler, and even Ernest Peixotto's suggestions with regard to the wider application of Italian styles of building are wild dreams compared with the sober notions of the Chicago man. I suppose a short residence in Chicago would curb any one's ideals of the possibilities of the beautiful. Still, there is one suggestion which is impossible of being carried out, even according to Burnham's scheme. He demands beauty in the city by way of the garden. That is just the method which our people will not take. It involves too much steady labor and patient care. Anything that will produce an effect, anything which implies the spending of money and a certain amount of ostentation, we shall gladly undertake, but patient and loving care of our homes, oh, Mr. Burnham, how little you know your San Francisco!

The "honor system" at the University, by which students are placed on their honor not to cheat in examinations, has been, according to Professor Soule, proven a complete failure. The students, in other words, promise that they will not cheat, and then go and do it. The ecclesiastics have a pretty argument to back up their contention with regard to the immorality of the ordinary secular education. The university cannot train students to treat its own examinations fairly. It is charged that they buy books at the co-operative store, in which to write their answers, and prior to the examination insert in these books, formulae and other matter, which might be useful. I am unable to discover whether this habit is widely spread through the entire country, or whether it is only one of our peculiarly local characteristics.

A local paper recently discussed with much type and little sense "the connection between the Gentleman and the Horse." A gentleman is naturally supposed to be well-connected, but observation of the antics of many in the Golden Gate Park, who are experimenting in the English trot, would lead one to believe either that there is no connection between the gentleman and the horse, or, horrible thought, that the temporarily disconnected person is no gentleman, it being impossible to deny the horse. Enquiry at Emeryville has produced the information that the most usual connection between the gentleman and the horse is a chattel mortgage, the latter being, as a rule, in the hands of a flashily-dressed person who cannot pronounce th properly.

I never yet said anything in favor of Berkeley that I did not have to eat my words. A few weeks ago I praised the enterprise which had led to the institution of Sunday concerts in the amphitheatre. I fancied that it was to be a very delightful means of entertainment to the people who maintain things over there, where students cheat and professors imagine vain things. To my surprise, I now discover that a fee of twenty-five cents is to be charged as admission to the concerts. How that can be done on ground that belongs to the whole body of the people, and how thousands of people can be kept out of their own property on Sunday, passes my comprehension. There are places where such insolence would not be endured, but we are getting fast into the habit of taking things lying down.

The wholesale grocers are to give all their assistants a Saturday half-holiday. This institution, which is fast becoming universal wherever the English language is spoken, should be recognized on a wider scale than it is in San Francisco. It is good all round. Three hours off will not break any one, and the advantage far outweighs any small loss that may come. I prophesy as a result of the change fewer funerals of wholesale grocers; that is, if the park or Marin County claims them on Saturday, instead of cigars and mineral water plus. A Saturday half holiday is almost necessary for health, at the strain we are working, and it will be a recognized institution, always provided that some fool union does not get hold of the idea, start boycotting or striking, or something else, and wreck the notion.

Only a short time ago reference was made to the carelessness shown by judges and court officials in selecting and handling jurie.. Now comes further confirmation of our criticisms. Mrs. Minnie Adam, who was convicted of killing her two-year-old child, is to have a new trial because the deputy sheriff did not keep the jury together after the trial, but allowed the members to occupy different rooms in a hotel. It should be easy enough to provide accommodation for the jury in the court building and have their meals sent in from the outside. Jury service is neither a picnic nor a theatre party. We should have jumped a long way ahead if our officials could only understand that they have duties.

For a highly moral city, Oakland is displaying some very unlovely characteristics, moral obliquities, so to speak, on the part of its Supervisors. These gentlemen, who are, for the most part, members of churches, and quite prominent members, as well, are in the habit of charging more for mileage than the traffic will bear. Worse, still, some of them have actually had the audacity to charge for mileage on Sunday. It must be pretty to see a deacon Supervisor leading off the hymn, "Who givest all" with one eye on the city treasury and a fraudulent bill for mileage in his pocket.

The strenuous female still keeps up her campaign across the Bay. That inexplicable phenomenon, the connection between woman and robbery, has received no further lucidation, but has shown its continued existence. Another woman has found another burglar and frightened him at pistol point from her premises. The Oakland lasses, on the other hand, have shown so great a propensity for the joys of Venus that a hard-hearted official has ordered couples out of Lafayette Park at night. We grow every kind.

GOOD WORK BY THE CITIZENS' ALLIANCE.

The Citizen's Alliance is lending the full strength of its rapidly growing membership to the side of law and order in the struggle that is now on between the Stable and Carriage Owners' Association, and the Stablemen's Union and the Hack Drivers' Association, and as far as possible under existing conditions, in the administration of justice. The city administration has given its encouragement to the strikers, and because of the assistance of the Police, men have been man-handled and mauled into insensibility, attacked in numbers and without provocation. The Citizens' Alliance is trying to protect the lives and the property of the Stable Owners by peaceful and lawful means, and in pursuance of this policy, has placed a number of guards over the property of such of the owners as have not entirely closed their stables and sent their horses to pasture. The only hope of the thugs who form the union is to terrorize the employees of the Stable Owners or the Alliance.

In the policy of standing in with the hoodlum strikers, the police pounce upon the guards placed by the Alliance at any and all opportunities, search them, and if a weapon is found, the guard is immediately arrested and the weapon confiscated by the subservient tool of the canaille. On the other hand, if the guard leaves one of the stables weaponless, the Police ascertain the fact and disappear from the scene in order to give the strikers the opportunity to revel in a murderous assault.

In the case of Elmer A. Hollingsworth, who cut a hoodlum named Hanlon, Hollingsworth was on his way to get a doctor. He left his revolver at the barn, and on his return to the stable was surrounded by a mob of lawbreakers who professed peace. Two of these "fair" and honorable samples of the union labor element struck him from behind. The only means of defense Hollingsworth possessed against a mob of murderous villains was a small pen-knife, which he used to advantage to carve his way out of the cowardly crowd.

Hollingsworth, who would have been killed had he not possessed a knife, was immediately arrested for assault to murder.

This strike can only end with the "open shop" triumphant. The Alliance is assisting the poorer owners of stables with feed and guards, and it will see to the prosecution of every offender to the bitter end. It put up the bail in the case of Hollingsworth in the sum of $1,000, and he is now at his post of duty.

All the methods of the Alliance are peaceful ones and commend themselves to right-minded men. While this regrettable strike is going on among the stablemen, there is another strike among the Harness-makers. It has been decided by the Leather-makers and the Tanneries, in order to bring the deplorable conditions to a close as quickly as possible, to sell no leather to firms manufacturing harness and stable equipment unless said firms are pledged to the open shop principle. The harness manufacturers are simply obeying the law of self-preservation, and are acting so as to help the stable owners and to protect themselves from the steadily increasing demands of the unions. These demands have grown to such an extent that profits have been wiped out completely. The Citizens' Alliance proposes to end these intolerable conditions, conditions that are killing the industries of the Pacific Coast. The membership is growing by leaps, and all lovers of Americanism, fairness, equality before the law, opposition to brute force, and the individual right to work where and how and for whom one pleases are eligible to membership, and are called upon to come and sign the rolls.

One of the German Princes was taken to the California Market the other day and introduced to the Moraghan cookery. He pronounced it "parfait" and "prachtvoll," and said the oysters were the equal of the Ostend variety and rather more succulent.

A VALID EXCUSE.

A well-dressed young man stepped into the Palace lobby the other day and remarked to a trio of strangers that he could tell the politics of any man at a glance. The challenge accepted, he pointed his finger at the nearest and said:

"You are a follower of Bryan."

"You are right, I am."

"You are for Judge Parker," he said to the next.

"Good guesser. I am," said the man.

"And you," he said, addressing the last of the trio, who had remained silent throughout the conversation, "you favor Hearst."

"You're a liar," said the stranger. "I'm sick. That is what makes me look that way."

The Political Situation

Although we are only a week from the State Conventions, there seems to be the same uncertainty that has prevailed for weeks past in the minds of the Democrats as to what they will do. Their vote at the recent primaries was so small that no one can doubt their apathy and fear, even if the names of the delegates elected did not show that the leaders of the party propose to lay low until after the Convention. There is a very strong opposition to Hearst, yet the fear of him is so great that few dare come out in the open and admit their true views, and as a result the leaders are waiting until the St. Louis convention eliminated him, as they hope, from the problem. Then they will be able to condole with him over his defeat and cheer on the nominee. That programme might possibly be all right if it were not for another possible contingency. Suppose not getting the nomination at St. Louis Hearst should bolt? I have pointed out that contingency before, and as the time for the National Convention approaches, the likelihood of it being carried out does not diminish. In fact, it may be set down as conceded on all sides that if Parker, instead of Hearst, is nominated at St. Louis, the Hearst papers and the Hearst followers will not support the ticket. That is the view taken by some of the shrewdest observers in his own party. Thus editor Leake of the Woodland Democrat tells his readers, after explaining the tactics followed by the Hearst leaders in Indiana and other States, where he was defeated: "All this foreshadows the probability that Mr. Hearst and all those he can induce to follow him will bolt the St. Louis Convention and attempt to organize a third party, the nucleus of which he hopes will be the labor unions. It is now perfectly evident that he will not accept the work of the Convention if it nominates anybody but himself." The Eastern press seems equally positive that a bolt is coming, and that the result will be the placing of a third ticket in the field with Hearst as its nominee.

In the selection of delegates to St. Louis, Hearst desires only men who will follow him, even if they are not pledged, and the current rumor now is that if the opposition to instructions is very positive and better at Santa Cruz, it will be dropped and all efforts will be centered on securing delegates who will leave the hall when Bryan leads the way. It is understood that M. L. Tarpey and Frank H. Gould are to be the two delegates at large from this part of the State, and that Mayor Snyder is to be the Southern delegate. Barney Murphy is spoken of as another delegate-at-large. The antis want Dockweiler from the South and Lane from the North, with Leake and some Northern man, possibly Will Green. It is a notable fact that Tarpey does not propose to put any of the old-time leaders of the party on his ticket. Out of all the delegates from this city, there is not one of any great prominence in the party, or of any special weight in its councils.

The return of Congressman Livernash and his helper, Congressman Wynn, are likely to call for explanations from those gentlemen which they will find it hard to give. Although posing as the champions of labor and the friends of the unions, they both did all they could to defeat Congressman Bell's effort to have a collier built at Mare Island, which means an expenditure of a million and a half at that point.

In fact, Bell only succeeded in having the Senate amendment on the subject retained as Senator Perkins had had it inserted in the Naval Bill, because both of the San Francisco Congressmen were absent when the matter came up. They took out their revenge later, however, when Livernash, by an objection, knocked out the bill to open up the Round Valley Reservation in Mendocino to settlers, and Wynn repeated the performance in connection with a measure to transfer some land in Sierra County from the Yosemite Park to the settlers, who for years have lived upon it. If any one should ask why should two Democratic Congressmen oppose the third from their State in that way, the answer is that Bell refused to indorse Hearst for President, and that Livernash and Wynn, having accomplished absolutely nothing for their constituents, were jealous of the very excellent record Bell had made.

It is to be regretted that Livernash has declined to run for Congress again this fall, since it deprives the people of his district of the pleasure they would have in overwhelmingly defeating him, but Wynn, who has not even had an idea of his own, and who has literally been the subservient tool of Livernash, taking his orders from him and obeying his every wish, it is said will be foolish enough to ask for a renomination. The Democracy, however, will hardly be insane enough to give it to him, and the Union Labor party will hardly be more complacent. A greater nonentity has never gone to Congress from this State, and that is saying a good deal.

Writing of Congressmen from the Fifth District reminds me that a new candidate for the Republican nomination has showed up since Charlie Shortridge has moved to San Francisco in order to secure the votes in this end of the district. The new aspirant is one Rogers, whose principal claim to the nomination is that he lives in San Jose, and came to that thriving town from the same locality in Wisconsin as that from which the Hays brothers hail. The Hayses are his backers, of course. Lou Montgomery is not likely to get the nomination in the district, for the good and efficient reason that he seems unable to get the requisite number of delegates to support him in the Congressional Convention. The fact is, that the Fifth District candidate is very likely to be found among the dark horses at present, as none of those who have been mentioned for the place seem at all likely to secure the nomination.

* * *

Henry T. Oxnard is back from the East and very distinctly announces his candidacy for the Senate. He does not seem to be alarmed by the suggestion of General Otis, of typewriter fame, that the Republicans shall repeat the folly they committed several years ago, when they sent one Walters to Congress from Los Angeles, by sending him now to the Senate; or by the efforts of John W. Mitchell, formerly of the Democratic party, to get up some enthusiasm for Jim Lankersheim; not yet by the suggestion of Dr. Rowell that he would look well in the toga. Oxnard says he is going to do all he can to win, but that he does not propose to make a money campaign, but will ask for the support of his party on the ground that he can do a good deal for the State if he is sent to fill Bard's place. The Senatorial campaign George Hatton says, will begin next week, as soon as the State Convention is over. He will find out how the land lies at the Convention, as he will be able to get a number of pointers there, and he will from that time on give up his lucrative law practice to attend entirely to manufacturing a Senator.

* * *

Every one will remember that Dr. Rowell, who for several years has represented Fresno County in the State Senate, was a very pronounced candidate for a place on the Panama Canal Commission. Recalling that fact, the following paragraph from his Fresno paper, the Republican, is decidedly humorous. It is published in a long editorial under the caption, "Romance or Graft": "The Panama Canal Commission has received a wagonload of applications for positions on the isthmus, the people who thus evinced a desire to receive a Government appointment being numbered, literally, according to President Walker, by the thousands. The fact suggests the query of whether the underlying motive for this inordinate desire to enter the employment of the commission in the work of digging the canal is the prompting of fondness for new location amid unaccustomed surroundings with a chance of adventure; or the more sordid hope that a position under the new Government in a new enterprise may afford opportunities for graft." In view of the Doctor's own record in the premises, and his well-known bitter disappointment and his failure to get the place he so much desired, one is tempted to ask the genial Senator whether his motives in asking Senator Bard to get him the appointment were inspired by "Romance or Graft?"

* * *

It has been finally settled that the delegates to Chicago from the First District will probably be Major Bull of Eureka and ex-Mayor Clinch of Nevada County. Clinch has all the delegates from Nevada, Calaveras and their neighbors, except Amador, which has declared for Voorheis, and Humboldt is for Bull.

SOCIETY

Dear Bessie: "The last expiring efforts for the season" is the way I have heard the doings of the week spoken of, and when one comes to think them over, they have been by no means insignificant either in number or size. The week's gamut has included dinners, teas, luncheons, some weddings, card parties and dances—not a bad string, I think. The hops at the Presidio are almost the only dances now taking place, and the girls from town declare they are perfectly delightful. Both the 10th and the 28th Infantry seem to vie with each other in trying to give the pleasantest, but it is an even thing, most of them say. For my part, I make no choice. The hop given by the 10th last Friday evening was one of the best for some time; so many of the girls are going out of town that they took advantage of what will almost be their last chance, for awhile, and the army itself was well represented. Not a white less pleasant was the hop given by the 28th on Monday night, and last night the Cavalry and Artillery joined forces in a dance, so you see Terpsichorean pleasures are not being neglected. Last week's gastronomic affairs included Mrs. J. J. Valentine's luncheon party of a dozen in the palm garden on Thursday, Mrs. Henry Dutton's dinner of 12 that evening, and Jennie Flood's small dinner on Friday; and among the card party givers were Mrs. Russ Wilson, Grace Baldwin and Lucie King, bridge, of course, being the game played.

This week opened with a bridge party, followed later by a tea, which was the entertainment given by Jennie Blair on Monday afternoon for a Miss Charlotte Land, who is here from the East on a visit to Mrs. George Lent, and was extremely pleasant; Mrs. Tom Bishop also had a bridge party that afternoon. Bridge was also played at Mrs. William Thomas's on Tuesday in her rooms at the St. Francis, and Mrs. Mayo Newhall gave one of the largest luncheons of the spring season. I gave up the afternoon to the tea which Mabel Watkins gave for Captain and Mrs. Baker, who have recently joined the local army circles, Captain Baker being in the Quartermaster's Department. Wednesday was also well filled, for there was the afternoon and evening wedding reception of the Whitmores at Mrs. Waytes on Van Ness avenue; Doctor Genthe had one of his charming little studio teas, and Belle Harmes a lovely luncheon over in Sausalito; Adele Martel had a dinner party on Thursday; Mabel Toy's luncheon party yesterday was for Eleanor Hume and Eleanor Warner, so you see we are by no means to be commiserated.

Then there have been a number of engagements made known in the past ten days. Among them is that of Miss Bessie Mills and Charles Tripler, but the marriage is not to take place yet awhile, and the Sbarboros gave a tea last Friday, when Romilda's engagement to Guido Musto was formally announced. From Manila comes news of Kitty Glass's engagement to Doctor Francis Munson of the navy, but the recent death of her grandmother, Mrs. James Thornton, may cause a change of any plans now made. Long engagements are no longer the fashion, and I think it is a good rule. Certainly Miss Cora Kirk and Paul Clagstone have been up to date, for it is only a couple of weeks ago that society was set in a flutter by the news of their engagement, and last Saturday beheld them made man and wife.

Eleanor Goodall and Doctor Charles Cooper were married on Wednesday at the old Goodall place in Oakland; the bridal party was not a very large one, a matron of honor in the person of Mrs. Shene of Portland, Ore., and little Helen Goodall and Gazentine Greenwood, who officiated as flower girls.

Much speculation was indulged in when it became noised abroad that Harry Tevis was going East and to Europe with the Phelan-Spreckels party, and that, too, just as he had got his old Taylor street home altered and fixed up to his satisfaction. But he didn't go—thought better of it at the last moment, though it is said he may take a trip East ere long. Claude Terry Hamilton has decided to make the Cosmos Club his home for the summer instead of the Hutch at Sausalito.

The new steamer Magnolia took away quite a number last Saturday, among them the Eastern beauty, Natalie Schenck, and the stalwart Britisher, Captain Glenn Collins, who selected Monterey for their rather romantic wedding last month, and who are off on a tour of the world.

Jeannette Hooper is home again from Santa Barbara, quite recovered from her recent illness; Jean Mackenzie is here visiting her brother and his wife. The Willie Vanderbilts have gone back East, having enjoyed their visit to San Francisco; they were a good deal entertained at Burlingame by all the Martins, Jim Phelan and the Tom Magees, who gave them a luncheon at the Palace Palm Garden on Saturday as a sort of adieu, as they left on Sunday. I hear that Sadie Collier is having a good time in the East. She has no idea of an immediate return to San Francisco; she will go with the Hitchcocks, with whom she has been visiting in Washington City, to St. Louis, and remain there a couple of months. The Spencer Buckbees have already gone to St. Louis, and then go abroad for a tour of the European continent.

Ruth McNutt will soon be back from her visit to the Fitzhugh Lees in Virginia, and then she and her mother will go to Santa Barbara for the summer; the Mayo Newhalls will succeed the Peter Martins in the Kruttschnitt cottage at Burlingame, having taken it for the rest of the season when the Martins depart, so you see the loss of one will be the gain of another at that gay little settlement. THE LOOKER-ON

I have high hopes for the Sequoia Club. It should be a success. Upon its roll are many men and women of bright minds, of wide and deep reading, of progressive ideas, and possessing in a high degree that polish of culture which makes for much in such an organization as the Sequoia hopes to become. There is no occasion for calling it a salon, and thereby handicapping the club at the outset by fixing a standard that it may not reach. But there is no good reason why it may not reach any standard, be it never so high, if high ideals guided by trained intelligence be its main purpose. The members should be first given an opportunity to try themselves out, however, before the arrow flights begin. There are many men and women in the club who may be somewhat burdened by modesty—unusual failing in these days of garishness—and who may be reluctant to bring their lights from under their bushels. They should be taken in hand by those who have gained experience in discussing their views before critical audiences. And the Sequoia membership will be critical—but not, I hope, too critical—for that way danger lies. Danger to the peace of the club, I mean, and therefore to its success. It might be a good idea to have semi-monthly gatherings, at which would be read papers on interesting topics, followed by general discussions. The topics could be chosen by a standing committee appointed for the purpose somewhat along the lines followed by the Commonwealth Club, which has standing committees, or “sections,” as they are termed, upon the various municipal, State and economic questions. But at its meetings, the Sequoia must not permit too much dust from the library shelves, for this same dust, laden with the mummified germs of things long ago forgotten, is apt to cover the lighter spirits with the dull grayness of prosiness. A little learning, remember, is a dangerous thing, but too much learning sits heavily upon the mind, and is frequently soporific in its effects.

A judicious intermixture of comedy with tragedy, of opera bouffe with opera grand, of a light and sparkling airiness with the heavy rumblings of the manipulators of the problems of civilization, an admiration for the outer and an appeal to the inner man—a feast of reason and a flow of soul—and there you are.

They were from the country, or they might have drifted out from the Alcazar without changing their costumes. They stood hand in hand before the music stand, and with mouths agape listened to the band. His eyes were centered on the player of the big trombone. He nudged the partner of his surprise and of his pleasures.

“Matilda,” he gasped, “just look at that feller in the back row on the right. Now, watch him! Watch him! By Gosh, did yer see him? Why, he jist natcherly jammed that long tin tube down his throat, and then pulled it out again. There, he’s done it again. Well, if that don’t jist natcherly beat ennything all holler.”

A new Colonel dropped in at the Presidio last week. Now, Colonels are some pumpkins. This one knew his rights. He knew that no junior officer has a right to a better house than he could get. So the Colonel looked around for “quarters.” He liked the home of a certain Major; so he ordered the Major to vacate. Now, the Major will bounce some Captain from his own fireside; the Captain will fire a First Lieutenant; the First Lieutenant will evict a Second Lieutenant, and the poor, suffering Second Lieutenant will go up to the club and drown his anger in a high-ball. Yet the W. C. T. U. wants to know why army men drink! Between you and me, a great deal of this soldiering business is more like “playing house” than anything else.

Private Vermuelen, Tenth U. S. Infantry, is undergoing confinement at hard labor at the Presidio because he used disrespectful language to his superior officer, Captain James V. Heldt. The private was on guard when the Paymaster came around in April, and Vermuelen failed to connect. The Paymaster gave his money to Captain Heldt, and of course it was the Captain’s duty to turn it over to the soldier. But Heldt assumed the responsibility of settling the private’s account with the post exchange. When the private found this out he indignantly stated that the Captain had no right to turn over his pay. The private’s statement was correct, both in law and in equity, but because he expressed it, is now a prisoner. In reviewing the courtmartial proceedings, the commanding General upholds the soldier’s view of the case, and says “the pay of a soldier received from a Paymaster by a company commander is solely for the purpose of delivery to the soldier.” The Captain had no authority to pay the soldier’s debts. It appears that the Captain “heldt” the soldier’s money too fast and was false to his trust. Will the Captain be punished?

The last of the Cogswell fountains has been dismantled and piled in the junk heap. Vandals have torn down Dr. Cogswell’s leaden representation of B. Franklin, and a wondering public will see it no more. This is the first step in the movement for the “city beautiful.”

hours a day to finish their measly old census as long as there is money in the funds to pay for their services? Last year the Census Marshal reported 91,000 children of school age in San Francisco. The School Department received from the State $9 for each child reported. This year only a trifle over 71,000 have been reported. Well, we are suffering from "race suicide." The School Directors should know that, and not blame the hard-working Census Marshal and his army of assistants. They did good work at the primary.

Postmasters have received notices from Washington, stating that hereafter preference will be shown clerks who are married, and especially those with large families. Another step in the same direction has been taken by the Board of Education of New York City, which has repealed the rule providing that teachers who marry shall be dismissed. The local Board of Education has a similar rule. The Board should follow the New York precedent, and repeal the rule. Give the teachers a chance. Let them marry if they will, and give choice position to those with the largest families. That deficiency of 20,000 children in the school census must be made up some way.

Recorder Godchaux has asked for an increase of $2,500 in the appropriation for his department for the next fiscal year. It should not be allowed. The way to save that amount is to decrease the rate of pay for copyists from eight cents to five cents a folio. Under the charter, they cannot make more than $100 a month. If an able-bodied man, using a typewriter, cannot make $100 a month, working eight hours a day, and being paid at the rate of five cents for every hundred words he copies, he is not fit for the place.

The Board of Lady Managers of the St. Louis Fair has my sympathy. It has decided to collect and exhibit the pictures of 400 prominent women of the United States. The pictures must be of "bona fide prominent women," and the extent of the prominence of the candidates for fame must be passed on by a secret committee. Now, ladies, here is your opportunity. Make your nominations at once of candidates from this city. Certainly, San Francisco will be represented among this new 400. Who are our prominent women? "Bona fide prominent," you know, whatever that may mean. Does it mean prominence in church work, in clubdom, in literature, art, science or the learned professions? Does it mean prominent merely by reason of wealth, good looks, good clothes, and good social position? Does it mean prominent by reason of aiding in great educational or economic movements? Does it mean prominent at this time only, or must the candidate have been prominent for a certain period? Some, you know, have prominence thrust upon them. Now, here is a chance for the Sequoia Club. Let it look around, and suggest names for consideration. And this nut is for the Sequoias to crack. Other things being equal, and the choice to be from two, would they choose a handsome woman in preference to one with small claims to physical beauty, or otherwise, and why? Especially, why?

When Devlin and Depue, both red-headed, were Prison Directors, an old Swede known as Charley, who had been in San Quentin twenty years or more, came up for parole. While his application was under consideration by the Directors, a newspaperman asked Charley what he thought of his chances.

"Oh, I don't think they let me out," said Charley. "You see, I am afraid of those two red-headed men. You know, in my country there is a saying: 'Red moss grows on cold trees; red moss grows on rotten stumps.' I am afraid that red moss up there at the Directors' office grows on cold trees."

Sure enough, Devlin and Depue voted against the old convict's application for parole, and for all I know to the contrary, old Charley is yet in San Quentin figuring out what his chances for parole might have been in the absence of the red-headed Directors.

Mrs. Bessie Blitz Paxton ever had an eye for dramatic effect. She enjoyed her propensity to the utmost last week when she encountered a burglar in her house, and talked him into not only giving back some of her goods, which he had stowed away in his pockets, but forced him, under the tongue lashing she administered, into an ignominious retreat. Mrs. Paxton was engaged with her toilet when the burglar entered her dressing room. She was putting up her back hair. He was fascinated. Like most men, he knew nothing of the mysteries of the art of putting up the female back hair, and he stood and gazed and wondered. Before he could recover his composure, Mrs. Paxton turned and discovered him.

"Sir," she exploded, with indignant expostulation. He shivered. Then she knew she had him, and she unloaded upon him a dictionary of words expressive of what she thought of him. He side-stepped, but Mrs. Paxton followed up her advantage and talked some more. He quivered and capitulated. She made him unload his collections, and promise to be good. Then she shook him by the hand, gave him a few yards of kindly advice, and sent him on his way, crushed and repentant. And Mrs. Paxton is by no means a woman from whom the ordinary man would run away. But then a burglar, you know, is not an ordinary man. Besides she took the fellow at a disadvantage, and would not let him get in a word edgewise. To be up to date these days, no woman should be afraid to talk when the occasion demands continuous conversation.

* * *

Another of those unfortunate Clarke boys has directed attention to the fact that, after all, there is something in the world beside riches. Harold T. Clarke, of this city, has committed suicide in Paris, after a turn at the Monte Carlo tables. No good reason for his action is known. It is said he may have lost heavily at the tables, but it is hardly possible that his losses could have been so great as to cause him serious embarrassment. His family is very wealthy, and his mother, who is the widow of Jeremiah Clarke, who left a large fortune, is said to be in Paris with her daughter, Mrs. Charlotte Wright. Another son, Edward H. Clarke, recently gained unenviable notoriety by marrying the woman who, during the trial of Durrant, was known as the Sweet Pea girl. He contracted the marriage while in a condition of mental aberration, and his lawyers succeeded in having it annulled. Since then, I believe, the lawyers have sued Clarke for their fees. Herbert and Edward Clarke both believed in having what is called by some people "a good time." Their pleasures have caused them heavy penalties.

PLEASURE'S WAND

A TRUSTY TIP ON THINGS THEATRICAL.

ORPHEUM—Madam Slapoffski—Don't let the name scare you—the show is good.

COLUMBIA—"Rogers Brothers In London"—Extravaganza. Funny and highly enjoyable.

TIVOLI—A Runaway Girl—Splendid work by the chorus and a magnificent scenic success.

ALCAZAR—The Two Schools—A very even easy performance of a clever funny play.

GRAND—Melbourne MacDowell—Cleopatra—A clean, conscientious performance.

CENTRAL—"The Three Musketeers"—Good.

CHUTES—Barr and Evans and Flo Adler. Esmeralda has a baby in the Zoo. Esmeralda is a monkey.

Clean fun is the card at the Orpheum this week, with an interregnum of delightful singing by the prima donna, Mme. Slapoffski, who joys lovers of music into the realms of ecstasy. As a matter of fact, she is not the most "wonderful singer in the world," but she is a singer worth going miles to hear. She is easily head and shoulders ahead of the average lot of sopranos coming our way. One of our local newspapers praised her to the skies, while another has said "her voice is as hard as nails." The last statement is a lie, pure and simple. Her voice is very sweet and sympathetic, and she vocalizes with a surety that is possessed by few. In "Scenes that are Brightest," she showed a capacity in interpretation that would have gladdened the cockles of the composer's heart. Her voice reached the farthest corners of the auditorium in sweet intensity, and in Tosti's "Good-bye" she carried the house by storm.

It is a far cry from performing dogs to the "Canary of Coloratura," but every dog must have his day, and Ballerini's dogs certainly have theirs. They show an intelligence under training that is equal to that of the human. The Gasch Sisters are a great duo in feminine grace and strength. This is a case when extreme athletic has not coarsened two very pretty and clever girls. The only poor number on the Orpheum bill is the team called "Midgley and Carlisle." The sketch is entitled "Taking a Tonic," and the audience needs one to brace up after listening to the inane drivel.

* * *

"Two Schools," at the Alcazar, is put before the public in a most agreeable manner. It is the story of an epidemic of divorces in Paris, and there is an element of fun running throughout the play. The Alcazar management has displayed an unusual finesse in stage arrangement and the ladies and gentlemen taking part are pleasantly natural. The scene at the "Restaurant Prunier" is a good one, and the reconciliation of the divorced couple, Monsieur and Madame Maubrun is accomplished by easy stages, and the climax is funny, and withal, natural.

Adele Block was charming in the character of Madame Maubrun, and Frances Starr was a delightful piquante and pretty Estelle.

The "Le Hantois" of Mr. Luke Conness was a finished performance, and it delighted the very large audiences all the week. The rigid, stern character of the pompous, self-centered counsellor was given in a way that left little to be desired.

* * *

"A Runaway Girl" is running at the Tivoli. Ferris Hartman has a clever conception of the part of the jockey, "Flipper," and George Chapman's "Guy Stanley" is above the average. The "Winifred Gray" of Dora de Fillipe is a part played with lamentable limitations. Nettie Deglow does Dorothy Stanley indifferently well, while Aimee Leicester is positively good as Mrs. Creel.

The ensemble and chorus work, the scenic and lighting arrangements, are perfect, and must certainly make us forget all the shortcomings of alleged stars. Some day the Old Ladies' Home and the Fat Woman's Retreat will be enriched by the arrival of a few entertaining bits of ancient and adipose tissue from the Eddy-street house, and then we may see something new and beautiful, outside of the chorus and scenery. Ferris Hartman will be retired on a pension that will enable him to live in a small room and keep a French mirror in constant commission as his best audience, no reflection on himself, but of himself, where the critics may not roast.

Gus and Max Rogers are still delighting large audiences at the Columbia.

* * *

Melbourne MacDowell and Ethel Fuller are drawing fair houses at the Grand.

* * *

Ernest Hastings is in town, and he is silently suffering the martyrdom of playing in a hoo-dooed house.

* * *

At the Central, "The Three Musketeers" are drawing big crowds. The Dumas play is always sure of large audiences, and the players at the Central are not a disappointing lot.

* * *

Maud Adams is heading this way, and she brings a double company for the production of "The Pretty Sister of Jose."

* * *

Francis McGinn, a San Franciscan, is a member of the Sieur Mansfield's company. McGinn is a protege of the distinguished gentleman who portrays "Ivan the Terrible," and has enacted parts in support of the star that he helped create with Mansfield.

* * *

Mansfield brings a company of 106 artists with him; his music is written and his scenery is designed for him specially, and the merest detail has been conscientiously carried out as to its historical significance.

* * *

"Colinette," adapted from the French by Henry Guy Carleton for Julia Marlowe, finds its way to the Alcazar next week. It is an entirely new play. It is clever in construction and exceedingly smooth in dialogue. Colinette is a character that somewhat resembles "Madame Sans Gene," and it will tax the great versatility of that brilliant young woman, Adele Block.

* * *

R. E. Johnston has decided upon an innovation for Ysaye's tour next season. He will engage a brilliant expert musical litterateur to travel one week in advance of the Ysaye engagements to give an explanatory reading on Ysaye's programme. The reading or lecture will take place at 11 o'clock in the morning, and the admission to the same will be by invitation only. The lecturer will aim to explain how the various compositions should be played, and how they were played by such masters as Vieuxtemps, Wieniawski, Wilhelmj, and Joachim, and also Ysaye's interpretation of them.

The new play, starting next Monday evening, at the Central, is to be "Down by the Sea." The play is on the order of "Hearts of Oak" and "Shore Acres."

Jean Marcel, with his living pictures, will be the drawing card at the Orpheum for the coming week, and it is safe to say that nothing nearly as good as this has ever before been seen in San Francisco. There are to be a lot of additional attractions, and this is promised a week that will rival the attractions of the "road show" week, early in the season.

Sardou's "Empress Theodora" will be given at the Grand the coming week, and it is said Mr. MacDowell's company excels in this, the most elaborate of all the Sardou plays. For the Sunday matinee of May 22d, "Fedora" will be given.

A Pneumatic Symphony Orchestra, built especially for the Chutes, will be the star feature of the programme at this popular resort this coming week. This wonderful instrument, which cost $15,000, represents an orchestra of one hundred and forty eight musicians, and plays compositions ranging from the ultra-classical to the latest popular ditty. The volume of sound which it emits is something stupendous.

Because the News Letter goes to press earlier I am forced to defer an account of Dr. H. J. Stewart's concert at Steinway Hall on Thursday evening until next week.

On Friday evening occurred the Commencement Exercises of the California School of Design at the Mark Hopkins Institute of Art. I will give an extended review of the exhibition and proceedings in next week's News Letter.

The Tivoli management announces that because of its popularity, "A Runaway Girl" will be continued for all of next week.

The firm of Studebaker Bros. Co., of California, has kept pace with the growth of the city, and to-day the establishment at Tenth and Market contains a display of vehicles of which New York might well be proud. The variety extends from the lordly Victoria to the chic Trap, and when this is said, it means a variety of five hundred styles, always on display. It is the Mecca of those that understand the correct in rigs and the durable in make. The Studebaker Bros. Co. are dealers in Carriages, Harness, Robes, Blankets, and Whips; and in connection with the large exhibition and salesroom, it operates a complete repair shop in a separate building on Tenth street.

SPEND YOUR VACATION AT DEL MONTE.

A great many San Francisco people are planning to spend the entire summer at Hotel del Monte. No other resort in California offers such a combination of attractions—sea-bathing, golf links, automobiling, bowling, tennis, and all out-of-door sports. Instead of going from place to place seeking comforts, the wise ones of society are planning already to put in several enjoyable weeks down at Del Monte.

Alfred McKinnon, litterateur and general all-round good fellow, has accepted the position of advertising manager for A. P. Hotaling & Co., of San Francisco. His many friends throughout the country will look forward to some clever work in the interests of this enterprising firm.

Japan's Strategy Understood.

For nearly three months, military men everywhere have tried to fathom the mysteries of Japan's plan for the campaign in Manchuria, but so closely has it been kept secret that only in a general way has it been known. The victory at the Yalu and the investment of Port Arthur by landing an army in the rear on Liao-tung peninsula, together with the blocking of the channel of the Port Arthur Bay, and the shutting in of the Russian squadron, have made it quite clear that the war office has been operating in the field on plans that are not only clearly defined to reach objective points, but which include the most intricate yet comprehensive and far-reaching strategical centers of operation. As yet, not a cog has slipped nor a wheel wobbled in the mighty and complex machinery of the war establishment. And what is more, it is now understood what Japan meant when it was announced at the very outset that "the war may last four or five or six years, but anticipating such an eventuality, the nation is fully prepared for it, and long before the end Japan will be on the defensive." At the time this was supposed to mean that Japan expected to be driven pretty close to the wall, but that after resisting Russian pressure as long as possible, Great Britain and the United States would step in and participate in the struggle, but it transpires that Japan meant nothing of the kind, though was quite willing that such interpretation should be given to it.

What Japan Really Meant.

In the light of recent news concerning Japan's plans that was permitted to pass the news censor, it becomes clear enough what was meant by "defensive." Japan now commands the entire water front of Korea and Manchuria, thus preventing even the possibility of the Russians receiving supplies or reinforcements by any water route. This will oblige Russia to depend upon a single track railway of uncertain construction to fetch supplies and reinforcements a distance of about 3,000 miles. It is admitted that Manchuria is unable to furnish food supplies to meet more than a small fraction of the demand. All who are familiar with the capacity of a new railway to handle traffic know very well that it would not have many facilities left to transport soldiers after supplying the demand for army supplies for 300,000 men 3,000 miles distant.

Rashness of the Thibetans.

Thibet has committed the expected fatal blunder. A little army of her insanely fanatical soldiers attempted early this week to not only drive out the British, but to teach them a lesson on invasion they would never forget. It so happened, however, that when the battle was over the British were right there, and the native soldiers who had not been killed or wounded were running in the other direction as fast as ever their legs could carry them. The consequence of this foolishness will be that either the Suzerainty of King Edward of England will be accepted as the solution of the Thibetan problem, or that country will be placed under the jurisdiction of the British viceroy of India. It may and doubtless will take a little time to reach the desired end, but the days of Llama rule, with all the backward and unprogressive theories of Government which he entertains, are drawing very rapidly to a close, when a civilization that is imbued with the spirit of progress, education, commerce and industry will be seen and felt all over the land of the ancient Aryans and the cradle of human-kind. Thibet for ages has been the headquarters of Mahatmas, "Great Souls," the "wise ones of earth," and other religionists who, like the lily, toil not, neither do they spin, but whose followers, even here in San Francisco, believe that when compared to Solomon in the item of clean-cut wisdom, that wise old Hebrew King is not in it at all. Anyway, the Thibetans have inadvertently rushed their country out of the dim past and its stale and unprofitable superstitions into the arms of modern thought and modern ways of doing things. The next generation of Thibetans will thank their forefathers for being rash enough to turn their guns against Anglo-Saxon push, energy and progress.

The Yellow Dowager Empress.

The Dowager Empress of China continues to throw dust into the eyes of the Czar, and she also continues to keep an approving eye upon the haste her Generals are making in putting their soldiers in good shape for active service, and her usual hard and cruel facial expression is yielding smiles for the successes of Japan in thrashing the nation that stole one of the best divisions of her empire. It is an off day when she does not re-assure Russia that her nation is absolutely neutral in the matter of the Slav-brown man war, and it is very much of an off day when she fails to urge her war minister to run the gun factories and powder mills on an overtime schedule of labor hours. It is no longer a question of: "Is the Dowager going to break loose, but when is she going to break loose?"

Peace and Friendship Again.

The Republic of Colombia and the Republic of the United States have buried the Panama hatchet and diplomatic relations have been resumed, but the little Central American nation does not hesitate to say that the reason there is peace instead of war is because the United States has too many men, guns and warships for Colombia to tackle with any hope of even one little victory. For that reason our commerce and trade and cash for investments are cordially invited to enter all the ports and cities and towns of our sister republic.

Troubles all Around.

Every European nation and the United States continue to have trouble with some of their outlying conquests, but nothing like a real war is reported from any quarter. The German settlements in South Africa are having a perilous existence because of the hostility of the natives, who are mostly little better than savages, but savages though they be, they seem to be able to understand that they are, or claim they are, not only being cheated right along in their trade interchange with the German population, but they are gradually being driven back into the forests and jungles, and getting nothing for the land they are forced to abandon. They will be better acquainted, or, rather, their grandchildren will be better acquainted, with the modern way of "beneficently assimilating" as the spirit of trade and traffic marches on. Our Filipino subjects, under the Christian methods of General Wood, are glad they are alive, and they are believing more firmly than ever in miracles.

Women's Club Notes

Much of the best work that is being done in women's organizations in this city seldom comes within range of the lime-light. Notable among the organizations that scarcely let their right hands know what their left ones are doing is the Women's Auxiliary to the Library and Reading Room for the Blind that is comfortably snuggled away in the basement of the Branch Public Library at the corner of Fourth and Clara street, the building given to the city by ex-Mayor James D. Phelan. It is now about a year and a half ago since Mrs. Josephine de Greayer, assisted by a few friends, brought the trustees of the Free Public Library around to her way of thinking—that there should be a reading room for the unfortunate blind of the city, particularly for the younger men and women who found their lives so barren when they have to go out into the world after they are graduated from the State Institution for the Deaf and Blind at Berkeley—the paradise for afflicted children. Affliction in her own family turned Mrs. de Greayer's thoughts in this direction, and she never rested until she saw the fulfillment of her plan. While in the East, she visited all the libraries for the blind, particularly the one in the Congressional Library Building in Washington, D. C., and when she presented the cause to the local men in power, she was fortified with the best of data. But all that would have meant nothing if the Woman's Auxiliary were not ready to take up the responsibility of administration and about all the financial burden. How well these women have succeeded is attested by the fact that the library has been carried on successfully, and how the work is to be enlarged. At a meeting held a few days ago, the women placed upon themselves the added responsibility of conducting a State circulating library. They expect to start books in the point and other systems used by the blind, on their way to different parts of the State immediately after the lull of the summer. There will have to be some increase in the income of the auxiliary to carry on this work, but no one doubts, in the light of past accomplishments, the success of the proposed venture. Life is going to be brighter for some of the helpless blind in remote parts of the State when the next long winter days come.

* * *

Men, for the most part, are agreeable about their wives belonging to clubs, but just now several of them, mad as disturbed hornets, are declaring vehemently that woman's place is at home. They are the husbands of the women who constituted the board of directors of the Pacific Coast Women's Press Association, and who had the temerity to dismiss Mrs. Marion Beattie Foster from their ranks, claiming that she had advocated her own election as a member of the executive committee of the International League of Press Clubs to which she went as delegate, and Mrs. M. H. Cartwright because she wrote a complimentary letter about Mrs. Foster to a member of the nominating committee. Of this action these complacent husbands find themselves defendants, with their wives, in two suits filed respectively by Mrs. Foster and Mrs. Cartwright, each lady asking for damages to the amount of $100,000. The executive committee argued, but as it now appears not sagaciously, that if it dismissed Mrs. Foster from the Association she would no longer be a member of the important international body. Forthwith official documents were sent East stating that Mrs. Foster no longer represented them. Beyond acknowledgment, no notice was taken of the trouble in the far West; the international executive committee taking the position that Mrs. Foster was elected for a year, and would retain her position on the board regardless of the Pacific Coast Association.

Just after her suit was filed here, Mrs. Foster went East to attend the April meeting of the committee held in New York. She was most cordially received; no action was taken in regard to the contention, the question receiving only informal consideration. Mrs. Foster was shown all the correspondence between the Pacific Coast Press Association and the executive committee.

Mrs. Foster was chosen one of the delegates from the international Press League to the convention of press people at St. Louis, and is at present in the Exposition city on that mission.

THE SUPREME BENCH OF HAWAII.

The appointments by the President of Supreme and Circuit Justices in the territory of Hawaii still hang in the balance. It seems that a rather strong element is pulling for the appointment of natives or old residents, the relicts of the Hawaiian dynasty and their white friends. A long time ago a mistake was made when the President, Mr. McKinley, re-appointed Dole to office, and now the strenuous Roosevelt is inclined to err the other way. This question is exciting great interest not only in the land of the lantana, but all over the United States among the students of our colonial policy.

Governor Carter will leave the Islands on the 21st of this month to forward the interest of his political party by personal suasion with the President.

This is one of the gravest questions that has ever been faced by the administration, and we sincerely hope, for the benefit of Hawaii and the American residents thereof, that the President will weigh the matter well before making his appointments. Governor George R. Carter has shown himself an uncompromising and bitter enemy of the Dole administration, and while we contend that the second appointment of Mr. Dole was a mistake, we again assert that the President may easily err in the other direction.

Governor Carter has lost no opportunity to criticize the Dole administration, and has given love potions to the natives and to the Home Rulers generally. He absolutely governed both branches of the Legislature, which recently adjourned. It is understood that he is to name all the judges. He thus becomes the autocrat of the islands. He was born in Hawaii, and has repeatedly alluded to that fact and announced his co-operation with the natives and with the old residents.

It seems that Americans from the mainland have no business in the Hawaiian Islands, unless they are prepared to renounce the ideas in which they have been educated, to accept a rule that has been perpetuated for generations, and to submit to the absolute dominance of a class that revels in isolation and selfish accumulation. There are men there who understand American institutions, but they are either barred out or driven away, or they are compelled virtually to sacrifice their nationality. The local administration rows steadily towards absolutism, and vociferous complaints, which are constantly in the air, rarely or ever reach Washington.

Lawyers who have been long in practice in the territory, and whose endorsement for the Supreme Bench by Governor Carter is expected, will supply an unprecedented illustration of litigants appointing their own attorneys to the seat of final judgment.

The situation in Hawaii is unique. Business is dull in the extreme. Many Americans are leaving, and few are replacing them. The Japanese and Chinese form two-thirds of the population, and they are in the banks, the business houses, and the retail stores as well as in mechanical and menial employment. "Hard times" is the general cry, and there seems no prospect of relief through Americanization, unless the Washington administration should determine to investigate facts and act independently of local influences or special representatives and self-seekers at the National Capital.

—One goes naturally to Swain's on Sutter street for a good luncheon. There is nothing in town that can compare with this place as a place of rest and refreshment after the toils of shopping. They are always ready to deliver ice-cream and pastry—always the best, and their promptness can be depended upon.

BY THE AUTOCRAT

The Race Committee of the Automobile Club of California is a little slow in getting out its programme for the meet which takes place on June 3d and 4th. The committee should remember that the public wants to know all about what is going to happen, and it cannot give too much publicity to the event.

But, just the same, almost all the space is spoken for in the show section, and that part of the event will undoubtedly be a great success.

One of the most interesting events which has been programmed at the suggestion of the News Letter will be the contest between cars built in California.

The Commercial Motor Car and Boat Company has a car ready, as also has F. D. Spaulding. There will also be California-built cars entered from Los Angeles.

To enable one to quickly find an automobile's speed in miles per hour from the time per mile, the American Darracq Automobile Company has prepared a clever table which is distributed gratis. The well-arranged card is the work of E. D. Winans, the company's advertising manager, who has copyrighted it. It consists of columns of times and miles, and by following right-angle columns to the intersection, the equivalent in miles per hour is found. Copies can be had for the asking.

Mr. John Breuner enjoyed himself and entertained a party of friends on Sunday by riding through the Park and Presidio in his new 1904 Winton touring car.

Mr. Horace Morgan recently purchased a two-cylinder Arrow. Mr. Morgan made a careful examination of the automobile field and decided in favor of the Arrow on account of its speed, weight and hill-climbing power.

Among the sales made of White touring cars last week are cars to the Letcher Automobile Co., of San Jose; Winfield S. Davis, of the insurance firm of J. B. F. Davis & Son, San Francisco; A. W. Clark, of Fresno.

Last Sunday, Mr. Max Schwabacher and party went to San Jose in a Winton touring car, and returned by way of Burlingame. They report having had a very enjoyable trip.

Charles A. Madill, a St. Louis capitalist, who is spending a vacation in California, has just purchased a White car for touring the State; he is making his headquarters at San Francisco, and expects to go on some long trips shortly.

Mr. L. G. Rowell, of this city, last week purchased another 1904 Winton touring car from the Pioneer Automobile Company, which makes the third machine of this type purchased by Mr. Rowell this season from the Pioneer people.

Mr. J. A. Marsh, president of the Mobile Carriage Company, accompanied by his wife and a party of friends, made a trip to Woodland Saturday, returning Tuesday. They had a very enjoyable outing, without delay or incident.

Mr. E. W. Hopkins, who has been using his electric tonneau for eighteen months, drove it to Menlo from San Francisco last week without a hitch, which proves it to be in splendid condition.

F. W. Wiggins, a White dealer at Salem, Oregon, sent a carload to John B. Kelly, of Portland, Oregon. This makes two carloads now en route to Mr. Kelly, who is doing a rushing business in this popular car at Portland.

The record time between San Jose and Oakland was made yesterday by Colonel H. T. Lally in his new Winton touring car. The time made was 1:18. Previous record was 1:29, and was also held by a Winton Touring Car.

Mr. A. W. Wilson in his White touring car, and Mr. John H. Spring in his White car, ran down to San Jose last Saturday afternoon and toured around San Jose Sunday.

The Pioneer Automobile Company is very much elated over the fact that their sample of the Oldsmobile light tonneau touring car was shipped from the factory by express, and is due to arrive in San Francisco. They have already secured a large number of orders for these machines, and prospective buyers are anxiously awaiting the arrival of the sample machine.

Mr. Meade, proprietor of the Byron Hot Springs, accompanied by his manager, Mr. Warren, made a trip in the Pierce Arrow to Byron Hot Springs on Saturday, returning Sunday. This trip was really one of inspection, as the hotel management desires to establish an automobile route for San Francisco automobilists. The distance is seventy-five miles from Oakland by way of Livermore; the roads are level, the scenery interesting, and the hotel service at the Springs is the best. This new route will provide additional facilities for enthusiastic automobilists.

Mr. Gardiner of the White Sewing Machine Company was in San Jose last Saturday, and Los Gatos on Sunday.

The following letter has been received by the Locomobile Company of America:

"Mr. J. A. Kingman, Locomobile Company of America, Bridgeport, Conn.—In response to your inquiry as to the mileage of my car up to date, I would state that, after a careful estimate based upon a record I keep of my daily runs, that my car has made, since the 22d of January, 1903, 13,950 miles; that out of the 434 days, the car has run every single day with

The Letcher Automobile Company of San Jose has taken the agency for the White touring car in Santa Clara County, and this will be the only touring car the company will handle. He knows its possibilities, and knows there are a great many to be sold there.

There is a merry row at Los Angeles. The two clubs in that section cannot agree. The Automobile Club of Southern California and the Los Angeles Automobile Club are at outs. The latter club is said to be a trade organization, and the auto-owners, who are members of the other club, think they should keep out of the "meet" business except to take part in the races.

The outcome of the trouble so far is that Frank A. Garbutt, one of the most enthusiastic racing men in the South, and a member of the Race Committee of the Automobile Club of Southern California, has resigned.

It is reported from the South that some of the members of the L. A. A. C. claim that the A. C. S. C. is trying to reap all the revenue there is in automobiling in Southern California, while the Automobile Club of Southern California asserts it is making nothing out of it, except the indirect benefit accruing from improving the roads in this section. To this, some of the L. A. C. say the improvements heralded in the papers at great length, notably on the Del Rey and Long Beach roads, have not materialized. The larger organization says that rights of way troubles on the Del Rey road have prevented the starting of work thereon, and also points to some of the country roads, which it has been instrumental in having repaired.

The outcome of all the trouble in the South is that the dealers have been circulating an agreement to stay out of any automobile race meeting, which the Automobile Club of Southern California may endeavor to pull off.

This looks like the South cannot stand success, for when the different schemes were started it gave the sport a great boom.

Let the trouble in the South be a warning to the local men and everybody work hand in hand for San Francisco.

The Pioneer Automobile Company has received a letter from the Winton Motor Carriage Company giving an interview with Barney Oldfield by a representative of one of the New York papers, which is as follows, viz.:

"I long ago declared that it is my ambition to compete in the Gordon-Bennett Cup race, which will be run in Germany during the coming June. This is the world's great automobile derby, and in this big international event all the real famous drivers are pitted against each other. When Mr. Winton decided not to enter a car in the cup race this year, I was keenly disappointed, because I felt that the Winton Bullet and I would make a winning combination, and since I was under contract to Mr. Winton, I could not hope to compete except on a Winton car. Consequently, when I was released from my contract with Mr. Winton, a few days ago, I immediately set about to look over the Gordon-Bennett cars that were being manufactured in this country, and took under advisement the various contracts which have been offered me by their makers. While I was considering several real flattering propositions, I learned that, through a fortunate circumstance, the Winton Bullet would after all be entered as an American competitor in the international race provided the committee of the Automobile Club of America would accept it. I have spent a good deal of time in the saddle of the Winton Bullet the past summer, and thoroughly appreciate the possibilities of the car. Believing that the Automobile Club of America's committee would not disregard this proffered entry of the Bullet, I returned to Cleveland, and solicited the privilege of driving this car. The result is my reinstatement with the Winton Motor Carriage Company as driver of Bullet No. 2. I am thoroughly happy as a result, and expect to make a great showing if permitted to drive in the Gordon-Bennett race. I expect to make this good showing, not alone because I have confidence in my own ability, but because I appreciate that this Winton car is the fastest, safest and most perfectly constructed racing car on earth."

INSURANCE

The Pacific Board of Fire Underwriters has up to the present writing dominated on the Coast. There has been many an underwriter that would have been pleased to buck the Board. A sort of Sancho Panza windmill affair on their part, and the bravest heart of the boldest broker quailed at the thought of a fight.

There was and is the non-intercourse rule, and that in itself is enough to deter the bold broker.

Another Richmond has, however, come into the field, and that Richmond is the organization of two firms.

The conditions just now are peculiar and so are the firms in question; each one boasts of a General Agency. One of a fire insurance company and the other of a plate-glass company.

These two firms are bidding for business and are getting rates or no rates, and the fact of their existence is more than a menace to the Stillman peace of the Pacific Board of Fire Underwriters.

* * *

The P. M. Nippert Company and the Boole-Sloane Company are simply the coalescence of a lot of brokers, and inferentially it is safe to say these brokers carry their own business in their own pockets. These firms have the ability to place their business where they please, and herein lies the menace to the Stillmanesque pact of peace.

There is at the present time an unlimited carrying capacity amongst the non-boarders, and the recent acquisition by Stovel of the Girard simply serves to make the outsiders stronger.

The regulars view with alarm the concentration of power, and the brokers are now, alas, in a position to dictate.

Boole, Nippert, Potter, Wellington, Sloane and one or two others outside are not alone ready, but anxious, to dictate.

It is to be hoped that the recent moves in this line or two others outside are not only ready, but anpresage a rate war, but the weather prophet says there is a "high low" in this section, and it is predicted that there will be a warm spell.

The non-boarders disclaim any idea of this sort; they don't want, and can't afford, a rate war, but they say in the same breath that they are ready for it if it comes.

No specific charge can be or is brought against Mr. Stillman, except that he is the tool of the big four.

No one knows who the big four is, but it is an open secret on the street that the pact between the non-boarders is in effect, and the result if they take the initiative is, as aforesaid, a hot time.

These brokerage firms, combinations, coupled with able underwriters like Turner of the Northwestern, Bromwell of the Milwaukee Mechanics, Ward of the German, to say nothing of the Stovels, Potters and Germania agencies, are factors in the war or in the continuance of peace.

Outside of those mentioned, the anti-Stillman faction can count on the support of the Continental and the Home of New York. The Traders will fall in line, and the McNear agency may be trusted to follow suit.

If these premises be correct, there is a "high low" and it is due in this burgh now.

The fight, if it comes, will be a fight to a finish, and it is safe to say that all the profits of coast underwriting will go down the line and carry with them the scalps of Stillman, et al., as well as the position of a manager or two.

Whilst California has uniformly shown a profit in fire insurance circles, and at the same time not too big a profit, it is regrettable that the compact is dominated by an incompetent, and that the regulars are handicapped by his actions, and that the non-boarders are alive to their opportunity and taking advantage of it.

The rate war is coming, or there is going to be a change in the management of the P. I. U.

In the voice of the people is heard the murmurs of discontent and the cry for a Du Val again, if nothing worse can be found.

The citizens of St. Louis, not content with the fair, are now busy organizing a new fire insurance company. The proposed capital of the company is half a million, and the incorporators, who are prominent business and professional men of St. Louis, are as follows: R. N. LeCron, James D. Morris, Thomas C. Hennings, Dwight D. Currie, Paul P. Prosser, Glendy B. Arnold, B. C. Anderson, F. A. Chopin, William R. J. Scullin, Edward P. Fitzwilliam, W. C. Connert, A. Staed.

The Iowa Supreme Court recently decided that if Mrs. Elizabeth C. A PERFECTED PIPE-ORGAN.

In this issue of the News Letter we are permitted to show, through the courtesy of Kohler & Chase, a picture of the Aeolian Pipe-Organ recently installed in their warerooms, corner Post and Kearny streets. This is the first and by all odds the finest organ of its kind in the West. It is as truly a work of art as is the brush and color production of the great masters.

This organ is, in reality, two complete instruments combined into one grand organ, equally well adapted for the interpretation of organ, orchestral, concerted, or other music, by a person unskilled in the use of the keyboards, or by the expert organist. It is the pipe-organ par excellence of the present time—an exclusive type of instrument embodying tonal and mechanical features contained in no other organ.

This type of organ is designed primarily for salons, music-rooms, foyer and reception halls of the modern palace, the more modest city residence, or the country home, where they have assumed such importance as to make them necessities in every household in which music in its highest form of interpretation is appreciated and desired. In size they range from small instruments of more or less limited variety in tone-color, to large instruments of infinite variety, possessing wealth of organ, orchestral and other tones on which can be rendered in artistic and absolutely correct manner the most elaborate musical compositions. These instruments can be expressively and easily played by any one with the aid of perforated music rolls, which carefully select and sound the proper notes, thereby permitting the performer to devote all his attention to the tempo, tone-color, and expression. They can also be played from the keyboards in the usual manner, being provided with every feature to facilitate the player's control of the instrument.

It will be well worth the while of any person to visit the Aeolian Department of Kohler & Chase, where one may see this organ and where demonstrations upon it are almost hourly made.

A Night in Frisco's Bohemia

We met them on Mission street, four of them, and they constituted as different types of men as could be found on the whole globe—or in San Francisco. The artist, short, dark, muscular, with the mixture of his Indian and Mexican blood showing in every excited jerky gesture, in every gleam of his black eyes, every hair of the black masses that covered his head, and fell over his eyes; the musician, tall, lank, light-haired dreamy, slow in movement and speech, living apparently in a little world of his own creation, (one of the characteristics of La Boheme's admirers, by the way,) not given to as much flow of language as the others, perhaps because he felt that his fingers spoke more eloquently than his tongue; the singer, medium height, self-centered, voluble, with restless black eyes, hail-fellow-well-met, taking a vivid interest in all around him, as if he had just stepped from some other planet onto this; and lastly, the blase, once-society man, a pretty little fellow, very blonde, with a dear little moustache, blue-eyed, pale skin, lackadaisical, who only needed the settings of a well-furnished drawing room, a tea-table and several women dawdling around, to enable one to discover for what purpose in life he was made.

These were bohemians—the real thing—the only “truly” bohemians I had ever met (and ever wish to meet again.) I looked upon them with great interest, not unmixed with awe, for I had heard of many strange things that had happened in the “Latin Quarter.”

When we reached “Carville,” where our host had a domicile on the sands (in the shape of two cars, with the platform between fixed up as the entrance hall), I wondered how on earth the musician (who was six feet if an inch, could ever get in. He doubled up, however, somewhat like a jack knife, and swooped in after the rest. Two women friends, who were to have made their appearance, failed to materialize, but had left their pasteboards under the door, (shades of Bohemia, real calling cards!) so it was a case of four men and two girls.

Once in, I sat down as much as possible, for fear my head would come in contact with the roof (I was quite sure that these cars in their halcyon days had jogged along Geary street) and with great hilarity and laughter we watched the society man (evidently used to chafing dishes) get supper. I discovered that the idea that all bohemians are dirty is a great mistake. Far from it. Some of them are even particular as to the putting back of things in their right places, at least, so our host was. What if there were not enough forks to go around, and the cups had apparently suffered from a visit by Alice's “Mad Hatter?” everything was clean, and the little supper we ate last sat down to, excellent.

But how we laughed! The ride out had made me frightfully hungry, and finding that laughing and eating at the same time didn't go, in my case, I gave up to the former, and suffered in consequence.

In the intervals of sobriety, the foolish customs of society were discussed, the hedged-in, narrow minded people who believe in ‘conventionality and Mrs. Grundy, who hamper themselves with the “protection” of forms and ceremonies, and thereby confess their own weaknesses. “Chaperons are an insult!” cried the singer, “Society? Bah! Conventionality? Bah! bah! Mrs. Grundy? Bah, bah, bah!”

And then the poor thread-bare “Rubaiyat” was hauled forth, lauded to the skies, and quoted profusely, especially the lines:

“A book of verses underneath the bough,

A loaf of bread, a jug of wine, and thou
Singing beside me in the wilderness—

Ah, wilderness were paradise enow.”

The wilderness of sand out-side, the loaves of bread scattered around the table, and the jugs of “Dago Red” in evidence, certainly coincided with the verse. Poor “Rubaiyat,” to what sordid interpretations are you descended!

Suddenly a wild exclamation from our host, who had darted to the little platform at one end of the car (a sort of Juliet's balcony, except that the presence of empty tin cans beneath rather spoiled the aspect of things), and stood looking over the sand hills to where the moon, placid, translucent as a lake of light, rose up behind them in its ever-recurring dignity, that the passing of centuries has never marred. The boom of surf came to our ears, the sands (glistening and white under the moonlight), stretched before us, solitary and lonely as the desert of Egypt. There were no signs of habitation, from where we stood, to sound a discord. It was a picture of loneliness and desolation; the sea of sand, with its wind-tide, but so still and gleaming now that the moon seemed to cast its reflection in it, the faded blue of the sky, with an amber veil thrown over it, and the stillness that can only be felt in a vast, unbroken stretch of space.

Our host flung out both arms: “Oh, the reechness of it!” he at last succeeded in exclaiming, while the singer patted his back as one would a choking baby, and the musician cried: “Go it, old fellow.”

“Never mind you, I have paint him one day!”

After this outburst we dove into the kitchen again and our host came down from his heights of enthusiasm and devoted himself to the prosaic task of washing the dishes while we wiped them.

“Oh, yes,” he said presently, in answer to a remark of mine, waving the dish-mop around the room, “I have entertain quite a many out here. Jack Lonedon (he pronounced it with the long “o”) and Gelett Burgess, both very—what you say?—chums, one time. Gelett very funny fellow. Lonedon more quiet, yes?”

I found the long musician and myself wandering ahead of the others down to the beach, plodding over loose sand, that fell into our shoes with irritating regularity, and made walking rather difficult. He confided to me that he was writing a symphony which would be a “great thing,” and insinuated modestly that it would probably take the town by storm.

“The commonplace people of the world, people with no ambition or talent, are the only happy ones,” he said, musingly. They can live merely in the present, as a cat does, lapping a saucer of milk. We who have aspirations, longings for higher things, isolate ourselves by these very feelings. Do you ever feel really close to any one? Aren't you often very lonely, even in a crowd?”

I confessed that there were times when I was, but said that I thought imagination could prove to be a great happiness to any one. “We can create our own world, and therefore our pleasures.”

“Yes,” broke in my companion, “and then the absurdity when people tell us that we have too much imagination! How could we? There is no limit to invention (most people will admit that); then how can there be any limit to imagination, which is the beginning? It is an impossibility to imagine impossible things. Our thoughts of to-day are the facts of to-morrow."

I gave a little sigh of ecstasy. At last I had found my element! The strata I had delved for, for years! These were people to know and talk to. Life with them would be vitalized, not a dreary endurance.

After racing on the beach, walking rail fences, and acting like college boys out on a lark generally, we caught the last car for town, and I thought, not being of the initiated, for home. But not so with the rest.

"Just a quiet little time at Roddy's studio," and so we left the cars at Montgomery street, and walked in the direction of the "Latin Quarter," the men singing songs, and we women vainly protesting. And such songs! Not really naughty, you know, yet not exactly what one would sing to one's grandmama!

How our footsteps echoed along the empty halls of the deserted building when the portals of Roddy's studio was reached! The men struck matches as we progressed that flared up and went out, leaving it darker than ever. How sleepy I was getting! And just a little bored? "They are just like the rest of men," I reflected as I groped along, "never know when they have enough!"

At last we stumbled into the studio, some lamps were lighted, and I looked around. Was Roddy a cartoonist? A caricaturist? Were those pictures painted in earnest, or just for fun? Did Roddy actually take himself seriously, or expect others to? Or was I too critical? I must be; for one of the paintings was pointed out to me as having taken the gold medal at the Paris Exposition. "So true to life!" Well, perhaps. But there are some things "true to life" that are very hideous.

Presently the singer collared the musician (literally) and threw him onto the piano stool. "Play," he ordered, and his victim obeyed. Even his attitude struck me as funny. He drooped his body over the instrument, curled his long legs around the legs of his seat, and picked at the keys like a bird searching for crumbs.

This was only a musical parody, surely? Or had my usually good eyes and ears deceived me for the evening? Why, that was an awful discord! But then, there are certainly plenty of discords in life.

And then, at last, the singer burst into song. And such singing! Ye gods. It nearly raised the skylight from the roof of the studio, and rattled the glasses on the table. It was the sort of singing that issues from the dives off Pine street;—blatant, discordant, merely a loud noise, and nothing more. Did he think we were all deaf? His frenzied notes rose higher and stronger. And I had heard that he sang in all the best churches.

Perhaps the "Dago red" was responsible for all this. Nothing rang true. I felt as if I were in a queer dream. How long were we going to stay here? Why didn't some one make a move to leave? I looked around.

The artist was leaning back in his chair, his eyes fixed on the ceiling. As I stared, the wine glass in his listless hand tipped over, and the wine dribbled onto some of the sketches he had been showing me. My rather neglected ex-society man was placidly mixing drinks at a small table, with rather unsteady hands. Would I, just then, have trusted him with a Sevres cup and saucer? I think not. The room suddenly became hateful to me.

"Yesterday, this day's madness did prepare,
To-morrow's sorrow, silence, or despair.
Drink, for you know not whence you came, nor why, Drink, for you know not how you go, or where."

Omar was very well in theory, but somehow, put into practice, with no chaperon over there in the corner—

But now tell me, you of the untrammelled lives; you despisers of laws and conventions that help to suppress the brute nature that is in more or less degree in all of us; you laughers at the petty little forms and ceremonies of "society," really now, aren't the grapes a little sour, after all?

They left us at my friend's hotel in the wee, sma' hours, after kissing our hands, and sweeping their hats in low bows, in laughing mockery of the formalities they scorned.

The Summer Outfit of the Summer Girl

By Lady Algy

Let foolish maidens waste their tears
 On satin, silks and laces,
 Oppress their hearts with useless fears,
 And spoil their pretty faces.
 I know a trick worth two of that,
 While summer suns are glowing—
 A muslin gown, a shady hat,
 Some tennis and some rowing.

And those that fret their souls away
 O'er wrinkles and o'er speckles,
 Could be so jolly and so gay,
 With half a dozen freckles.
 A bare brown arm to work an oar,
 A wide straw hat above her,
 A girl may roam the whole world o'er,
 And never lack a lover.

The summer girl is in her element these days tying up the rag-tags and bo-bends of her campaigning outfit. There are always so many folderols necessary to insure a sartorial summer success. Parasols, stocks, belts, and the dozen accessories that count for so much in the ultimate fitness of things must be attended to. Shoes are always an important item, and this season will see the buoyant caravan of summer girls particularly well shod. Mrs. William K. Vanderbilt, Jr. had a half dozen girls visiting her the other day, and the subject of summer footgear came up. "White suede for afternoon and white canvas for morning is the Newport edict," said Mrs. Willie, "but I for one do not intend to follow it." Marrying into the Vanderbilt family has not sand-papered the independence which always characterized "Birdie" Fair. "I don't think white shoes make the foot look pretty, especially if one happens to have a pedal attachment that requires a fair-sized boot," she added. Mrs. Vanderbilt laughingly refused to divulge the size of hers, but she brought out a dozen pairs of her new summer shoes for the girls to leak admiration over. There were the regulation Oxfords and low shoes built on the lines of sandals with strappings to the ankles; there were high shoes of every cut that a fashionable shoe designer could invent. Each pair was in some shade of yellow, from the faintest champagne to the deepest tone in a Beauty of Glazenwood rose. The ubiquitous tan color so frequently seen was studiously avoided. Mrs. Vanderbilt has a penchant for yellow gloves, which she wears a great deal with elbow sleeve summer gowns, and she has gloves made to match each pair of yellow shoes.

A taffeta shirt waist is one of the ten commandments of the season. Of a truth, these gowns have been elaborated out of all resemblance to the original shirt waist simplicity, save that the skirts are still cut round length, which makes the street sweepers work over hours nowadays. Ethel Hager has a blue silk taffeta that reduces her fifty pounds, so cunningly is it contrived. Shirring, without which a frock would scarcely appear modern, is used, but it is applied as only an artist could design it. The various shades of blue are used for this trimming, and the skirt shows the sun plaiting that is so popular. One of the Jolliffe girls has a blue silk gown that is very fetching. Ruffles are the striking motif of this dress, and they give it a very light and summery effect. The ruffles are made of corn flower blue chiffon edged with white Valenciennes. The sleeves are composed of ruffles to the elbow, and the back as well as the front of the bloused bodice show the same attractive trimming.

Florence Bailey, who is to be one of the June brides, is busy shopping these days. One of her prettiest gowns for morning wear or train jaunts, is a loose weave material in the gunmetal shades. The short jacket permits a dainty shirtwaist to make its appearance. Miss Bailey has one of the prettiest "baby" hats I have seen—it is a shell pink affair with a brim decoration of tiny pink buds and exquisite ribbon.

The most stunning summer inspirations showed themselves at the Kirk marriage, celebrated at the Carolan place. The women all wanted to put their best ruffles forward to show the Chicago contingent that we are not behind the mode. One of the most effective gowns was worn by Celia Tobin, who is as exquisitely fastidious in matters of dress as Agnes Tobin is bizarre. Miss Celia's gown typified spring with its winsome girlishness. The dress was made of white net completely covered with lace ruffles that graduated from the deep ruffle at the hem to tiny ones that reached almost to the waist. A high blue satin girde gave the only touch of color to the gown.

The people Menlo Parkwards are planning to give a great many al fresco luncheons this summer, and the new white linen gowns are the proper thing for these affairs. Mrs. McNear and Mrs. Will Taylor have two of the smartest linen gowns that will be seen on the green sward. I hear that Mrs. Taylor designed the embroidery for hers, and very exquisitely the work is accomplished. These linen gowns unlike their sisters of last year show lace insertions as well as hand embroidery.

Parasols are no longer confined to the country. Every fine day in the city brings out a lively company of sunshades, most of them in vivid coloring—red and green heading the list. A great many parasols are made to match the silk shirt waist suits. Mrs. Gus Taylor has a pretty checked silk one to match the striking gown she is wearing so much now.

—You'll never regret a visit to Zinkand's, which is the best of San Francisco's after-the-theatre resorts. It serves the most tempting dishes, the best liquors, inspiring music, and is patronized by the smart set.

The Successful Policeman

The officer sings:

If you want to be successful,
 In the San Francisco police,
 Why, the thing is just as easy as they make it.
 There is nothing that's distressful
 Or the least upset to ease,
 It is simply, if you see an object, take it.
 Take all you can and hold it—
 Don't give anything away.
 Steal a little every moment—
 It will mount up in a day;
 Steal and pocket all you collar,
 But be careful whom you fleece,
 For they estimate the dollar
 In the San Francisco police.

If you want to get promotion
 In the San Francisco police,
 Find a grocery store, and slyly supervise it.
 If the grocer makes commotion
 And the coin will not release,
 Why, you take a bag of tools and burglarize it.
 And if you find a woman
 Who is wandering in the night,
 Just you watch her very closely,
 And don't let her out of sight,
 Take all she has upon her,
 Every single dollar piece,
 And you'll find you're high in honor
 With the San Francisco police.

GOOD TIME FOR CAMPERS.

Cottage Colonies Well Pleas'd.

Effective May 17th. The North Shore will not only improve its suburban electric service, but it will run additional steam trains to Cazadero and intermediate points. The new trains to Camp Taylor, Point Reyes, etc., will be particularly gratifying to the cottagers and campers. Under the new card the Cazadero trains will leave at 7:45 a. m. and 3:15 p. m. For Point Reyes, Tocaloma, Camp Taylor, Lagunitas, etc., trains depart at 7:45 a. m., 3:15 p. m., 5:15 p. m., with additional trains on Sunday at 9:15 a. m. and 7:15 p. m. Summer residents can therefore leave here at 3:15 or 5:15 p. m. daily (except Sunday 7:15 p. m.) and arrive here daily (except Sunday 11:05 a. m.) at 8:15 a. m., in time for work. This schedule will popularize Lagunitas and Paper Mill Creeks for campers and cottagers.

The mesh of the ordinary linen is woven so closely that one of the advantages of the material is considerably diminished if not obliterated. It was because of the necessity of free circulation that the Linen Mesh was designed by Doctor Deimel. When he discarded woolen garments next the skin it was because he had made the discovery that wool gathered the moisture of the body in the filaments of the material, finally condensing in tiny drops. This, when placed next the body, would be re-absorbed by the pores. The Doctor had been a sufferer from blood poisoning and was supposed incurable. He noticed that a linen towel exposed to the same conditions as wool did not offer any obstruction to the exhalations from a spring where he was bathing. It was from this time his cure began, and he experimented with linen mesh until the now perfect garment is offered an appreciative public. Dr. Deimel has opened a store in San Francisco at 111 Montgomery street.

The Fable of the Ass Counting the Cost

The Guileless Ass, he of the Extended Extremities, of the Inherited Purse, the Depleted Sack, and the Society Eye; otherwise "THE YELLOW PEST," is now counting the Cost. He bought a job-lot of Dolls wherewith to play the Game of Higher Politics, and believed they were Real Live Things of Flesh and Blood, and now he is Sad, for he has found they are Stuffed with Saw-Dust. He bought them for Millions in Ducats, and they are scarce worth a Rag-Time Ditty. He thought his Followers were interested in his Ambitions for the Presidency, and he is sorry because he finds they are only bent on finding how Deep is his Barrel. He will continue the Agony in St. Louis, but it is only the Expiring Throb of an Imbecile Ambition. Moral: Borrowed Brains are Borrowed Capital. "Don't lynch the negro," says Louisiana's new Governor. They don't in Texas; they merely make a kerosene torch of him.

A Chicago High School principal has come out strong for phonetic spelling. "We shud luv to watch him tri it awn the war nuz."

A "positive antidote" for rattlesnake bites is announced. What's the matter with the good old remedy that is used for filling pocket flasks?

If any literary person should write a romance about the present city administration he might call it "The Schmitz Family Robbing Some."

The young woman who has succeeded in training butterflies will confer a boon on her sex if she will teach caterpillars to be good.

If a delegate and a half costs Hearst a dollar and a half for a minute and a half, what will be the price of a Presidential nomination?

Mayor Schmitz boasts that he used to sell newspapers. This may or may not be true, but it is certain that he has "bought" at least one.

Russia's soldiers are to be provided with bullet-proof breast plates. What they need is bullet-proof bustles.

High buildings cause small heads in London, it is said. Nobody needs a tape measure to learn the cranial consequences of "high balls."

That British peeress who married her young coachman has committed the unpardonable sin. If it had been her chauffeur she might in time be forgiven.

New York clergymen are speculating on why more men do not go to church, but they have not yet thought to ask what men do on Saturday night.

A distinguished alienist gives it as his sworn opinion that "Elijah" Dowie is afflicted with paranoia. Late news from Australia indicates that this is something which rotten eggs won't cure.

A guild of good women at the East is trying to find out what is the ideal condition of domestic service. From the walking delegate of the Servant Girls' Union we learn the help is willing to grant the lady of the house one night off a week, and the use of the parlor and piano every other Friday.

That thrifty statesman has crawled into the empty Hearst barrel and pulled the bung hole after him.

Think of telling the truth about Hearst at Santa Cruz and the Young Women's Christian Association in convention only five miles away?

"Hysterical joint" is an ailment attributed by doctors to the imagination, and yet everybody knows that the "crazy bone" is a poignant reality.

One gets a pearl out of an oyster, or a diamond out of a lobster, but Texas doctors have pried a two-carat brilliant out of the alimentary apparatus of a thief.

Why should a small boy about to engage in crime spend a dime for a blood-and-thunder novel, as long as none of Mr. Hearst's journals sells for more than a nickel?

E. Berry Wall, with 285 pairs of trousers, never worries about his nether garments bagging at the knees. There is another and excellent reason why he never had and never will have brain fever.

No, it was not a powder mill explosion that caused the loud noise from the direction of Santa Cruz; it was merely the Democrats of California breaking into Hearst's barrel.

Chicago has wrapped her head in a wet towel and is trying to figure out by the differential calculus how to give her small boys all the Fourth of July fireworks they want without overworking the Coroner and the hospitals.

An Oakland newspaper chuckles over its discovery of a San Francisco boy seventeen years old who can neither read nor write. The State is providing free board and lodging for an Oaklander or two who wrote too well.

The letter "S" is a hoodoo to William Randolph Hearst. Note the strange coincidence: "Sassafras Sisters, Sausalito, Scandal, and Santa Cruz. These are the 'S's' that are public. The private ones are Silence, Sedition, Slime and Seduction. Hearst should avoid the letter "S" and the letter "T," because it is a close neighbor. "T" stands for Tarpey.

We sincerely hope for the good of the burgh across the bay that the Santa Fe celebration has forever laid the "Knockers' Club." It is an astonishing fact that Oakland is the only city of its size and pretension in the United States that does not possess a large public park and people's playground. Every time a public spirited body of citizens brings forward the subject of bonds for a public park, up springs some volunteer who calls out in stentorian tones: "Who'll keep the bridge with me?" and in his hand he has a hundred-pound hammer.

RED-HANDED UNION METHODS.

The kind of thuggery that proclaims a bad cause in the hands of bad men is revealed almost daily in the strike of the Stablemen's Union. This division of organized labor is not large or important, but it is making such a red record for activity and lawlessness as to raise the suspicion that other and more powerful forces are using it in a desperate fight against the "open shop" policy. The stable-owners have stood together manfully in their determination to resist the arrogant demands that none but unionists shall be employed. Police interest in the controversy seems to extend only to the arresting of non-union employees and special watchmen for carrying concealed weapons and to refusing concealed weapon permits to stable-owners who are compelled to defend themselves. On the owners' side the fight is a defensive one, being confined to the protection and feeding of their non-union hands, whom they are forced to keep night and day in the barns. On the strikers' side it is an affair of cowardly threats and still more cowardly acts of violence. The "flying squadron" is maiming and bruising, the "wrecking crew" is breaking heads and crippling hands, the "education committee" is clubbing and strangling. The police are blind to them, and police court justice winks its unbandaged eye at them.

Now these are not the tactics of a few hundred discontented dung-shovelers. This is a little war over a big principle, and on the union side of it are plainly seen at work the same brutality and defiance of law that made of the teamsters' strike so ugly a chapter in the history of our industrialism, the same underground burrowing of influence that made the police courts at that time places of punishment for strike-breakers and of vindication for strikers caught with non-union blood on their hands. It is to be hoped that the business men of the city will awake soon to this return in the stablemen's strike of that condition which so aroused public sentiment when the teamsters were rioting by day and murdering by night. It is to be hoped that they will get in behind the stable owners and help them to do to the Stablemen's union what the Employers' Association did to the teamsters.

One of the gravest features of this strike is the attitude of the police, the police courts and the police commission. Last week a man carrying food to non-union men besieged in an open shop stable was assailed by pickets and had three of them arrested. One who had a pistol was held by Judge Cabaniss—mark this name—and the others were released, the court holding that one of them, a ruffian called "Kid" Egan, who had thrown away a two-foot section of lead pipe just before the police laid hands on him, was blameless. Within three days this same "Kid" Egan was out with the "wrecking crew" again, bending back the fingers of a non-union stableman until they were dislocated, and caving in his head. A day later Police Judge Fritz was fining a non-union stableman $50 for carrying a pistol, and on Tuesday night the Police Commissioners were denying concealed weapon permits to stable-owners because they could not prove that they were actually and presently in peril of their lives at the hands of the union pickets.

If we are to believe anything that issues from the blackguardedly "Mike" Coffey, head of the union hackmen, the Citizens' Alliance is standing solid behind the stable-owners in their fight for the "open shop" principle. Coffey, who is the tool and agent of Hearst and the Examiner when there is need of dirty work among the unions, and is at all times a brutal bully and a loud-mouthed advocate of violence, uses Hearst's paper to damn the Alliance for importing the "open shop" idea and for standing in with the stable-owners. This is a strong tribute to the Citizens' organization, and strong testimony to show the need for concerted action on the part of decent citizens who detest tyranny and thuggery.

VERTICAL HANDWRITING DISCONTINUED.

It is not often that a fair-minded journal can find anything to commend in a municipal administration such as this—not so often that an opportunity may be neglected. The present Board of Education has distinguished itself in an era of mismanagement by doing, for once, the right thing at the right time. For wiping out the abomination of "vertical writing," as it did last week, the School Board has the thanks of the community, and incidentally of the News Letter, which was the first to point out the evil and to urge that the remedy be speedily applied. For this it should and shall have a measure of forgiveness of its trespasses.

The "vertical writing" sin was one that cannot, however, be soon forgotten, since too many of the present generation and of the generation to follow show and must continue to show, its consequences. It will be half a dozen years at least before the copy-books and blackboards of our public schools begin to give evidence of the return to a normal method of writing instruction, and it will be a good many years after that before the last traces of the false and foolish "vertical" system have been displaced.

It is to be hoped and expected that out of all this pother those in charge of public instruction will have learned a salutary lesson, and that another time they will hesitate long before they tamper with any of the fundamentals of education. The lesson has been an expensive one, and the learning of it painful to many others than those directly concerned. One such ought to be enough.

THE VICTORIOUS "BARREL."

"Booze and Boodle" is writ large across the face of Hearst's endorsement by the Democratic party of California. His candidate for the chairmanship of the Santa Cruz Convention was defeated on Monday by a majority of 22. On Tuesday night his sack-handlers and whip-crackers jammed through by a majority of 19 a resolution providing for an instructed delegation—365 to 346 the vote stood. Meanwhile there had been more than twenty-four hours of the dirtiest work ever done in a California convention, and before the vote was taken Hearst had been denounced as false to the principles and the candidates of his party, a self-seeking nonentity, man without political standing or political morals.

The endorsement is about as valuable and as valid as a check stamped "no funds." With it goes a statement in terms sufficiently precise telling what it cost and who got the price. But even on those conditions Hearst simply had to have it. When his barrel-openers found that there was a strong opposition to him they begged and pleaded, declaring on the floor of the convention that not to instruct for Hearst would be to rob him of any chance for the nomination. That argument cut no figure in the preliminary struggle for the chairmanship. From talk the Hearst managers turned to more business-like methods of conviction, and between the adjournment of Monday and the vote which came Tuesday night there was a good deal doing in the saloons and back rooms of Santa Cruz. The pretty little city by the sea has never seen so much money afloat at one time or so much whiskey in active circulation. The sackhandlers did their utmost, but all they could accomplish for Hearst was the "pulling down" of 21 men—practically all of them from San Francisco and Los Angeles. Even without the plain evidence of bargain and sale, the fact that the changes of heart all occurred in the urban delegations, would of itself tell the story to men skilled in politics.

The slaying of Hearst, a process in which he sustained such a political ripping up as has befallen no other Californian seeking a nomination, was merely political. It did not go into the nastiness of his private life, and touched but lightly upon his poverty in all that goes to qualify a man for the high office of President, nor did it deal with his monumental vanity, or the indecency of his methods. The best that could be said of and for him by his hired orators was that he was a young man with much money—inherited money—and several newspapers—good Lord! What newspapers!—and that he was a Native Son.

It is a soiled garment that California has given Hearst to wear when he goes to St. Louis—a garment spangled with dollar-marks and stained with cheap whiskey. It is too short by some hundred of votes to hide his inadequate legs, and through the rents of it the Democrats of the United States, in convention assembled, will be able to see the leprous skin of him and the unhealed wounds of the branding iron that stamped him publicly a traitor.

A POOR SHOWING FOR DEMOCRACY.

At the present writing, nearly one-half of the delegates to the Democratic National Convention have been chosen. Of the instructed delegation, Judge Parker of New York has a greater number than the other candidates combined, Hearst being second choice.

No greater mistake could be made than is involved in the assumption that the instruction arithmetic is a reliable barometer. The dividing line at St. Louis will be drawn between conservatives and radicals. It is being drawn clearly now. The conservatives chosen outnumber the radicals by four or five to one, so that nothing could be more misleading than the supposition that the record as to instruction represents the real proportions. Ten States have declared for sanity, Kansas splitting, so that it will fall between the two stools. The figures for radicalism are 64; for conservatism 288. They are given here as the result of careful computation, subject to some qualification, as such estimates must be in the nature of things. They may, however, be accepted as fairly representing the strength of the opposing elements. In the electoral college of this year 476 votes will be cast. To vindicate his claim upon a certificate of election the winner must receive 239 votes. It is accepted as a sort of axiom that, in order to have a chance of winning the Democratic candidate must carry all of the Southern States. This would furnish him with 167 votes, sending him in search of 72.

As to the proposition that the electoral college vote of New York, New Jersey, Connecticut and Indiana are essential to success there is no dispute. Also, the South must necessarily furnish by far the larger part of the Democratic candidate's electoral college stock in trade. Well, New York, New Jersey and Connecticut have declared for conservatism. Rhode Island, South Dakota, New Mexico, California, Nevada and Iowa are extremely radical in declaring for Hearst. As a territory, New Mexico has no voice in the college. It may, therefore, be eliminated from the reckoning as far as the election is concerned.

Having but three votes, Nevada is insignificant as a factor. This is almost equally true of Rhode Island, which has but four votes and which will certainly go Republican. The other two States, South Dakota and Iowa, will also go Republican. McKinley carried Iowa by nearly a hundred thousand majority in 1900, and his victory in South Dakota was almost as sweeping, when the total number of votes cast is taken into account. The sources of the Hearst strength have, therefore, little to gain by analysis. It comes from States which the Democratic party can have little or no hope of carrying this year. On the other hand, the Parker movement is finding its development in the States to which the party must look and upon which it must depend for support at the polls. This is, or should be, sufficient to establish its claim at St. Louis. The Hearst, or radical movement, displays some vitality elsewhere and not much of it at that. There is a sense in which it is an investment pure and simple. Assuredly it represents the expenditure of a large sum of money. There is on one side what may be called spontaneous generation. There is on the other side that which has come to be well understood, and which is usually dismissed without description.

"SUFFER LITTLE CHILDREN."

The cruel opposition to the blind broom makers of California by the unions that have boycotted the product coming from the State Home is by far the worst thing that has ever been brought up against that numerous villainy which parades under the name of unionism. First they deny their country's flag, then they dive in murder, next they rob the blind. Citizens of California, when you are buying brooms specify that they shall be made by the blind. Their product cannot possibly harm the broom makers of California. There are only seventy of these blind workers. Speaking to a Chinaman, a broom-maker, he said: "I am surprised; you call yourselves civilized—you call yourselves Christians. In my country we are taught reverence for the aged and helpless, and such a thing as you have done, in this matter of the blind, could not possibly occur in China. Apart from the inhumanity of it, we are too sensible to take such a step. An action like this will bring a curse down on the unions and on the community that tolerates their action."

WHEN THE BEAD IS ON THE RYE.

It is reported as one of the facts connected with the Hearst convention that one of the interior delegations sang "What Shall the Harvest Be" all the way on the train into Santa Cruz. On the return trip they intoned "I to the Hearst will lift mine eyes from whence has come mine aid," and "Yes, we have gathered by the river," etc. From another part of the car came a refrain that sounded something like "Jasper seas and golden sands." One back country editor is said to have mysteriously telegraphed funds for the lifting of a heavy mortgage on his home, and two impecunious gentlemen from San Francisco have already paid up some outlawed debts. Hearst is doing golden penance for the sins of a misguided and an immoral adolescence.

The San Francisco Chronicle in a recent issue has an able editorial on the "National Irrigation Association." It seems the Secretary of that delectable institution has taken exception to the editorial reference to the association as a "fake" institution. The Chronicle, coldly and dispassionately, explains why the appellation is proper when applied to this association. The explanation is thorough and convincing.

PRIZE-FIGHTERS AS CRIMINALS.

Another candidate for the gallows has graduated from the prize-ring. The detectives of Wells, Fargo & Co. say his name is George Gates, that he was one of the men that held up the train at Copley, Shasta County, last March, and killed O'Neill, the messenger, and that, with his brother and another companion, he is now hiding in the fastnesses of Shasta, Modoc or Southern Oregon. Gates is only twenty-seven years old; his parents are highly respectable people, who have lived for years in Alameda, where the young man was well known. He was a student at an engineering school, but devoted more time to the prize-ring than to his studies. He fought a prize-fight at the Reliance Club in Oakland, and was defeated. About two years ago he left his home, and since then his family has heard nothing from him. The police say that since his defeat in the prize ring young Gates has been robbing stages, stores, electric cars, saloons and railroad trains. That he is a desperate man is shown by the fact that two deaths are laid at his door. The train robbery last March was his second crime of this sort. In November, 1902, it is charged, he, with others, robbed a train in Colorado. On this occasion one of the desperadoes was killed.

The career of this young man again demonstrates the terrible results directly following the prevalence of prize-fighting in this city and in Alameda County. Only three weeks ago we commented on the conviction of prize-fighter Hanlon's brother on a charge of burglary. Now comes the Gates case. Gates had a good home; he was sent to a private school; he was given many advantages, but in the glamor of the prize ring, and among the evil-minded associates who rely for a livelihood upon their abilities as bruisers, he soon acquired a distaste for honest toil, fell into evil ways, became a highwayman, and is now a fugitive from justice, with a price on his head. His present position is an effect of which the prize ring was the cause. The proponents of "athletic" clubs profess to see no connection between a desire to develop muscle and criminal inclinations. There is no such connection; nor is there any connection between the possession of a rifle and a desire to commit murder. The iniquity is in the prize ring atmosphere; in the low breed of men who promote the prize-fighting clubs; in the depraved moral standards of the followers of the game; in the recognition given them by city officials; in the promotion of the idea that it is not necessary to work, so long as one may have sufficient strength or skill to batter another's face. In this city, more than any other in the country, the prize ring has been the scene of rank frauds upon the public. That fact is so generally admitted that it needs no argument. Again, in this city, more than any other in the country, the prize ring is a recruiting station for all sorts of criminals. Reference to the police records amply proves this assertion. The prize fighters and their managers have more influence with the Supervisors than any improvement club in San Francisco. The plain truth is, that for the sake of a few votes in the Tenderloin, the Supervisors are fostering a nest of criminals, who, like Gates, will turn loose upon the country as soon as dissipation has defeated them in the ring. Is it not about time that the people should be awakened to the evil? There are other boys, like Gates, who are even now entering upon a career of crime, commencing at the prize ring. It is certainly worth while to try to save them.

THE MAN WHO SPITS.

This is a respectful and earnest petition suggested by women petitioners (who have written the News Letter) to His Honor the Mayor, Mr. Ruef and the Board of Health, that the ordinance restricting expectoration in public places be enforced. The warm summer winds are on, and the dried sputa, with its germs of tuberculosis is being blown hither and yon, infecting the just and the unjust alike, and nothing is being done by the Mayor, Mr. Ruef or the Board of Health.

Last week a very estimable old lady slipped in a lot of expectoration on Market street, and is lying ill with a contused hip and a serious internal difficulty as a result. If this case lasts much longer or terminates fatally, there is promised a damage suit against the city. Surely the very refined and ultra sensitive souls we have mentioned can have no objection to enforcing the law regarding expectoration. The enforcement works a hardship on no one. It prevents harm, conduces to good health and introduces many of the Mayor's supporters to decency.

"MOTHER" JONES.

Paris has had an experience in Louise Michel, the petroleuse," which will take a century to efface. The United States is a large country, but Colorado was not large enough to hold one of the Michel stripe of woman. "Mother Jones" has come to San Francisco. This woman belongs to the female agitators and murderers of the "Terror." She should be closely watched, not by the local police, but by the National Secret Service. She knows no country and no flag. She has no religion out destruction. She believes in flames and license run riot, and wherever she has been she has been an influence for evil. Under a soft voice she hides the claws of a tiger, and under the form of a woman the objection to all restraint and law. California is not large enough for this woman, and there are only two places in the State where she would be entirely welcome—San Quentin and Folsom.

Oh, Lord! This is ridiculous! Another woman across the bay has caught another robber and actually lectured the poor brute before she let him go. Married women and maids are alike afflicted with the thief-catching disease. It is so much safer, too, for the thief to let himself be caught and run his risks than to take chances with a woman flushed with triumph over his capture.

The Lady of the Chafing Dish

By Lady Algy

In the good old summer time the way to a man's heart frequently lies via a chafing dish supper. The girl who can concoct a tempting feed to trip on the heels of a ragtime evening is rated as a matrimonial piece de resistance. She may have the cook prepare the savory messes in the kitchen and merely heat it in the chafing dish, bluffing it through as her own make; she may really be a clever mixologist—there's sure to be a piping hot proposal before the chafing dish cools many times.

However, the chafing dish is a parlor trick not copyrighted by the marriageable Miss. The bachelor girl has unraveled its mysteries, for she knows in its steaming cheer lies good fellowship. She realizes that 'tis sport to shoot at quail on toast, and the bachelor girl believes in everything that is sportsmanlike.

There are a number of chafing dish experts among our society maids and matrons. Mrs. "Willie" Vanderbilt was high priestess at a chafing dish supper while she was here, and the epicures who tasted her chicken terrapin declared it would have tickled the palate of Lucullus. Mrs. Vanderbilt wrote out the recipe for a friend, which is printed here verbatim: "Have a tender chicken cut into small pieces; pour over it a cream sauce with two hard-boiled eggs cut fine; add a glass of sherry and heat through thoroughly." Mrs. Oelrichs has always been a wizard in the culinary line—she still carries a scar on one hand that was gained in honorable service over the range when the Fair family lived on Pine street. Miss Tessie suddenly took it into her head to broil the chops for luncheon, and a chop that was "awfully English, don't you know," spluttered all over her hand. Mrs. Oelrichs can "poulette" oysters in a chafing dish in a fashion to make a chef sit up and take notice. The receipt which she uses has a "Don't" in capital letters. Don't let the oysters boil. They should be heated just the safe side of the boiling point and then add butter the size of an egg, into which one tablespoon of flour has been rubbed; one cup of rich cream, the lightly-beaten yolks of two eggs, and seasoning to taste.

Mrs. Tompkins, Ethel Keeney who was, was an expert candyologist, and could out-Gruenhagen Maskey when the spirit moved her and a chafing dish was handy. She recently sent to a friend here this bonafide receipt for Maillard's famous chocolate caramels dear to every one with a sweet tooth. Boil for about five minutes one cup of molasses and two cups of sugar; add one cup of milk, into which has been dissolved one-half cup of unsweetened chocolate; add a lump of butter the size of a large walnut, and when the mixture is about the right consistency, flavor with two teaspoons of vanilla extract. The caramels can be tested in water like all other candy.

The summer that Ethel Hager had a bungalow at Monterey, the chafing dish was put through some pretty paces. Miss Hager knows the savory art backwards, and between herself and friends the chafing dish yielded up some mighty tempting mid-night suppers. One of the favorite dishes during that summer was crab a la creole, which is prepared in the following manner: Have the creole end of the dish prepared in the kitchen beforehand, as it is not conveniently within the limitations of the chafing dish. For this sauce, brown in butter two fresh or one-half cup of canned tomatoes, chives, a dash of paprika, a sprinkle of lemon juice, and a bit of minced parsley. The minced crab is put in the chafing dish, the creole sauce poured over it, and when steaming hot it is spread on buttered toast.

The Bruguere boys all know the high signs and pass words of the chafing dish cult. Eggs are their favorite night feed, and they can play the egg stunt with all sorts of variations. Louis Bruguere is famous among the Newport cottagers for the cheese omelet which he presides over. The omelet is prepared by mixing two slices of grated bread with half a cup of milk and four table-spoons of grated cheese. When the eggs are beaten to a froth the whole mixture is poured into the chafing dish, tossed over, browned, and the chef gets ready for the next, for the guests always cry "more."

Coffee in the chafing dish is sometimes grounds for fractured friendships. Under the most favorable circumstances coffee is frequently an uncertain venture, and in a chafing dish it is more apt to be a failure. Mrs. Sam Buckbee, who has unraveled all the kinks in coffee making, says the only way to make it successfully in a chafing dish is to let the water come to a boil and then pour it over the grounds, which have been put into another receptacle. The beverage is then poured back into the chafing dish and allowed to boil again. Too many people put the coffee into the boiling water instead of pouring the water on the grounds.

Miss Ella O'Connor, who was on intimate terms with the chafing dish, was particularly happy in the preparation of curried lobster. Brown one teaspoonful of finely minced onion, add two teaspoonfuls of curry powder, one pint weak soup stock and dash of salt. Boil together for five minutes. Put in pint of lobster and serve when heated.

Mrs. Worthington Ames will no doubt punctuate the summer evenings at her new bungalow with her famous chafing dish suppers. Here is one of her favorite receipts:

Stewed Soft Clams.—Trim rough parts from one-half-dozen large, soft clams. Put one teaspoonful of butter in chafing dish, and when quite hot, add one-half pint of boiled milk, one spoonful of cracker dust, a dash of salt and cayenne pepper. Simmer three minutes.

Miss Florence Baily, who is to be one of this summer's brides, can preside most gracefully over a chafing dish. Brook trout is one of her infallible successes. Clean the fish carefully and drege with flour. Put two teaspoonfuls of butter in the chafing dish, and when hot lay in the trout and fry to a nice brown. Serve as soon as done, with sprigs of green or slices of lemon as a garniture. No salt will be required when fried in butter.

The Political Situation

The Horse and Carts may be very astute politicians, but if they are, they have shown no evidences of it by their management of their present campaign against the Honorable Gavin McNab. The avowed object of their campaign is to fight McNab, and there is no other reason for their existence. Why, then, they allowed the astute Scotchman to carry all the wards; to boss the whole State Convention; to make a perfect political Phoenix of himself, is past finding out. If they wanted to fight McNab, they should have done it at the primaries, as I have several times suggested in this correspondence. I asked one of their leaders, whose loud voice was among the leading features of the last municipal convention in this city, if the O'Brien boys were not going to put up a special fight at the Democratic primaries, and he told me they were; but it seems that in their case their foresight was better than their hindsight, and as a result, they made no fight at the primaries this month but announced that they would put off their combat until the primaries in August, when a convention to choose electors and candidates for the Legislature are to be named.

* * *

If they had made the fight two weeks ago they would have had the support of Hearst, his paper, his influence, and, above all, his money, which they certainly will not have in August, and their chances of winning would have amounted to a good deal, and at least they would have divided the San Francisco delegation instead of allowing McNab to cast it solidly for Gould for chairman, in the crucial fight of the convention.

* * *

And that leads me to ask what kind of a political manager is Tarpey? Why did he allow McNab to get all the works when he could easily have rallied his forces around the nucleus furnished by the Horse and Carts? He says now that McNab, when he was East last winter, met Hearst and pledged himself to stand by the editor in his contest for President. McNab says he did nothing of the kind. He says he saw Hearst at the latter's suggestion, and that Hearst spent the time they were together explaining that the roasts which the Examiner gave the San Francisco boss some years ago were like the publication of Father Yorke's attack on Maguire, and the Examiner's refusal to print Maguire's reply a mistake of the bad, foolish, unfortunate men who at the time controlled Hearst's San Francisco sheet, but whom, nevertheless, Hearst has never repudiated in public, but on the contrary has rewarded for their behavior to Maguire and McNab by electing them to Congress or placing them at the head of his papers in other cities. Evidently McNab, the Scotchman, is not so gullible as Maguire, the Irishman, or not so good-natured or forgiving, for whatever the cause, McNab came home laid low, allowed the State Central Committee to pass a froth and worthless endorsement of Hearst at its meeting a month or so ago, then quietly waited until the time came, and then with the skill of an Italian banditti, rather than like a Scotchman, he struck his political stiletto between the ribs of his old-time enemy, the latter's explanation to the contrary notwithstanding, and deftly turned it in the wound. But what was Tarpey doing all the time? He should have taken no chances; and if McNab refused to come out squarely for his man, should have endeavored with the alliance of the Horse and Carts to have defeated him at the primaries. It will do the Horse and Carts and Tarpey very little good to defeat McNab in August, a month after the St. Louis convention has adjourned, even if they can then, for be it remembered that with the added prestige of his grand victory, it is going to be no easy task to defeat him at all.

* * *

The blunder of Tarpey is all the more inexcusable that he ought to have known where McNab stood both by the position occupied by his local newspaper organ, and by the avowed hostility of Lane to Hearst. Any tyro in politics knows that Lane would never have taken the position he did if McNab had not approved of it; for even if personally he had intended to oppose Hearst, his obligations and connections with McNab are such that he would not have come out openly and fought Hearst; writing letters and publishing interviews against him; if McNab had not O. K.'d them. When all these facts are considered, and the supreme folly and shortsightedness of Tarpey in managing the campaign in this, the most important State in the Union for Hearst to carry, it is charity to say that he is one of the poorest politicians California has ever produced. Why, it is asked, was Tarpey in Oregon and Washington, States which altogether have not the delegates that California sends to St. Louis, when the primaries were being held here, and when there was so much work to be done in the State?

* * *

There are other facts which are being commented upon. For instance, people are asking why Barney Murphy, if he was really for Hearst, did not take advantage of the absence of the San Francisco delegation when the Convention was called to order Monday, to put Jeter in the chair? As one of the Jeter shouters said in seconding the ex-Lieutenant-Governor, the selection of a chairman was all important, as he could appoint the committees and could have named a committee on platform which would have given Hearst the emphatic indorsement and pledge of united support which he so much desired. Again it is asked why Budd and Maguire were not at Santa Cruz? They were supposed to be Hearst's best friends, and undoubtedly have much influence, but they were most conspicuous by their absence, and yet all the anti-Hearst forces and leaders were on hand. Barry with his Star sat right below the platform; Lane was there, too; and Dockweiler and Ed. Leake and Ben Maddox, and in fact every one who was a pronounced anti-Hearst man; but the editor's friends were confined almost entirely to his paid advocates, and the regular employees of his paper.

* * *

Lane, when he said that the resolution offered by the majority of the committee on platform recommending Hearst, but not endorsing him, had extended the hand of conciliation to the Hearst faction, a hand which they in their folly had rejected, summed up the whole situation, and Tarpey would have shown himself wise if he had risen as Lane sat down and had then and there accepted the majority resolution. But Tarpey was conspicuous by nothing so much as by his poor generalship. In this connection I must not forget to call attention to his display of anger with the Alamedans who refused to follow his dictation and voted for Gould for chairman. He informed them that they must not come near his headquarters any more, and could no longer smoke Hearst's cigars or drink his whiskey. The roasting some of them gave him showed that then and there he drove them permanently into the anti-Hearst campaign. In striking contrast with the Tarpey policy on that occasion, McNab smiled as blandly on the six or eight San Francisco delegates who flew his coop as on the 160 who remained faithful. He probably will cut their political throats if they ever come up for office again, but he will do it quietly and pleasantly. To sum it all up, McNab is the boss of the Democratic party in this State; and I shall be very much surprised if the Horse and Carts accomplish much in their efforts to down him next August. If I were a Democrat and wanted to ride on the ban I wagon in this town, I would get up close to McNab and try to get my knees under his lap-robe.

The second municipal victory of the Hays brothers at San Jose, is probably the end of the Mackenzie regime in that town, for an organization like MacKenzie's cannot survive two disastrous campaigns. Of course, there will be opposition to the Hayeses in the future, and some day they will be defeated.

The success of the Hayeses, of course, makes them political factors of importance in the State, and it is by no means impossible that one of them may be a candidate for the Senate next winter. They can, of course, dictate the Legislative nominations from Santa Clara, and pledge them, except hold-over Senator Shortridge, for themselves. The defeat of the Mackenzieites also means that Lou O'Neal has no chance to go back to the State Senate this year; and that Louis Montgomery might as well retire from the nomination for Congress. In fact, they are in a position to play the bosses to perfection, and no doubt they will. I have been asked where Jim Rea gets off in the combination. I do not know, but as he has publicly declared that he does not like Spooks, I presume he will now be given ample time to attend to his electric railroad and real estate business. His elimination and that of Mackenzie from Santa Clara politics illustrates very strikingly that "a house divided against itself shall fall." When Rea and Mackenzie pulled together they were invincible, but they quarreled, and look at the result.

The Republicans at Sacramento did, of course, what everybody knew they would do; and while they had plenty of oratory, it lacked the fire and enthusiasm of the Santa Cruz variety. The delegates at large would show that Harrison Gray Otis is not a political factor of much importance in this State, as he was forced to witness the triumph in Judge McKinley of a bitter enemy. It shows, too, that John D. Spreckels is admitted back in the fold again, which means that Burns is absolutely eliminated from State politics, and it means that Abe Ruef is on top in the State on the Republican side, just as Gavin McNab is on the Democratic.

Summing up the result of the two conventions, it may be truthfully said that the power of the daily press does not amount to much in California, and that of all the professions that of editor—or at least of newspaper proprietors—is least likely to help a man politically. The only San Francisco newspaper owner who seems able to get anything for himself is the one who confessedly has nothing to do with the editorial management of his paper.

TOWN CRIER

Oh, splendid is the graduate,
He wears a new claw-hammer,
And happy is the graduate,
Who hears the cheering clamor;
He feels he is an orator,
A statesman, born and great,
And his chest swells as he mutters:
"Man is master of his fate."

And weary is the graduate,
With pick and shovel toiling,
For halcyon days have wobbled past
And life is nought but moiling;
His back is bowed, his legs are weak,
His chest does not inflate,
He knows he has a master,
And he calls that master, "Fate."

The whole question of employers' liability in case of accident to employee is in a state of confusion. The old law which barred absolutely any recovery where the accident was due to negligence of a fellow employee has been modified somewhat lately, while the responsibility of the employer for safety of machinery and appliances has been restricted somewhat. A local case has recently come up in which the plaintiff claims that he would not have been injured had he been informed of the nature of the machinery, and that there was danger of his clothing being caught in a bolt, which in reality occurred and caused his injuries. This raises a very pretty question, and should lead to an important decision. In the case of the Rio the decision will have a curious effect upon the employment of the Chinese crews. It is not conceivable at present that the crews will be discharged, and there will be a pretty piece of work in teaching the Mongolians to speak English. I should like to hear a Chinese coolie delivering himself in English learned from a Scotch mate.

A Berkeley upholsterer has just published an astronomical work entitled "How to Know the Starry Heavens; An Invitation to the Study of Suns and Worlds." It would be easy to be satirical and to make cheap jokes about telescope chairs and such, but as a matter of fact the thing does not strike me that way. I am so surprised at a man modestly following his occupation and yet pursuing his hobby without any wish to make money or position out of it, that I cannot avoid what may easily be the impertinence of a few words of commendation. There is a sanity about the performance which is a little foreign to us. It is to be hoped that our upholsterer astronomer will keep it up, but let him remember that the chief interest of the story lies in the fact that he is an upholsterer.

The "Cap and Bells" Club was founded after all. I fancied that the name might be too much for it, but no! it lives and justifies its existence by making a fool of itself to begin with. It is taking up the study of Shakespeare, the French language and psychics. There is a mixture for you. Poor Shakespeare will not long stay in the race, and I fear the French language will be beaten in the first round of the linguistic encounter. But psychics! Ah, there is something that will last, something broad enough and wide enough and mysterious enough to hold the attention and bring such delightful, big-eyed, long-haired, white-handed things in trousers to discuss it. Ladies of the Cap and Bells, my health to your club! "Long live Psychics."

"Chivalry in the Legal Profession" was one of the subjects upon which a graduating pupil addressed an admiring and perspiring throng at the recent commencement exercises. It is an inspiring subject, and should have lent wings to poetic imagination as chivalry has always done. It is due to Sir Walter Scott, more than any one else, that the mass of people have been so slow in learning that the chivalry of the Middle Ages was simply an agreement among the aristocracy to leave one another's women alone. Other women did not count. It is merely chivalrous enough from the lawyer's standpoint to leave one another's clients alone. Unfortunately, however, this code of ethics is too high for the local bar, and runners are employed by many firms, while backbiting is part of the general stock in trade. If this point of view were explained at length it would make interesting reading, and profitable withal.

The disappearance of young girls is of too frequent occurrence in this city, and some explanation should be made by the police authorities. A healthy young woman is not an easy subject to dispose of, and unless she is too willing, should be able to make any attempt at abduction very difficult, if not impossible. The fact is, and there is no use in blinking at it, that many of our young girls are not so unsophisticated as we fondly imagine, and that there is a sort of (one would say subterranean, but that the upper floors of the French restaurants are the usual route) connection between many of them and a section of vicious society. The pure girl is safe enough as a rule, so long as she keeps the track; the other sort is too wide awake to run much risk, but the girl who is half and half, a nice girl with occasional lapses, is deceived some time or other. Here is the explanation of some of the erratic movements of our girls. Events prove this solution applies in the Edith Williams case.

John McNaught must have a sense of humor sufficiently great to allow him to make fun of such an august body as the Starr King Fraternity; or he must have overlooked his hand. He states that this is a thinking age, distinguished by "real, virile thinking power." Is this so? It is a sensational age, swayed more and more by high sounding twaddle. If Mr. McNaught really fancies that the age is one of thought, let him publish the "Call" for one week according to that idea and he will find out. He has not found out yet because he has never tried it. The "Call" or any other paper as an organ for thinking people would be an innovation in local journalism which it would be hard to imagine. With the "Call" thoughtful and the Examiner truthful, we should be so near the millennium that we should not need to read papers at all.

The presentation of a bronze medal for personal bravery, awarded to a police officer the other day calls attention to the benefit of providing some mark for such acts as would receive a more general recognition. An order of merit would be a fine incentive to personal endeavor, and a stimulus to those altruistic actions which help to gild our general sordidness. I suppose, however, it is too much to hope for. Some politician would get his work in, and before we knew where we were the medals would be distributed wholesale to the Fire Department and the Teamsters' Union. Democracy is doubtless a very fine thing, but it plays the very deuce with anything like distinction.

To educate the population of this city is a large undertaking, and can only be done properly by specialists in their different lines. A new departure in our educational system has been started by the San Francisco Gas and Electric Company, 415 Post street, with the opening of their Information Bureau, where full instructions for the use of gas for all purposes are given. The demonstration rooms are located in the basement in connection with the gas stove department, where all kinds of gas appliances may be seen in actual operation. A new stairway of solid oak leads from the office to this department, which will be thrown open to the public early during the coming week. Much valuable information may be obtained by paying a visit to the new department.

LIBRARY TABLE

Ruler of Kings. Harper & Brothers has published "Rulers of Kings," by Gertrude Atherton, the popular California author. The story is based upon the power of great wealth in the hands of a man who has been brought up as a democrat. The author first shows the effect of an experimental education on a boy whose father is the richest man in the world, and needless to add an American. The father's theory is to bring the boy up with the idea that he is almost penniless, to make him earn his way through college, to keep him in absolute ignorance of his position, and when he has proved himself a man, to reveal to him that he will eventually inherit some $400,000,000. The boy's sister, on the other hand, is educated at the Austrian court, being the constant companion and only friend of the Emperor's daughter. The author is not satisfied to have written an historical novel of the past; she selects her theme from the events which are making history, and even goes beyond; anticipating the power of American wealth, which makes the rich man a ruler of kings. She contrasts New World wealth with Old World royalty; she touches upon the agitated question of capital and labor; she describes the rivalry between the Archduchess of Austria and the Emperor of Germany for the favor of the Hungarian people. She hints that her hero, representing American wealth, in conjunction with the German Emperor, will become the greatest powers of the world, and finally marries the former to the Archduchess. It is a daring theme, developed with the greatest diplomacy; original in conception, and designed to make the reader stop to think.

Harper & Bros., Publishers. Price, $1.50.

"The Panorama of Sleep."

This comprises sixteen symbolic dreams vividly described, exactly as dreamed by the author, and entirely authentic.

These dreams express a very high order of symbolism through which the mind is taught by the soul and enabled to see and understand the mysteries of spiritual life as it may be experienced here and now. In these days of high pressure and strenuousness, when the reading public satiate themselves with amusing novels with questions of human character, or with backward glances into the preceding century, a little book like "The Panorama of Sleep" comes into notice not only as a novelty, out as an awakener of soul and purpose. The dreams were all the author's, and confident that they were sent for some purpose, have been written out in allegorical form and given to the public.

The rapidly-growing popular interest in Mental Healing will bring "First Lessons in the New Thought" into quick appreciation. Probably in its method it is the simplest, the least technical treatise yet issued for the setting forth of the great truth which it considers. The book should be welcomed by hosts of people who are feeling their way into New Thought, and who are looking for a plain statement of what it means and of how its benefits are to be utilized.

James H. West Co., Publishers, Boston.

"Little Gardens," just published by D. Appleton & Co., is in plenty of time to give much useful information on the subject of seeds, planting and gardening in general. The book should be a good seller in the country, and also in suburban towns, where garden lots are small. The author, Charles K. Skinner, even encourages utilizing every available inch of ground in the big cities; no space being too small for a little garden.

A CURE FOR CARBOLIC POISONING.

An antidote has been found for carbolic acid poisoning, and in view of the fact that San Francisco suffers from the curse of poisoning by carbolic acid and the gas route, it is of interest to the people to know that a Mr. Allen, a Dublin veterinary surgeon, discovered that ordinary turpentine is an antidote to carbolic acid. On Saturday, a well-known chemical expert in Dublin tested the efficacy of the antidote on a dog. A dose of carbolic acid was first administered, and when all the ordinary symptoms of carbolic poisoning had been developed, oil of turpentine was applied, and the dog recovered within a short time. A curious thing about the discovery is that it was due more or less to an accident. Mr. Allen had some horses in his establishment which were suffering from carbolic poisoning, and he asked for oil to be applied as an antidote. It was only when the effects were found to be so unexpectedly successful that it was discovered that it was turpentine that had been administered. A few days after a blacksmith who was unconscious from the effects of carbolic poisoning was treated similarly, with satisfactory results. It now remains for some genius to discover a means to curtail the mortality caused by carbon monoxide as made by our benevolent gas corporation.

SOCIETY

Fling the books and papers over,
 Summer's here again;
 Scent of roses, scent of clover,
 Clover after rain.
 All the bees that buzz around it
 —Hum the soft refrain:
 "Summer incense—we have found it—Clover after rain."

Winds the trail, rough, steep and glowing
 To the frowning pines;
 Gleams the ghostly summit, showing
 Where the snow drift shines;
 Hard the road and long the tramping,
 Glorious the gain,
 In the scent of clover, camping—
 Clover after rain.

—Roland Whittle.

Dear Bessie: The city is commencing slowly to empty for the first few weeks of summer in the country, which are, to my way of thinking, the pleasantest in California while there is still something green to be seen. But, as you know, there are always some people left in town, and therefore we who are not utterly stagnant during the dull season, generally find something to do. Most of the entertaining done of late has been for visiting strangers, and Honolulu has supplied several whom it has been a great pleasure to meet. Bernie Drown Boardman gave her first tea since her marriage last Monday for Mrs. Dillingham, who recently arrived from that paradise of the Pacific, and with whom I believe the Boardmans stayed during their recent visit to Honolulu. At Mrs. John F. Merrill's little informal tea, a few mutual friends were invited to meet Mrs. Damon of Honolulu, and her daughter May, who are here from their island home on a brief visit to Mrs. Merrill en route East. Sophie Brownell's telephone tea was given for Miss Cook of Minneapolis, and was a jolly little affair, small and informal; Eleanor Davenport's recent luncheon was for Louise Cooper, who is here on a visit from Santa Barbara—eight or ten girls, all schoolmates in the past. At Mrs. Henry Dutton's bridge party last Friday afternoon, which was for Louise Cooper, there were about a dozen players.

Mrs. Louis Monteaule's luncheon on Tuesday was a welcome to Mrs. Welty, who is here on a visit to her mother, and who as Eleanor Wood was associated with Mrs. Monteaule in much of the charitable work done by St. Luke's church people; Eleanor Warner was the motif for Mabel Donaldson's pretty luncheon on Wednesday. By the way, have you noticed what a number of charming women we have whose first names are Eleanor? There are Eleanor Davenport, Eleanor Warner, Eleanor Hume, nee Eckart, Eleanor Welty, nee Wood, Eleanor Roosevelt, nee Morrow, to say nothing of Mrs. Eleanor Martin, and how fond they all are of giving pleasure to their friends! Apropos of Mrs. Martin, it has been rather a disappointment to the swim that she did not give some kind of an elaborate entertainment in honor of Mrs. Peter during her stay; the nearest approach to it was the dinner she gave Mrs. Peter's father, Mr. Charles Oelrichs, who was here for a couple of weeks, but has now gone home to New York, taking his son Harry with him. The Columbia Theatre has just bristled with theatre parties this week to see Mansfield. Monday night they were dotted all over the house, and each of course had its supper afterwards, mostly at the Palace. We had Gertrude Wheeler's concert in Century Hall on Tuesday night; Mrs. Arthur Moore gave a bridge party on Monday afternoon—just a few lovers of the game; Mrs. Ryland Wallace had a card party on Wednesday.

The De Guigne girls gave the first out-of-town gathering this summer in the shape of a tennis party at Baywood, their grandmother, Mrs. Parrott's, home in San Mateo last Saturday afternoon, and from all I hear there will soon be a lot more, or rather I should say garden parties, given there and at Burlingame.

I had a letter from Grace the other day, who chanced to be over in Ireland during the recent royal visit there, and came in for a good deal of the festivity connected with it. Among other things, she was at the Puchestown races, which are among the great annual events in the Green Isle, and she writes enthusiastically of the beauty of the women and the pretty gowns some of them wore. But among them all she thought none shone more brightly than our own American girl, one of the daughters of the Bonynges, and now the wife of Sir John Maxwell, who was so exquisitely gowned at the dinner which preceded the ball given by the Duke of Connaught, who is commander of the forces in Ireland, and the Duchess gave in honor of King Edward and Queen Alexandra. At the races the day before Lady Maxwell wore a beautiful costume of pale gray embroidered in white, black and gray, and a large black chip hat with ostrich feathers. She says she also saw Lady Hesketh—Flora Sharon, you know—at the races. Flora is simply devoted to Ireland.

Leontine Blakeman has got the traveling bee in her bonnet, and departs with her mother for St. Louis next week, and gossip has it that they will stray farther away from home; so when are we to see again the lovely blake, as she is fondly termed by her friends?

San Rafael seems to be the chosen place for the swim this summer. I mean, of course, those who are not lucky enough to own homes of their own in the San Mateo-Burlingame district, and already there is quite a formidable list of those who will be in that pleasant vale the next few weeks. The Pomeroy's go over on the first of June, but they have their own home, as well as the Eells, the Harry Allens, and the Dibblees. Mrs. George Boardman has taken a house for the summer, as usual, and there will be found, among others, the Sam Buckbees, Ed. Schmiedells, Seward McNears, the Coffins, including Natalie, Jas. Otisses, etc. Mamie Burling Page has also gone over to San Rafael, but whether she remains there all summer depends on her health, for she has been a sad invalid part of the winter and all of the spring. Mrs. Burling is with her.

We very much miss the Henry Huntingtons, who now make Los Angeles their home, and the charming parties both Mrs. Huntington and the girls were so fond of giving. They are going East this summer and then abroad, and I have heard Egypt named as where they will spend next winter, so I fear it will be a long time till San Francisco sees them again. We heard of the Bull girls and Harriet Moffatt this week; they are having a delightful time in Italy. The Horace Hills have gone abroad; they will spend the summer in Europe and take in St. Louis on their way home.

I hear Ethel Sperry says she will come back to town in the autumn as brown as a berry, as she intends to spend the summer away up in the Sierras, fishing, bear hunting and living out-of-doors generally. Alice Sullivan goes in June to Phelan Park, where the rest of the family are already installed for the season; the Blanchard Chases also depart June 1st for Stagg's Leap; the Colliers have gone to their Clear Lake cottage for the summer; the Louis Parrotts are to be at the Vendome for several weeks after they leave Paso Robles; the Lindsley Spencers will be at San Mateo during June; Ollie Palmer and Silas have already taken up their rest at Menlo Park for the summer; Mrs. Richard Sprague and the girls go to Santa Barbara, I hear; Doctor Morton Gibbons and Mary are off for a flyer to Reno to display their recently acquired treasure, Morte, Jr., and will stay a week or so with Mrs. Sunderland. The Russ Wilsons have decided to remain in town all summer, and just make short visits in different directions; Laura McKinstry is to be another stay-at-home; she says she has had enough of gadding for a time, and will only make brief "calls" on friends in the country. Meda Houghton is expected home from the Philippines about the middle of June; she has been there on a visit to her sister. It has seemed like old times to see the Lockwoods at the Presidio; Colonel Lockwood has been in the Philippines the past two years, and Mrs. Lockwood arrived from the East last week to meet her husband, who came on the Sherman with his regiment, the 29th Infantry, on Monday last. They go to Fort Douglas. Oakland is becoming quite depopulated of its chief entertainers; the Borax Smiths have gone on their annual jaunt East, where they will remain all summer at their home on Shelter Island; the Frank Havens gave them a good-bye dinner last Sunday at their home at Piedmont. The Chabots have departed for the summer to their charming villa in Napa Valley. Ruth McNutt is home again from her visit East, and Margaret Newhall from her visit to Los Angeles and thereabouts, and is credited with saying she had the time of her life while away.

THE LOOKER-ON

The election of Dr. Scott, of Alameda, to the principalship of the Girls' High School of this city has caused considerable discussion in the school department and among people who take interest in school affairs. For months, the School Directors caucused on the selection of a successor to Mr. Brooks. It was thought for a time that Director Mark would be chosen; then R. D. Faulkner was "among those present." Mrs. Prag's name was also mentioned, and there were others. As the campaign for the place continued, it was rumored that the plum would be secured by an outsider, who was backed by President Wheeler of the University. The result has shown that the rumor was well founded, for Mr. Wheeler spoke highly of Dr. Scott. Now, without question, Dr. Scott is admirably fitted for the place; but does his election mean that, in the opinion of the School Directors there is not a man or woman among the 900 teachers of San Francisco who is fitted by nature, by education, and by experience for the principalship of the Girls' High School? Have the School Directors given the teachers notice that none of them may hope for promotion, let them work never so hard, and let their abilities be what they may? Why is it that as soon as a desirable place becomes vacant the School Directors overlook home talent and hunt far afield for what they want? Can no good come out of Nazareth?

* * *

I think the school teachers have just cause for complaint in this matter. The Directors have practically branded them as a lot of incompetents. The Directors' excuse is that not being school men themselves, they took the advice of President Wheeler of the University, who, of course, is a school man. Now I think that is just where they made their big mistake. Mr. Wheeler naturally looks to the high schools as feeders for the university, and naturally, again, he prefers as principal of a high school one who agrees with this idea. It may be presumed that Dr. Scott thinks the high school course should be nothing more than a preparatory course for the university. That is a wrong idea. A very small percentage of high school pupils ever reach the university. Their parents can scarcely afford the high school course, and the University is altogether beyond their means. The high school course should be complete, so far as it goes, and not be merely preparatory to something else at Berkeley. The few who intend going to the University should arrange to receive special instruction. The high school was never intended for their special benefit, but rather for the benefit of those youths who want more education than they can obtain in the grammar grades. I think, therefore, that the School Directors made a mistake in calling in Mr. Wheeler as counselor. They should be able to conduct the School Department without the aid of the eminent Berkeleyan. They should also remember that the people of this city are in favor of home rule, and that the charter provides that all employees of the city and county must have been residents of San Francisco for one year next preceding their appointment. Dr. Scott is not a resident of this city. He is a citizen of Alameda. By appointing him to the principalship of the Girls' High School, the School Directors have not only violated the charter, but, without any apparent cause, they have cast reflection upon the entire body of teachers in this department.

The Board of Education has made provision in its estimate of expenses for the next fiscal year for raising the salaries of school teachers from $50 to $60 a month, and for reducing the term of service at the end of which the maximum salary of $80 may be obtained from eight to six years. The friends of the public schools trust that the Finance Committee will favorably report upon this recommendation, and that the allowance asked will be made in the budget. Among all the employees of the city the school teachers receive the smallest consideration. The salaries now paid them were fixed years ago. The amount allowed might have been suitable at that time, for the city was not so large as at present by a couple of hundred thousand; the classes were smaller; rents were lower; the cost of living was less, and the salary was more commensurate with the necessities of the teachers. But the city has grown with tremendous strides; we are now not far from a half million population; the classes have doubled in size, having increased from an average of about thirty-five up to sixty; rents have gone up, and the cost of living is much greater than when the schedule of salaries was fixed. Meanwhile, the teachers, under the ever-increasing pressure of their public duties and their private needs, have had to struggle along on the same old stipend. Many of them find it next to impossible to make both ends meet; others become nervous wrecks under the strain. It is time that a generous city should recognize their worth by increasing their salaries. Even $60 a month is but a small amount for a school teacher. Judged by the standards of both public and private life it is very low. There is not a petty clerk in the City Hall, be his work ever so simple, who does not receive at least $100 a month. He has no responsibility; he drops his work when he leaves the office; no demands are made upon his nervous organization; he requires no power of initiative, of administration; he is not required to give all that is in him, physical and intellectual, to his work. Yet his pay is double that of the teacher. Why, the men who ram the paving stones in the streets are paid five dollars a day by the city. The teachers are worthy of their hire. They should send a delegation to the Supervisors to aid their own cause. Public sentiment is with them. The people are in favor of increasing their salaries. The Supervisors and the School Directors can do nothing more commendable than raising the pay of the class teachers.

If Ida Mooney's tale be true, then the Grand Jury has another opportunity of investigating the illegal and high-handed methods of the police department. This girl, who is over eighteen years old, was taken by a detective from her place of employment in a restaurant last March, and without being given opportunity to obtain any advice or assistance, was haled before the Chief of Police, or the Captain of Detectives at the City Hall. There she was confronted by a Mrs. Cardine Trotman, who had brought the girl from New Zealand, and who claimed to be her guardian.

"This girl has left my home and will not give me her earnings," said Mrs. Trotman. "I want her sent back to New Zealand."

"Very good," said the police official. Without more ado, a detective took charge of the girl, and took her forthwith to the steamer Panama, which sailed that day for New Zealand, with Ida Mooney aboard. The police simply kidnapped her, and without giving her any opportunity to communicate with her friends they shipped her out of the country. In the days of the Bastille the police of Paris disposed of people in a similar summary manner. But her friends heard of the outrage. They cabled to Honolulu. When the steamer arrived there, lawyers interceded in her behalf, and she was released. The Federal authorities then put her on a sailing vessel bound for this port, and she arrived here last Sunday. Now, the girl and her friends will find out whether she can obtain damages for her illegal deportation. Her experience is extraordinary. Years ago, boarding house runners made fortunes "shanghaiing" sailors on deep-water vessels, but it has remained for the present management of the police department to "shanghai" young girls. If the Police Commissioners have time to look into this outrageous abuse of authority, they may get some more information regarding the illegal practices of their department.

The War Department states that 370 soldiers were drowned while crossing streams in the Philippines between 1889 and 1902. That is a very remarkable record. Not since the Civil War have as many soldiers of the United States been killed in a battle as the number that have found death in the South Pacific because they could not swim. It would be an excellent idea to add swimming to the athletic exercises in which the men are trained at the Presidio. The beach within the reservation just west of Harbor View is admirably adapted for instruction in swimming. The waters of the bay are never too cold for vigorous men, and the enjoyment taken in the sport would make swimming popular with all branches of the service. In addition, the ability to swim would make the soldiers much more useful in the Philippines. The results of proper instruction would be of distinct advantage to the service.

Henry Miller is a versatile individual, and he handed out a bunch to the bumptious New York critics and audiences. It is a well-known fact everywhere except in New York that the average Gothamite, critic or layman, is the most provincial of all citizens of the great American Republic. He is self-sufficient, arrogant and possesses a finesse which is poised on a financial base.

"We have been encouraged by the unstinted approval of San Francisco and Chicago to make our appearance in New York in this old play. Your applause seems a vindication of our temerity in doing so. I am not a man with a grievance, but merely contending for the principle of fair play, but while, perhaps, I am pulling the walls down about my ears, a few bricks more or less from the press do not matter at this moment. I still hope conditions here will change, when an actor may expect sympathetic understanding of his purpose, and a serious consideration for a serious effort."

Who obey no wand but Pleasure's.—TOM MOORE. } PLEASURE'S WAND

A TRUSTY TIP ON THINGS THEATRICAL.

ORPHEUM—Vaudeville. The world's very best juggler.
COLUMBIA—Richard Mansfield in magnificent productions.
TIVOLI—"A Runaway Girl"—A very good chorus.
ALCAZAR—"Colinette"—Romantic comedy of the time of Louis XVIII.
GRAND—Melbourne MacDowell in Victorien Sardou's Masterpieces.
CENTRAL—"Down by the Sea."—A rapid fire of melodramatic action.
CHUTES—Matsuda's Royal Japanese troupe.

"Old Heidelberg" is a play of tremendous human interest and intense local color. Mr. Mansfield wins in it by the force of his simplicity and naturalness. The exactions of "Ivan the Terrible" call for an undue prominence, leading to the unthinking to adversely criticise Mr. Mansfield's ability as a manager. He has been accused of surrounding himself with men and women of mediocre ability. "Ivan the Terrible" stands alone, in the play and through the actor, the one great central figure of a weird drama. In "Old Heidelberg" is demonstrated the falsity of any saying that Mr. Mansfield is head and shoulders above any one in his company. Every part was well taken, and the "Doctor Juttner" of Mr. Leslie Kenyon might have been played by Mansfield himself, so well was it done. Mr. A. G. Andrew's "Lutz" was a finished and artistic performance, and so well did he take his part that, blase though I be, I was filled with a desire at times to kick him where it would do the most good.

Miss Conquest was a sweet and winsome "Kathy." And right here again, it cannot be said that her work is mediocre, nor can it be said that, in her particular role she did not come up to the standard set by the star. Mansfield was perfect.

The arrival of so great an actor and so versatile a gentleman is the signal for the unbottling of the adjectival fluid and fulsome panegyric. "Mansfield, greatest actor the world has ever known," cannot be truthfully asserted. He is not the greatest actor. He is simply a clever, natural and self-willed genius, whose general tendency is in the right direction. He has as an actor most of the faculties of Edwin Booth. As a manager he has a love for the minutae of detail that is a joy forever to his public. As a business man he has dignity and a proper appreciation of the value of his own personality.

During his stay he eliminates the horrid advertising programme; he does not allow the bust developer and the vacuum cap, the elastic stocking and the remedy for varicose veins to trade on the greatness and the fame of a Mansfield. That's self-respect. He might have gone just a little farther and demanded that that hideosity, the advertising curtain, refrain from projecting its ugliness on the audience throughout the length of his stay. The settings for the Mansfield plays are superb, and this is of immense assistance to the actors.

Melbourne MacDowell and Ethel Fuller have scored a success in Victorien Sardou's "The Empress Theodora." The "Andreas" of Mr. MacDowell is more than well done; it is a perfect piece of acting, and the heroic style adopted by the actor fits well the character. Robert Elliot's characterization of the part of "Justinian" is a fine one, while Ethel Fuller's "Theodora" is as good as that of Fanny Davenport. Miss Fuller really deserves more credit than the immortal Fanny, for she has not the good looks the gods gave the Davenport. She must charm with her ability alone, and she does charm. "Theodora" is an admirable play, well played, well staged and well worth seeing. It can be called a great success without stretching the truth. It should made a record run in the matter of attendance at the Grand.

At the Alcazar there is a new play called "Colinette." It has been likened to "Madame Sans Gene." It bears but a very slight resemblance to that celebrated play. Mr. Durkin, Adele Block and Mr. Maher, while thoroughly clever, play but a secondary part. Mr. Fred J. Butler takes his place as one of the greatest portrayals of character we have ever seen. His "Louis XVIII" is a wonder, and that act alone, the fourth, ought to fill the house nightly. The gouty old king, who succeeds in outwitting everybody, including himself, is a delightful and an artistic performance. Louis is before you, historically correct, with every attention paid to the most infinitesimal details, except the warts. These were forgotten. Apart from this, the picture given us at the Alcazar is an old mezzotint of the indulgent philosopher who posed for a brief period as the king of the Frenchmen. Mr. Butler has stamped himself as one of the greatest actors on the American stage. The stage setting is superb.

The music of the "Runaway Girl" at the Tivoli is good. The finale of the first act is an exceptionally beautiful burst. The choruses are splendid.

At the Orpheum, Yung Ku Kim and his side partner, Chi Suke Oke, in legerdermain, are the best duo in years on any stage, and are alone worth the price of admission. Hume, Lewis and Ross are an inflection. Midgley and Carlisle, in their skit, are hold-overs, and are positively fierce. They are, if anything, worse than last week. Madame Slapoffski delighted large audiences all the week, and this sweet little woman would make a good drawing card for weeks to come. On the whole, a good show, because you must not forget "Marcel" in the living pictures.

Ernest Hastings continues manfully struggling against the fearful odds of playing in a theatre that has lost all popularity.

The Fischer house is soon to re-open, and the initial night is sure to be a gala one. The new company is an all-star cast, and the management has spared no expense. Ben Dillon and Roy Alton are the only members of the old company retained. The new faces will include Yorke and Adams, Hebrew and German comedians, Al. Fields, than whom no better; a high-priced head-liner in vaudeville, Edwin Clark, who was with the "Chinese Honeymoon" at the Columbia, and who will be remembered as an exceptionally good actor and singer; Caroline Hull, actress and author, rated as a fine "burlesquer," will be leading lady. There will be two new spectacular dancers, the Garrity sisters, and they are expected to carry everything by storm.

• • •

E. D. Price and Frederick Belasco have just returned from a tour of the East, and the Morning Telegraph of New York says of them that "they have cornered the play market." They will give San Franciscans their first view of all the latest European and American successes. For the summer attractions, White Whittlesey will begin an engagement on June 27th, and will give us some romantic plays and dramas, among which may be numbered "Heartsease" and "The Second in Command." All hail the reign of the matinee idol and the matinee girl.

• • •

In "A Possible Case" next week the capable company will be given an opportunity to excel many of their previous efforts.

• • •

Arthur Cunningham and Teddy Webb are making friends in the "Runaway Girl" at the Tivoli. Cunningham does full justice to the music with his fine baritone voice.

• • •

Those who heard the scarcely audible guinea hen cacophonations of Mrs. Fiske must be in the seventh heaven of joy at the delightful enunciation of the ladies and gentlemen of the Mansfield company.

• • •

Mr. Mansfield will be seen on Monday evening in "Old Heidelberg"; Tuesday in "Ivan the Terrible"; Wednesday in "Beau Brummel" (for the last time); Thursday in "Old Heidelberg"; Friday in "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" (the only time); Saturday matinee in "Old Heidelberg," for the last time, and Saturday night (farewell), in "Ivan the Terrible."

• • •

Next week, Melbourne MacDowell will appear as Louis Ipanoff in Victorien Sardou's "Fedora."

For the Sunday matinee, Mr. MacDowell promises us "Gismonda," and as a finish to a highly successful engagement, financially and artistically, we will have "A Captain of Navarre."

• • •

Mrs. Leslie Carter will be with us once again, beginning June 13th, in "Du Barry." This clever woman's performance should test the seating capacity of the Grand.

• • •

Maude Adams will play but twelve night and two matinee performances during her engagement at the Columbia. She returns to San Francisco with a reputation which places her far toward the head of the list of America's greatest actresses.

The Minister of Foreign Affairs

Thibet in the World's Eye.

Events the past week have shifted a small part of the Far Eastern storm-center to Thibet, and the indications are that it will grow in importance and influence to Europe and Asia. The significance of this sudden outbreak of reckless fanaticism on the part of the Thibetans lies in the fact that it is so unjustified that the civilized world is ready to acquiesce if Great Britain now concludes to establish and maintain the jurisdiction of the London Government throughout the whole of Thibet, and give ample encouragement to European immigration and capital. Thibet would then emerge from mysticism, traditions and legendary superstition into the broad field of industrial life and commercial activity, but a lot of hard military campaigning by the British will be required before the Dalai Lama, whom Thibetans generally believe to be the incarnation of Buddha, is convinced that modern civilization has rights that even he is bound to respect, for because of his stupid superstition he has forced a condition upon Great Britain from which she cannot extricate herself other than by making Thibet at least a dependency of British India. But great as the undertaking is in the matter of acquiring more than 800,000 square miles of new territory, the political aspect of the venture is likely to become complex and far-reaching for England. Enough is already known to justify great Britain in believing that agents of Russia are the influence which moved the Dalai Lama to undertake to drive out or kill every British soldier in Thibet. Moreover, it is known that a large Russian force has appeared upon the northern boundary of Thibet, and that Russian influence and money are back of a threatened influx of Tartars to aid the Thibetans. But destiny has led Great Britain into Thibet, and being "in for it," whether she likes it or not, only the permanent occupancy of every square mile of the incarnated Buddha's country will satisfy civilization. What is confronting the British is the Dalai Lama's unorganized religious fanatics, as many blood-thirsty Tartars as Russia has money to hire to join with the Thibetans, and St. Petersburg's intrigue and secret aid in the way of arms and munitions of war for the Dalai Lama. But all that will only operate to make England the more determined to accomplish the work of redemption of Thibet from the grasp of ignorance and seclusion, which work the god of civilization and human progress has commissioned her to do. Thibet shall no longer live in the dim and uncertain past.

The situation in Manchuria.

churia is unchanged. That is to say, Japan continues to drive the Russians toward the interior, but the backward movement of the Slavs only concentrates them and shortens the route to their base of supplies, while doing exactly the reverse for the Japanese. Port Arthur is completely cut off, and is no longer a factor in Russia's movements; besides, its remoteness from the Slav's center of troops and supplies, concentration and distribution never has given it great importance, strategically speaking, except as a safe anchorage for the ships of the Russian squadron. However, it would be of great value to Japan as a base of supplies and a harbor for her warships; mostly, though, because of the railway to the present and possible future position of the Japanese army in the interior. Nevertheless, the fall of Port Arthur would undoubtedly have a very depressing effect all over Russia, and there is enough dissatisfaction already to cause much anxiety in official circles. Already the masses are protesting against present and prospective heavier taxes for the maintenance of an army in action more than 3,000 miles distant to hold territory that is not worth half the price.

The Uncertain Russian Generals report to the Czar that the Chinese are growing more belligerent, and that their aggressiveness borders close upon an actual declaration of war.

They also point out how the Japanese strategy seems to have for its aim the driving of certain of the Russian divisions of the army across the border into Chinese territory, which would be looked upon by China as an invasion by an armed force, and made the excuse for promptly declaring war. Such a trick would not impair China's position of neutrality, since the "identical note" permits China to make war upon either Russia or Japan if the zone line is crossed. It is understood that China and Japan are in collusion in the strategy to force Russia to cross the line, and the fact that Chinese irregulars have already destroyed small portions of Russia's railway line of retreat is pretty good evidence that the Russian Generals have abundant reason for being suspicious of double-dealing by the Peking Government. But before the Russians could be driven across the border, they would have to be made to sustain a defeat so severe that in their weakness they could be flanked and driven from their natural line of retreat, when it would be either surrender or cross the border. That part of Japan's strategy is still undeveloped. In fact, a great battle has not yet been fought, nor is there likely to be one until Russia is ready. The Slay could fall back fully 200 miles from his present position in force without sacrificing any strategic points, the sacrificing of which would not be amply compensated for by the disadvantage the Japanese would labor under were they to follow the retreating enemy so great a distance inland.

The situation in German South Africa. Africa has become so dangerous to German interests that the Kaiser has ordered 6,000 additional troops to the scene of trouble. But the natives are resisting the invasion and practical confiscation of their homes and their lands by foreigners bent upon robbing them, and it is just possible that several lots of 6,000 soldiers will have to go before the invaders are secure in their possessions. The natives are fully alive to the fact that they are marked for Germany's kind of assimilation, and they seem to have made up their minds to defend their homes and lands to the death, if need be.

Trouble Actual of Germany that American and Brewing. The insistence of the agrarians food products be denied a market in the empire is a milder but no less selfish and avaricious policy than their fellow agrarians in South Africa are enforcing in that country. The Sublime Emperor of Turkey is complying with the "peaceful solution" plan of the powers to his entire satisfaction. His soldiers butchered 900 Albanians during the past week as a reminder to his subjects everywhere that death is the penalty for entertaining aspirations for a better condition of existence than it pleases him to grant them. Our Christian missionaries should concentrate their energies and pity upon that unspeakable Turk, the Sultan. The rural districts can afford to wait for their salvation until the nation's center of iniquity is converted.

Speculative Trade at a Low Ebb.

The lively condition of financial affairs in this city is clearly demonstrated by the daily reports of transactions in the local stock markets. A couple of transactions in bonds and as many more in shares has been about the average showing on the Stock and Bond Exchange during a session of the Board. And then take Pine street. An ore development was recently made on the Comstock which a few years ago would have sent prices kiting away up in the hundreds. Today the stock of the mine itself in which the find was made is flat and dead at a figure whereon the dividend paid monthly is at the rate of one hundred and twenty per cent per annum. The other contingencies on paper swayed by the ebb and flow of the financial tide on the street are stale and unprofitable. The spirit of speculation is dead in the community, or, rather, it does not reach much farther as a rule than a two-bit ticket in some lottery scheme which catches the cheap crowd around town, who have strings tied to their twenties. The men who form business combines here in the hope of floating off a bond issue on the dearly beloved who bank so much a week in their stockings or in the cellar, will live to learn that they have been fools for their pains. The gas combine and others of recent report could tell a little story on this point of experience gained, if they only would.

Gold Buried in Cabbage Patches.

It is amusing, to say the least, to watch history repeating itself as the years roll by. Time passes, men pass, but the world wags cheerily along with the same old routine of human life, manners, customs, ideas and hobbies as in the days of Solomon, who after tasting its woes and pleasures to repletion, worn out with ennui, complained in the bitterness of his spirit that all was vanity and vexation of spirit. Something like a couple of decades ago the writer of this column was at it nip and tuck on the side of the hydraulic miner with the champion of the valley forces. The many warm (?) friends of the miner who appeared later on and absorbed all the honors of the situation when it opened out and a chance for personal profit or self-aggrandizement arose with an organization which took fully ten years to hatch out, were then lying close like a dog-fox with the weather-gauge of a pack in full cry. And now the younger generation along the mud flats of the Sacramento, yclept "cabbage patches," are up in arms again, with all the vim of their predecessors, bristling with defi and full of argument calculated to prove to their own minds the absurdity that it is better to grow potatoes in a tract of auriferous soil than to extract the gold first and then grow potatoes. Having mixed up in the same old discussion and the same old arguments ad nauseam, some one else can amuse themselves now bandying words on the subject. The result achieved by time, which has seen the orchardists of Oroville, the most bitter opponents of hydraulic mining, wash them down and out to recover the gold from the earth, should in itself suffice as an all-convincing argument that the miner comes first and then the farmer. This will be the fate of all plantations and agricultural lands in due course. Like Demetrius, the silver smith of old, who on the passing of the manufacture of images of the goddess Diana in his city with the advent of Christianity, essayed in behalf of his own bank account to incite the populace by raising the cry of "Great is Diana of the Ephesians," some people along the Sacramento in the same spirit are evidently working toward the same end, trying to stem a current of progressive development which no earthly power can stay. Meanwhile the hydraulic men are not asleep to the possibilities of the coming so-called river convention, which to all appearances is a cunningly devised scheme to draw the mercantile classes of this city into a factional fight. It looks uncommonly like the work of the so-called farming interests organized under the title of an "Anti-Debris Association." Foiled in their efforts to smother for good the hydraulic mining interests of the State which had given California name and fame among nations before these purveyors of green stuff had left the corn-cribs in Missouri and Iowa they now are out for the dredging men, proposing to use the organized mercantile class of San Francisco as a catspaw to pull their chestnuts out of the fire. Forewarned is forearmed, and it will be hoped that this movement will be nipped in the bud. It will make things very disagreeable all round if it is not, and start a night which would not be very desirable just at a stage when the movement is on foot to boom the interests of the State at large.

Philadelphia Roasting Tonopah Mines.

People out West who have been following the course of the North America of Philadelphia, are assigning reasons of their own for the inveterate hostility shown by that paper to the Tonopah mines. These properties can stand on their own legs, and defy the "knocker" or the buttinskys of modern journalism, and need no defenders. The field is open yet, with abundant opportunities for money making, so that the hired men of John Wannamaker can still reach for a slice of fortunes by taking a trip out West like Schwab and other millionaires on the look-out for a good thing. Lots could be said about Tonopah, but it is not necessary. It is calculated from all appearances to work out its own salvation.

The Sanduyague Steel combine, launched with such a flare of journalistic trumpets, seems to be wearing into the sere and yellow leaf at an unusually early period of its career. Somebody was persuaded for some reason to endorse some notes which were speedily discounted by some financiers, when the endorser promptly sued to recover the said paper. This provoked talk, and revived the old story of the Schwab denial of complicity in the bold financial undertaking.

The full report of President Holland, covering the operations of this system for 1903 now at hand, makes a considerably better showing than the condensed figures telegraphed at the time of the meeting. The amount written off for 1903 on account of renewals and depreciation is $247,318.47; had this amount not been deducted, the net earnings would have amounted to $994,018.52, against $850,631 for 1902, or $93,387 more.

The palatial interior of the new Italian-American Bank was graced by the presence of that Prince of Italy and of good fellows, Luigi of Savoy, and suite, upon the occasion of the opening of the doors of this most prominent financial institution. His entree was made under the escort of Dr. P. De Vecchi and P. C. Rossi, who are directors of the corporation. President Sbarboro was in happy vein, and he delivered a short speech in his usual fluent style, calling attention to the fact that the Venetians were the first to establish banking in the world and that thanks was due the Italian colony of San Francisco for the establishment of the Italian-Swiss bank, an ornament and a credit to the metropolis of the Pacific and a tribute to the thrift of the Italian population. Cashier A. E. Sbarboro was gratified by a deposit of $3,000 from the Commissary of the Italian cruiser "Liguria." This was the first transaction of a financial nature in the new quarters.

The Automobile Club of California has postponed the race meet and show scheduled for the latter part of the month. The race committee found when they presented the programme to the dealers that the latter were unable to take part either in a show or race, as they did not have a machine on hand.

Now, the event has been carried over to the latter part of September or the first part of October.

This should be a lesson to the club. Hereafter they "will catch the rabbit before they cook it."

In the meantime the Race Committee has sent out a circular asking for an expression of opinion on the advisability of holding an endurance run to Los Angeles and return.

It is suggested that the Los Angeles Club hold a similar event at the same time, beginning with the return on the Northern men, so as to make competition for half the way.

It is doubtful if the Southern men can get up an event of any kind, for the two clubs of that locality are not on friendly terms.

* * *

The annual Del Monte run and one day's racing will take place in the latter part of August without "fail," states the race committee.

It was decidedly for the best that the meet and show was postponed until later in the year, for then some of the best drivers may be induced to come to the Coast. Without them the game would be flat. It will take all the intervening time to work up a successful event.

* * *

A meeting of the Automobile Club is programmed for the end of the month, on the return of Mr. Schwerin to the city.

It will be one of the most important meetings of the year, as matters of vital importance are to be considered.

The following European records are held by the Darracq car: Out of eight possible chances in 1903 in our class, the Darracq cars captured six world's records as follows:

Kilometre, flying start—Voiturettes, Darracq first, time .35; light cars, Darracq first, time, 29 2-5.

Mile, standing start—Voiturettes, Darracq first, time, 1.21 2-5; light cars, Darracq first, time, 1.03 2-5.

Kilometre, up hill, standing start—Voiturettes, Darracq first, time, .50 4-5; light cars, Richard Braisier first, time, .50 1-5.

Kilometre, up hill, flying start—Voiturettes, Darracq first, time, .40; light cars, Bayard first, time, .38.

John D. Spreckels and daughter and party of friends took a pleasant run to San Jose last Sunday in Mr. Spreckels White touring car.

Mr. Walter Hansel, of the Stockton Automobile Company, and two friends, made a run from Stockton to Oakland in Mr. Hansel's 1902 Oldsmobile, in six hours, which included time taken for breakfast and refreshments en route. Mr. Hansel says they left Stockton at five o'clock in the morning and arrived at the Oakland pier at eleven o'clock. This is the record run from Stockton, and Mr. Hansel believes it will stand for some time to come. Mr. Hansel, while in San Francisco, placed an additional order with the Pioneer Automobile Company for eight Oldsmobile runabouts and six tonneaus. Mr. Hansel reports the automobile business in Stockton as being very lively. He made an offer of a premium of $100 each on six of the Oldsmobile tonneaus, which was refused, as the Pioneer people will not accept premiums on any of the machines handled by them.

The automobile trip from Oakland, through Hayward, Dublin and Livermore, bids fair to be one of the most popular routes out of San Francisco, as it is only fifty-three miles from Oakland, and a portion of the way among beautiful homes and through winding canyons, with no hills and a good road bed, and the trip is very enjoyable.

Among the many well-known San Francisco people who spent Saturday and Sunday at the Springs were Mr. and Mrs. A. A. Moore, Jr., and their guests Mr. and Mrs. Chesler Smith. Mr. R. Hamilton, accompanied by his wife and Miss L. Garrison, came over in their touring car. Mr. Maurice Casey, with Mrs. Casey, Miss Dillon, Mrs. Dillon, and Lieutenant Emery Winship, U. S. N., arrived in a White touring car Saturday, and Sunday took a ride out into the country. Dr. Charles E. Parent, Dr. Charles W. Cross were the guests of Mr. L. R. Mead on a trip from San Francisco in one of the Pierce Arrow touring cars. Mr. William V. Bryan, Mr. A. J. Moore and Mr. A. C. Pillsbury came over Saturday in a White, returning Sunday evening.

Mr. O. H. Greenwald of San Francisco arrived Wednesday in his touring car, intending to spend several weeks at the Springs.

The management is rushing to completion a very commodious garage in which to house the many cars now daily arriving, and they are also having made a very swell twelve-seated car to run to and from the trains.

Almost a minute has been clipped from the world's track record for automobiles since Alexander Winton established the mark of 1.47 in 1897, and since that time the record has been almost continuously to the credit of a Winton car. Mr. Winton raced his own cars until he had approached the minute mark, when he gave to Barney Oldfield the task of reducing the figure still further. Oldfield hit the minute mark last August at Columbus with the little Bullet, and before the season has ended, he has succeeded in getting below 55 seconds.

Mr. L. P. Lowe, whose car was recently so badly damaged in a collision, has just purchased a White touring car. The purchase was made last Saturday night, and Mr. Lowe took advantage of the next day to make a long run to San Jose. He is highly pleased with his touring car. His choice was a machine painted blue, which is out of the ordinary run of stock colors. Mr. Lowe is a member of the Board of Governors of the California Automobile Club, and one of the most popular automobilists in the city.

Mr. L. D. Esty of Soquel, Santa Cruz County, has just purchased a White touring car. He was out for a long run in it through the Park and Presidio Sunday, and expects to take it down to Santa Cruz in a few days. Mr. Teichner of the White Company will go down with him, and an interesting run and some fast time is a foregone conclusion.

A visit to the shop of Andrew Keenan and Blasauf during the week found these popular repair men very busy. Two foreign cars of French make were undergoing repairs, one quite extensive; also a number of the best American cars were undergoing repairs. The machine shop end of the place acquired a fine Gould and Eberhardt shaper and a speed lathe, and Mr. Andrews informed us that a 14-inch engine lathe would soon be in operation. They are building a 25-ton hydraulic press, also, to accommodate their work.

Several new Winton touring cars have been added to the Pioneer Automobile Co.'s renting department, which is in charge of the Scott-Blakeslee Company. These gentlemen have more than doubled their business during the last thirty days, and will use no other machines but the Winton touring cars. This is a feature with them, and persons wishing to hire carriages are sure that they will receive good service and nothing but Wintons in renting from the Scott-Blakeslee Co.

Among the owners of Winton Touring Cars that were out the first of the week were:

Colonel H. T. Lally made a trip around the Bay. Mr. Jack Wilson and party of friends were seen driving on Sunday.

Mr. Frederick Warde and son were out driving through the Park and Presidio.

Mr. W. J. Cornell and party of friends visited San Mateo.

Mr. R. J. Mier and party of friends were seen out in Mr. Mier's new Winton touring car.

Mr. O. M. Greenwald recently made a trip to Byron Hot Springs in his White Touring Car. Mr. Greenwald has only owned his machine a couple of weeks, but has already taken several long trips in it.

Mr. F. A. Lathe of the Pioneer Automobile Company, has been spending the last two weeks in Fresno, getting the Fresno Automobile Company started with the Stevens-Duryea, for which machine they have just been appointed agents. Mr. Lathe writes that prospects for business in Fresno this year are much brighter than last season. There were in the neighborhood of from 75 to 80 automobiles sold in that territory last year.

Among those who used their White touring cars around the city last Sunday were Mr. L. D. Esty, Mr. C. A. Madill, Mr. A. W. Wilson, Mr. A. B. Hammond, Mr. D. J. Hill, and Mr. C. A. Hawkins.

The Pioneer Automobile Company received by express on Friday last their sample Oldsmobile tonneau. President E. P. Brinegar says that since the arrival of this machine both himself and the entire selling force have been working until midnight showing the machine to out-of-town agents and customers who have placed orders with deposits on this machine. After a thorough examination of the machine, there is but one opinion. It is this: "The greatest machine ever shown on the market for anywhere near the price."

Mr. W. F. Hunt and family made a trip through the Park and Presidio on Sunday in Mr. Hunt's new Oldsmobile light tonneau touring car.

The B. F. Goodrich Company, makers of the Goodrich tires, has issued an interesting pamphlet entitled "Lake Michigan to the Atlantic; a Trip through the Maine Woods; a Trip into the Yosemite; Track and Straightway Road Records."

Mr. A. C. Mather, who is visiting at the Palace Hotel, has arranged with the Pioneer Automobile Company for one of their new Wintons for his use while in this city.

A carload of Stevens-Duryea machines is expected to arrive at the Pioneer Automobile Company's new garage this week, five of which are already sold.

Atlas and Manchester.

There is only one item of news on the street which is obtainable by the News Letter man, and that one item is sufficient to make the California insurance world pause and then shudder. It is the well-authenticated news that the Atlas and the Manchester are to amalgamate, buy out, or combine each with or by the other. This will be sad news to Conroy, who is manager of the Manchester, and not be glad news to Devlin, who is general agent of the Atlas. Neither of these two gentlemen need worry, however, since it is understood that the amalgamation will not disturb the agencies of the two companies.

The arrangement contemplated is a sort of amicable truce. Neither company is to lose its identity, and the combination is to keep on doing business as a semi sort of an Underwriters' Association.

The foreign companies are one by one retiring from the United States, or if not retiring, they are amalgamating, consolidating or re-insuring. The Palatine, The Thuringia, The Netherlands, The Patriotic and others too numerous to mention "have come and have went."

The Lion, The London and Provincial, The Generale, The Lancashire, The North German have each played with a corps de ballet a brief part on the stage of American fire insurance, and each has made its sudden, but not unexpected, exit.

The faster the alien companies leave us the better for the American companies, and the better insurance the American insurer will obtain.

It is a potent fact, however, that the American companies could and cannot carry the insurance offered them by American insurers; hence comes in the question as to where the protection of commerce can be obtained. The standard British companies of the standard of the Commercial Union, the London and Lancashire, The Royal are stayers, but the British companies manufactured for export only are neither here nor there, as is evidenced by the threatened amalgamation of the two companies named.

The Manchester has been afflicted with "decease" rumor before this time, and the fact that according to its own figures it decreased its gross assets, as well as its NET surplus, predisposes the proposition that it is the one to go gracefully out of business. In California or the Pacific Coast for 1903, the Manchester's loss ratio was 58.4 per cent, and that of the Atlas was 60.4 per cent.

The Atlas has shown, however, for some years a steady increase in its NET surplus, while the Manchester has in the last year lost.

Judging from the figures of both companies it is safe to say that the opinion of the News Letter is that the Manchester will be amalgamated.

The last week's issue of the News Letter in the Insurance Department has worried the inside ring more than a little. It was forcible enough, and told enough truth, to stir up the animals caged in the compact wires. Already they are gnawing at the bars and are getting day by day more anxious to get out and roam in the wild pastures of cut rates and the pleasant meadows of rebates.

The threatened war in or against the compact has developed to the measles stage.

A brokerage firm in this city has issued and mailed a circular letter to its clients asking them to bring in their policies to its (the brokers') office, and get a pro rata cancellation and re-write for three years—simply an evidence of the incompetence of the broker or the lack of management of the manager, but solely alone useful as Exhibit 1 of the fight prophesied by the News Letter.

At the recent annual election for trustees of the New York Life the following gentlemen were elected to serve and fill the vacancies occurring during 1904. Mr. Clarence H. Mackay, president of the Commercial Cable Company, was elected to succeed the late W. R. Grace, ex-Mayor of New York. The others are Thomas A. Buckner, Thomas P. Fowler, Henry C. Mortimer, William B. Plunkett, and Hiram R. Steele.

Zenno M. Host, Insurance Commissioner of Wisconsin, not content with bucking the Equitable, is now engaged in butting the Prudential. It is an evidence of the one-man power and the strongest argument that has yet been produced in favor of the need of the national supervision of insurance.

The idea or the fact that a political upstart like Host can control two companies like the Equitable and Prudential in a kind of back-yard fight like he is making, savors of an Insurance Commissioners' Trust.

That Host is weak in his contention against the companies named is evidenced by his action in instituting suits for libel against the Sentinel, Wisconsin and Daily News, asking damages in the kindergarten sum of $150,000.

The News Letter is glad to aid and abet an insurance commissioner in the lawful discharge of the duties of his office, but it condemns and contemns the actions of Host against companies of such probity as the Equitable and the Prudential.

These and such are beyond question, and the province of an insurance commissioner in any State is to protect the public against being robbed and not to rob the companies.

In California the Insurance Commissioner is quiescent. He is apparently neither. He does not seek the bubble reputation at the cannon's mouth of a summons or injunction.

He lets a whole lot of fake semi-insurance schemes run without a license, and apparently robs not.

There must be something doing. He is refusing the Mutual Reserve a license to do business in this State, and it is still doing it. Now, Mr. Insurance Commissioner, the offices of the Mutual Reserve are in the Chronicle Building—names on the windows and doors. You are fighting it one way and not another. Is it the same case of Host, Insurance Commissioner of Wisconsin, vs. the Equitable and Prudential, or in the vernacular: Is it graft?

Making Anarchists

The great trusts and the unions of the country are busy making anarchists. They are working overtime. They never ask for time-and-a-half for this labor, but cheerfully put in the time and the labor without a murmur. The trusts are rapidly making arrangements with the various labor organizations for the purpose of mulcting the balance of the community. Nationally, the great meat trust has given us an object lesson that is worth considering. The price of meat has been raised beyond the war figure, to the consumer. At the same time, the price paid the producer of beef and other hoof cattle has been lowered to such an extent that there is nothing in it. The trust catches "em comin' an' goin'." The union laborer in the stock yards and in the abattoirs is getting the highest wages he was ever paid, at the expense of the balance of the community.

A plasterer receives seven dollars a day at a trade that any bright boy could learn in six weeks. For Sunday work and overtime he receives as high as twelve dollars a day. Some time ago the News Letter made the statement that nobody but an imbecile or a millionaire would think of engaging in building, under the circumstances, and the statement still holds good.

Locally, the conditions are disastrous in the extreme. In San Francisco, as in Oakland, there exists an arrangement between the labor unions and the boss builders, and it is a successful one. It is so arranged that no one is to be admitted to the workmen's union under any condition; there are no apprentices; the contractors protect the union and the union the contractor. No independent establishment is to be tolerated, and the contracts are being kept in the hands of the few to the detriment of the entire community. The union man who has offended either the contractor or the boss builder might as well starve. A fictitious value is put upon labor, and a consequent fictitious value on the boss builders ability ensues. The real value of the labor is about $3.50 a day. Who pays the difference? Why the builder first, and after him, the tenant and householder.

The merchant's rent is increased, and the consumer at large is taxed so much per pound extra to cover the increased cost. The man who has not received an increased wage is the sufferer. It is this class which the Citizens' Alliance proposes to protect. And it will protect them if all persons who are at the mercy of the labor union will join hands.

Similar conditions obtain among the electricians. Here also is an agreement to rob the public. The unionist and the contractor get the persimmons. Who is it that suffers? Why, the great army of people that belong to neither classification. The householder, the professional man, the clerk, and the great majority that do not belong to unions or corporations. An electrician out of work is out of work, indeed; he dare not take a job, infinitesimal though it be, but that he will be blacklisted with his union and with his bosses. The public at large pays the bill.

In order to stand in with the leaders of the unions the member of such institutions as the teamster, the driver, the plasterer, the bricklayer, the hod-carrier, or of any union which demands more muscle than brains, more brawn than skill, has to be ready for all things. He is out of employment. He is not a thinker. He is readily at the beck of suggestion. What is the result? We have seen it in San Francisco in the last week. Men have been killed, others have been maimed, and some are dying as a result of a blind obedience to the suggestions, implied or otherwise, of the leaders. Joseph Egan, low-browed and illiterate, fractured a non-union workman's skull, in a scrap in a vacant lot on Lombard street. In this case, as in many others, this murderer in intent is not directly to blame. It is only to be regretted that the secretary of the union and his assistants may not be haled before one of the higher courts and sentenced to be hanged by the neck "until you are dead." The poor, ignorant and unthinking brute who goes about with a piece of gas pipe to slay or with brass knuckles to maim is not to blame. It is the leader who should suffer. It is the one who suggests murder that should hang.

* * *

In one way the victim's death may result in a general benefit to the community. The nature of the crime will bring the matter up in one of the higher courts, and thus take away from the subservient and criminal police justices the chance to again become accomplices in crime.

The Typothetae has been praised all over the land as an organization of sensible men. Chicago is no exception. The book binders are returning to work in hundreds, as the Typothetae has refused to agree to the closed shop.

* * *

The Knox Hat Works, after forty years of amicable life with its hands, in a moment of inadvertence encouraged the establishment of the union in the factory. They warmed the snake. The leaders used the union and its combine for purposes of blackmail. The factory is now run on the "open shop" basis, and has come out with a pamphlet which thoroughly exposes, under their own signatures and by their own letters, the levying of blackmail by the union leaders formerly in their employ.

They have brought suit against the Mayor and his friends, the Musicians' Union, for damages for the spread of false reports regarding the employment of a non-union band at El Campo. They ask for $500 damages. We hope they get judgment.

derstood and let every real American remember it on all occasions.

An unheard-of example of forbearance and patience in the face of deep provocation is given by the Stable and Carriage Owners' Association. Not one non-union man has been discharged since the fight now going on began.

The unions and the corporations, in many instances, need a corrective influence. That influence is supplied in the Citizens' Alliance. It is the expressed will of the great majority. That majority is to-day tired of strikes, tired of trades unionism and corporate partnerships, tired of murderers, tired of crime, and tired of paying the fiddler; it cries aloud for the abolition of all the great trusts, the greatest of all trusts, the union; it wants the Merger thieves of the Northern Securities Company punished. It cries for the establishment of law and order in San Francisco, and the punishment of the recreant police judges who officiate in our courts. It wants to bring about an era in which the middle man, the great majority, who are not unionized, who are awakening to their strength, may demand and obtain justice. It wants the meat trust brought to book. It proposes to bring these results through an association, the Citizens' Alliance, if need be, or if that institution should fail to carry out its desires, through some other and stronger agent. The partnerships between the unions and the corporations must be broken, large mergers must be prevented, and the power of the union must be curtailed. The corporation and the union is making anarchists; let the people stop it, now and forever.

It is said that because the 700 elevator constructors, now on strike in Philadelphia for increased wages and the right to go on a sympathetic strike, have been ignored, the National Board of the Elevator Construction Association is contemplating an international strike. The elevator contractors of San Francisco are victims of the same organization, and find it difficult to employ men when and how they desire. Any member of this union is expelled if he works one minute after 12 m. Saturdays, or works more than six days. The employer is injured to the extent that all work advances at the dictation of the union, contracts notwithstanding.

"Say," complained the customer, "I want to put in a kick. Remember that ton of coal I got here yesterday?" "Yes, sir," said the dealer: "what's the matter with it?" "You sold it to me as your best smokeless. I find it has a lot of broken stone in it." "Well, stone doesn't smoke, does it? What are you kicking about?"

"My dear," said Mrs. Newlywed, her face flushed with the excitement of her afternoon in the kitchen, "I want you to be perfectly frank with me now. What would you suggest to improve these doughnuts I made to-day?" "Well," replied Mr. Newlywed, lifting one with a slight effort, "I think it might be better if you made the hole bigger."

The bride and bridegroom sat side by side. "Dearest," he said, looking up into her eyes, for he was the smaller, so that he really and truly looked up and into her eyes. "Yes," love," she responded in soft, frightened mouse tones, "If I had known that tunnel was that long I would have kissed you." "Didn't you kiss me?" she asked with much surprise. "No," he replied. "Well, somebody did."

When the thermometer dropped far below zero last December, good Mrs. Rogers was much disturbed at the recollection that Huldah, the new kitchen maid, slept in an unheated room. "Huldah," she said, remembering the good old custom of her own girlhood, "it's going to be pretty cold to-night. I think you had better take a flatiron to bed with you." "Yes, ma'am," said Huldah in mild and expressionless assent. Mrs. Rogers slept soundly and free from care, secure in the belief that the maid was comfortable. In the morning she again visited the kitchen. "Well, Huldah," she asked, "how did you get along with the flatiron?" Huldah breathed a deep sigh of recollection. "Well, ma'am," she said, "I got it most warm before morning."

A man once berated his Hebrew debtor for not having included him among his preferred creditors. "But I makes you a speshul creditor," was the answer. "A special creditor! What's that?" "Vy, a speshul creditor, mine friend, knows now that he gets nothings. The preferred, he von't know that for three years. Time ist money, ain't it?"

He had studied by himself, and came up for examination to college with inadequate preparation. He approached ancient history with fear and doubt, for he had had little time to stuff himself with the history of the Caesars, according to the Youth's Companion. The paper contained a question at which the young man looked with dismay. "What can you say about Caligula?" He did not remember that Caligula was the worst of a long line of mad and bad Roman Emperors. But a witless inspiration came to him, of the sort that often saves the young and the ignorant. He wrote: "The less said about Caligula, the better." He passed.

Some years since a young St. Louisan was leaving his home for California, which was then considered the "wild and woolly West." The family had all gathered to say farewell, and not without tears. The father took the young man by the hand, and with trembling voice said: "Now, John, remember the Sabbath day, to keep it holy; and look out for rattlesnakes and be careful that nobody steals your watch."

Eddie—Aren't you sorry that you are an only child? Freddie—Oh, no; I don't mind it, but it's tough on pa. Eddie—How so? Freddie—Well, you see, I am getting too big for him to have to take me to the circus, and there aren't any younger kids in the family for him to fall back on.

At the time of a certain colored baptism the weather was very cold, and in order to immerse the candidates it was necessary to cut away the ice. It so happened that one of the female converts on being lowered into the icy water, moved about, and as the current was swift, in a moment she had slipped out of the preacher's hands and gone down stream under the ice. The preacher looked up at the bank with perfect calmness, and said: "Brethren, this sister hath departed—hand me down another."

A member of the London Stock Exchange was married a short time ago, and of course the first time he appeared on 'Change after the honeymoon he was subjected to many congratulations and much good-natured bantering. One of his friends, after congratulating him, suddenly reached over and took a long brown hair from his shoulder. "Looks bad in a married man, Ticker," he exclaimed, holding it up to the light. "Oh, that's all right," replied Ticker, smiling, "it's my wife's." "No, no, that won't do," responded the friend. "Your wife's hair is darker than that." This made Ticker a trifle angry, and he exclaimed excitedly: "I tell you it's my wife's. I fancy I know my wives' hair when I see it." "Well, you certainly ought to," said the friend, "but are you sure?" "Sure, of course I am. Why do you ask?" "Oh, I thought perhaps there might be some mistake. You see, I found it on Brown's shoulder, just before I saw you."

"Now, William," said the man of business to the office boy, "I am going out to get shaved." "Please, sir," said the boy, hesitating, "if any one calls and wants to know where you are, will I say you've gone to the barber's or down to Wall Street?"

The Little Brown Caterpillar

It was such a glorious morning in the great forest. The grand old pines, the firm, gnarled oaks, the quivering white birches and every little creeping plant and delicate wildflower hastened to pour their fragrance on the fresh, cool air. The birds darted in and out on errands of love to their hidden nests, singing for very gladness of heart. The little brown caterpillar, curled up in a round ball beneath a branching fern, awoke and stretched himself lazily. His small hairy head felt so heavy and queer and his legs were so numb! Never before had he realized that there were so many of them to drag along.

"I'm not in the least hungry," he muttered sleepily. "Maybe it's exercise I need. I'll creep across to the big pine." So he slowly crawled out from beneath the fern, but soon curled up again from sheer weariness. Now the good Forest Fairy, who kept careful watch over every little living thing in the great wood, was hovering near, and at once darted like a sunbeam through the shimmering leaves.

"Come, my sleepy one, it is time for thy lullaby," she whispered as she poised her shining wings and gently roused him. She guided him carefully across the sun-flecked path to the baby oak, under the sheltering pines. Up the slender trunk she drew him tenderly, far out upon a swaying twig, and beneath a tender leaf. Then hovering beside him, she crooned her lullaby, waving her gauzy wings in perfect unison:

"Weave, weave, in and out,
Up and down and round about;
Curl, curl, in tiny ball,
Weave around and over all.
Snug and warm, snug and warm,
Rest secure from wind and storm."

And even as the Forest Fairy began to croon, the little brown caterpillar began to weave—up and down and around about, until he was soon snugly wrapped in a soft silken blanket which swung from the protecting leaf.

The south wind swayed his cradle gently to and fro and he fell into a sweet sleep.

Beautiful sunrises flushed the secret places of the dim old forest. Sunsets a-flame with crimson and gold lighted their fires in the heart of the wood. Storms lashed the giant trees in fury, and torrents of rain flooded the mossy hollows and the by-paths of the rabbit and the squirrel. A sudden flash and the lightning cleft the big pine, as the thunder crashed through the falling branches. Still the little brown caterpillar slumbered peacefully on. All the tumult raging around him seemed but a sweet, faint echo:

"Snug and warm, snug and warm,
Rest secure from wind and storm."

But at last a morning dawned when the Forest Fairy fitted across the wood to consult the Flower Calendar. "The hour has struck!" she murmured softly, and eagerly sought the baby oak. The little brown caterpillar was already astir and restlessly stretching his cramped limbs.

"Gently, gently, my beautiful one," whispered the Forest Fairy, as she carefully loosed the silken blanket. "Do not tear thy delicate wings." Then the little creature feebly shook himself free and poised uncertainly on the swaying twig. Slowly the long, creased wings unfolded, resplendent in violet and gold, and spread themselves to the morning sun.

Then the little brown caterpillar, now a lovely butterfly, fluttered exultantly upward, and under the loving guidance of the Forest Fairy sailed away on his first zig-zag journey across the beautiful old forest.—Marion E. Pickering in Boston Brown Book.

LOVE'S QUIET.

By Charles Hanson Towne in The Reader

When all the clamor of the world,
Its noise and wild alarms
Has wrapped me pitilessly round,
And in its web my heart has bound,
I crave your sheltering arms!

When all the brazen crash of swords
The silence rends apart;
When I am steeped in toil and strife,
I crave, O great love of my life,
The stillness of your heart!

IRAM'S ROSE.

Smart Set

Where was Iram, who that one
Who has watched its garden growing?
Nishapur or Babylon
Held its radiant rose a-blowing?

Plucked he not the Sultan's flower,
Amber-eyed and red of mouth,
Made it his for one ripe hour,
Warm and spice-winged from the South?

Haply caught all life, they two,
With that rose, and tossed it madly
In the sun, where never blew,
Nay, nor died, a flower so gladly!

Laughed and tossed it in their glass,
Drank and drained it; breath to breath;
Ere the dial's shade had passed,
They had sought the shade of death.

Lived and loved an hour, where blows
Some old garden by a river;
Gone is Iram—but its rose
Breathes perfume in song forever.

THE RECKONING

By Charlotte Becker in January Smart Set

Love taught me all I knew of bliss;
Love taught me all I knew of pain—
Lured me with laughter and disdain,
Then made me captive with his kiss.

He vowed no pleasure I should miss,
Then swift he wounded me again—
Love taught me all I knew of bliss;
Love taught me all I knew of pain.

So deep we sounded grief's abyss,
My heart to beg release was fain;
Ah, would my pleading had been vain,
For now I but remember this:
Love taught me all I knew of bliss;

LOVE AND HATE.

And now it's Japan's turn to throw away a few warships.

"None but the union brave deserve the fair," is the way the line is read in St. Louis.

Isitshiyama is not the name of a Japanese battleship, but of a native African drink 50 per cent more potent than raw alcohol.

A Michigan Judge has decided that a husband has legally the right to spank his wife. The joke of this is that the Judge is a bachelor.

President Roosevelt does not smoke, but Carrie Nation's language did when she lost a $50 bet on the proposition.

While search is being made for Murphy, the missing Tammany leader, why not look into the Hearst barrel?

The collar-and-elbow method of courtship has led a young man of northern New York to sue the young lady in the case for damages on account of a broken rib.

The attention of the Health Board and of the Society for the Suppression of Vice is invited to the case of that foul old female, "Mother" Jones.

It is worthy of remark that none of the San Francisco delegates who flopped to Hearst walked home from Santa Cruz.

If it be true that a trust has got control of the world's guano supply, then what will Hearst use to hurl at those who oppose him for the Presidency?

General Funston declares that he swam the Bag-bag, but does not say why he did so instead of wading it or jumping across it.

Rev. A. P. Camphor was a candidate before the Methodist Conference for missionary bishop to Africa. He was put on the shelf, but happily there was no need for moth balls.

Colonel Watterson, habitual alliterateur and confirmed phrase-forger, pronounces the doom of the "pért paragraph." What a busy editor it is! Only a little while ago it was smiting for their sins the rich of Newport, and now it is playing prophet and professor of journalism, with no change of costume.

The good people of the Mission want the Supervisors to improve the quality of the whiskey sold in San Francisco saloons without restricting the quantity.

One of the funniest things in life is to see an unappreciated editor climb up on a speckled elephant and offer himself a vote of thanks for being so good when he might have been so bad.

A ten-year-old boy smoked his first cigarette and died. The object lesson is spoiled by the post mortem discovery that he swallowed all of it that he didn't smoke.

Police interference with a kinoscope fake, in which President Roosevelt was to have been shown in the act of being excessively polite to a negro, has made it necessary for Hearst to revise his intended appeal to the Solid South.

A distinguished journalist, Melville E. Stone, says to the club-ladies at St. Louis: "Newspapers to-day are edited for women, not for men." Frequently, however, it is a man with a muck-rake who does the editing.

Episcopalian women in Point Richmond and West Berkeley have agreed to pay fines for gossiping. They have not decided what to do with the proceeds—whether to buy Government bonds or invest in gilt-edged realty.

A Pennsylvania preacher examined over a thousand applicants before he found a wife who was not an "angel on the street and a devil in the kitchen." His name is Brownback, and it is a safe wager that some day his picture will be seen on a can.

A local preacher denounces the drama, begs his hearers to shun the theatre, and calls Shakespeare a libertine. Well, one might stay at home instead of going to the play, and amuse one's self by reading the Song of Solomon.

The yearnings of the average American for distinction are beyond expression. Politically speaking, crowns and coronets are out of the question, but socially there is not a woman who does not crave to wear one even if it be only a gilt crown at a Forsters' Festival, for which high honor ten maidens are at present competing to the detriment of the pockets of their respective swains, and the destruction of the honesty of the ballot. It is just the same game as is being played by those in higher stations, with this difference, that the male appanages of the socially ambitious in higher circles are lucky if they escape with an attenuated pocket-book, and their honor unspotted. The only reason that women want the ballot is that it is occasionally dubbed a "civic crown."

FINISH OF THE RACE TRACK GAMBLING.

When the Western Union Telegraph Company went out of the poolroom business a few days ago the race-track gambling game was severely jarred. Some observers have ventured the hope that the whole fabric of this establishment of vice and fraud would be undermined and ultimately destroyed by the telegraph company's action in crippling the poolrooms, but this, we think, is too much to be expected. While it may be more laborious and tedious and expensive, the poolrooms will get some kind of a wire service, no telegraph company daring to refuse messages by or for them. To meet the increased expense, however, the sharks who run the games will cut down the margin of possible profit to their dupes, and with the increased pressure, the poolrooms will become less attractive as places for throwing away money, and many of them will close for lack of patronage.

But the encouraging thing about the Western Union's action is that it signifies a stiffening of public sentiment against the whole infamous business of race-gambling, an awakening of the public conscience to a sense of duty toward the youth of the land, and toward those foolish peoples who learn neither through age or experience. It indicates an early movement like that which has almost driven the prize-fighter out of business. One by one the States have put up the bars, until San Francisco is almost the only city of size and importance where the plug-uglies of the prize-ring can get tempting purses for their "fake" fights. Something of the same kind is happening with regard to race-track gambling—an evil far more to be dreaded than that of pugilism. It is well within the province and powers of the State Legislatures to prohibit gambling on horse-races, either on or off the tracks, and enforcement of laws to that end would not be difficult. Watch the Legislatures, and you will see them taking such action, according as public sentiment in their respective States is swift or slow to shape itself on this subject. The movement will begin in those States whose Legislatures are not controlled by delegations from big cities, and it will proceed intermittently and spasmodically, but where race-track gambling has been made a felony, there will be an end of horse-racing, a falling-off in the list of suicides, embezzlements, divorces and illegitimate births, a return to decency in public and private living, a gain in substantial progress and prosperity. It is a matter of history that no "wide open" town, once having closed its doors to vice and corruption, has ever gone "wide open" again.

San Francisco and California will be among the last to scotch the race-gambling evil. As other communities shut them out, the "sports" and their painted women will gravitate toward the Golden Gate where there are three race-tracks easy of access. Doubtless that association for the spread of vice and crime, known as the New California Jockey Club, will take advantage of the tightening-up elsewhere and reach out greedy hands for more of the wages of sin. But ultimately this concern, too, must go to the wall, and with it all the others of its kind that flourish in California. Its owners and promoters may delay, but they cannot stop the slow march of a people toward the better things of life. However, the harpies of the race-track may regard it, they cannot fail to see in the summary action of the Western Union the sign of an early end of race-track gambling.

ITS HEAD IS IN THE SAND.

The policy of the labor union is in many respects similar to that of the ostrich. An instance in Chicago is in point. The Federation of Labor has adopted a resolution requesting members of unions affiliating with it to refuse to allow their names to appear in the City Directory. All this because the directory publishers insist on the "open shop" principle. There is a boycott on the telephone directory as well, because it is published by the same firm. It is hard to understand the style of revenge which places the participant under such limitations, and which does not in any great extent injure the directory company. All this might have been avoided if the directory publishers had made some kind of monetary consideration available to the labor bosses. We might suggest a block of stock in the concern, with a guarantee of dividends. It is so easy to obtain immunity from the canaille that it is astonishing to note the slow progress of the diplomacy first adopted in California.

Every action of the labor leaders in San Francisco and indeed in the United States, is in favor of class discrimination. It is only a question of time before the propaganda now followed by these worthy gentlemen will create just as much caste distinction as exists among the Hindu. There will be a Close Corporation of Plasterers and an Immaculate Order of Lathers, and it will be impossible for the common mortal earning less than seven dollars a day to keep up his end with this titled gentry. Already the plasterer feels it demeans him to associate with an Amalgamated Street Car Driver, while the Corrugated Order of Serving Ladies have served notice that they will no longer associate with the Female Feather Foundry Fellowship. When these several orders have attained perfection, it will be in order to create a new society to be called the Independent Order of Sane People, so as to re-establish livable conditions.

"MOTHER JONES."

The truth about "Mother Jones" needs telling, but unfortunately the News Letter cannot tell it all, since a detailed account of this amiable old lady's career would be both unprintable and unmailable. The woman is here now, resting from her labors against law and order in the disturbed mining districts of Colorado. Only one daily newspaper has noted her presence. Hearst's Examiner, which has glorified her in columns and pages during strikes and riots in other States, has not said a word about her visit to San Francisco, and did not mention the speech she made in the Alhambra Theatre. During the coal strike of a year or so ago, this same sheet depicted "Mother Jones" as "a modern Maid of Orleans," or "an angel of mercy," the "heroine of organized labor." When she comes among us it does not open its head about her.

The reason for this is obvious; if there had been any doubt about it, "Mother Jones" dispelled it as soon as she began her talk at the Alhambra. That speech proclaimed her for what she is—vulgar, vicious and ignorant, an apostle of cowardly crime, the associate by choice of thugs and ruffians, the sworn foe of personal and civic decency, the woman of all women to incite striking union men to crimes of violence. When he was lauding her and idealizing her and holding her up as a type of peerless American womanhood, Hearst knew that she was nothing of the kind, but he knew, also, that she was too far away for his lies to be brought home to him. Now, when she is in the city, he pretends not to know her, hoping that nobody here will recall how he canonized her so short a time ago.
